WAR NEWS CENSORSHIP AROUSES THE PRESS.

SECRETARY BAKER SEIZES CABLE STORIES CAUSING DELAY AND EXPENSE—REVOKES ORDER AFTER TWO DAYS.

Despite the fact that Congress refused to give Government officials the power to censor newspapers, Secretary of War Baker took it upon himself for two days this week to do it anyway. He ordered that all cable press dispatches, relating to American troops in France, addressed to newspapers and press associations be sent to the War Department in Washington, to be passed upon there and then turned over to the addressee by the Committee of Public Information.

The procedure came without warning to or permission of the press. Important dispatches were tied up in the War Department for many hours, and when they were released the newspapers and services had to pay the extra telegraphic tolls from Washington to their location.

This tie-up existed from the night of July 3 to the night of July 5, during which time the newspapers protested against the unwarranted invasion of their constitutional rights.

On the night of July 5 his order was revoked by the Secretary of War and the Committee on Public Information issued the following statement:

"The emergency having passed, the War Department states that press cables from France are again permitted to go directly to addressee without reference to Washington. These precautions, however, must continue to be observed:

"(1) Information tending directly or indirectly to disclose the number or identity of troops in the expeditionary force should not be printed.

"(2) Only names of staff officers may be used. Names of line officers, also reference to individual units, should not be printed.

"(3) Information calculated to disclose location of permanent base should not be printed.

"(4) Information designed to betray eventual position of American force on the firing line should not be printed.

"(5) All reference to returning transports must be suppressed."

THE FIRST NEWS

News of the censorship first became known through the following report issued by the Associated Press on July 4:

"Since July 3 dispatches to the Associated Press, telling of the American troops in France, have been diverted by official order from their usual channel of delivery and have been delivered first to the Secretary of War for his approval.

"There is no censorship of the press in the United States, Congress having refused to enact such a law, but newspapers and press associations have voluntarily been observing the requests of the Government.

"Heretofore news dispatches leaving France have been censored by the French officials or the American censor with General Pershing's expedition, or by arrangement with London. This, however, is the first instance in which an executive department of the United States Government has seen fit to divert dispatches from their destination and withhold them for official inspection.

"In this case no notice of the Government's intention was given, and the first intimation of the practice came when dispatches addressed to the Associated Press, New York, by its Paris correspondents, were by official order delivered to the Secretary of War in Washington, who, after inspecting the dispatches, delivered them to the Associated Press Bureau in Washington.

"Other dispatches addressed in the same way were delivered to the Secretary of War and through the Committee on Public Information delivered to the Associated Press in Washington with certain portions eliminated.

"The volume of matter diverted to Washington was very large, and no adequate provision for the examination or censorship had been made. The War Department was overwhelmed, and a consequent delay of hours in important dispatches resulted."

BAKER'S EXPLANATION.

Previous to revoking the censorship order, Secretary of War Baker said the step was necessary "for the protection of newspapers as well as the War Department and the Army." He explained:

"At present General Pershing's headquarters are not organized, so that he is not in a position to take care of dispatches bearing on troop movements, and this can only be done for the next few days by the War Department. Newspapers now have no way of making sure of the authenticity of their dispatches touching on troop movements except through the War Department, and this course is the safer for all concerned."

When Secretary Baker was asked if he possessed power to compel newspaper correspondents to send their dispatches in care of the War Department, he said:

"A Government has power to control information regarding the movement of troops, but the question of authority has not arisen and will not arise. The newspapers are co-operating splendidly with the Government."

Mr. Baker was then asked what steps the War Department would take to compel newspapers to submit dispatches from France to the War Department if one or more newspapers should disregard this form of censorship and make an issue of the right of the Government to enforce such a policy.

GOVERNMENT AUTHORITY!

"No newspaper will make such an issue," said Mr. Baker. "The question of the Government's authority will never be raised. You may say for me that the cooperation of the newspapers has been ideal and perfect, and that it will continue."

In revoking the order, the War Secretary did not acknowledge that he had no right to censor press dispatches from abroad.

The Secretary stated he assumed the responsibility for the diversion of press cables to Washington, and later it was asserted by officials that the action taken was neither unconstitutional nor illegal, but was justified by the general powers of the President to provide for the public safety and common defense. It was justified also, they said, by the broad powers given to the President in recent war legislation.

Major Frederick Palmer, official censor with General Pershing, showed the newspaper correspondents in Paris on July 4 a copy of a telegram from Ambassador Jusserand to the French War Ministry asking on behalf of Secretary of War Baker that the Ministry of War order the French censorship bureau to forward all cables relating in any way to American troops in France to the Secretary of War in Washington for censoring by General McIntyre, after which they were to be forwarded to the newspapers.

Major Palmer has installed three Americans in the French censorship bureau in Paris to handle dispatches for the United States relating to American troops. Besides, the French censors pass on all dispatches and they are transmitted by way of England, where the British censor has the right to delete any matter according to his judgment.

CONGRESS MAY INVESTIGATE.

It is known that just before the Fourth of July legislative recess murmurings of dissatisfaction had been heard over the manner in which Government press bureaus and particularly the Committee on Public Information was conducted.

Some Senators and Representatives thought that Congress was entitled to be better informed on this subject, particularly as a large amount of Government money was apparently being expended.

The action of the War Department in ordering the censoring of all press dispatches from France addressed to American newspapers probably may afford the basis of the inquiry that certain Congressmen think necessary.

Opinion is strong that the danger of information valuable to Germany reaching that country from the United States does not lie in publication in the newspapers, but in the carelessness of the Government itself.

It is believed that the German spies in America are not relying on the newspapers for the information they send to Berlin.

INSTANCES OF TIE-UP.

Two cable dispatches addressed to the New York Times by its representatives in Paris, Wythe Williams and Charles H. Grasty, were telegraphed to the War Department by the cable company in New York and examined by the Committee on Public Information before the cable company was permitted to deliver them to the Times in New York. It was said by an official of the committee that in the case of each dispatch the cable company in New York had been notified to release the dispatch within a short time after the text had reached the committee.

Up to the night of July 5 the committee had followed the practice of sending censored cable dispatches to the offices of Washington correspondents of the newspapers to which the dispatches were addressed.

The correspondent was expected to transmit the dispatch to his newspaper by telegraph at the expense of the newspaper.

In one instance the committee itself telegraphed to a newspaper a cable dispatch from France that had been diverted to Washington and sent a telegram, saying that the committee had been unable to reach the correspondent of the newspaper by telephone.

Considerable delay was apparently caused by the effort to reach the cor-

COLUMBUS PAPER IN TROUBLE.

POLITICAL FACTION TRIES TO FORCE SUSPENSION OF MONITOR—HAS NOT YET.

A resolution calling for the immediate suspension and liquidation of the business of the Columbus (Ohio) Daily Monitor was adopted by the board of directors of the Monitor Publishing Company on July 5.

Up to 8 a. m. on July 6 the paper had not quit.

The following statement was given The Fourth Estate on July 6 by Sam B. Anson, publisher of the Monitor:

"Myself and other employees on our own responsibility printed one edition of the Monitor yesterday, and unless the courts intervene today we will repeat.

"The paper is not in financial difficulties, but political interests which oppose J. S. Ralston, who controls the stock, served notice on him that unless the Monitor was immediately discontinued an effort would be made to throw his Ralston Steel Car Company into bankruptcy. It was made a condition of the ultimatum that the Monitor plant could not be sold.

"Efforts are being made today looking toward a receivership and a continuation pending a reorganization of the business. There are several interests willing to buy the paper if that course is permitted."

The Monitor was established as a daily on July 10, 1916.

LORD NORTHCLEFFE GUEST OF NATIONAL PRESS CLUB.

Lord Northcliffe addressed the members of the National Press Club, Washington, on July 4, and after describing the disadvantages and harm of the earlier censorship of the British Government, he became a censor himself. He talked for nearly an hour to the Washington newspaper correspondents and there was much of value in what he said, but at the conclusion of his address he explained that he had been talking most frankly in an effort to be of aid to America and her newspapers and requested that "nothing I have said shall be quoted."

Lord Northcliffe said he expected to be in America for several months and at some future time he would accept an invitation to return to the National Press Club and deliver a speech for publication.

After "putting the lid on" so far as the publication of his remarks was concerned, Lord Northcliffe introduced to the members of the club by President Wilcox and Edward G. Lowry. Many members and guests of the club urged him to agree to a report of his remarks, but he said that he would prefer to delay making any public statement.

Prior to his address Lord Northcliffe was entertained at dinner on the roof garden of the Press Club.

SHORTAGE OF LABOR FOR PAPER-MAKING.

For what is said to be the first time in its history, the Great Northern Paper Company has been compelled to advertise on a large scale for help. Under "Help Wanted," the Great Northern is running the following advertisement in large display in Boston Papers:

"Great Northern Paper Company requires the services of about 7,000 men for the purpose of cutting a large quantity of four-foot pulp wood on Penobscot and Kennebec waters and along lines of Bangor & Aroostook Railroad, and for the construction of about 12 miles of turnpike road.

STORY OF LANDING WITHHELD
HERE, THOUGH PRINTED IN BRITISH PAPERS.

American military authorities are making an investigation to ascertain how it happened that London papers published the news of the arrival of the United States regular troops in France before the correspondents of the American papers and the French press were allowed to chronicle the event.

There are also indications that the attention of Congress will soon be devoted to the attitude of the Government concerning the publication of news, partly because of the delay in the publication in American newspapers of accounts of the landing of General Pershing's detachments.

The Senate has been and is busy with the Food Administration bill, but it is understood that steps will soon be taken to inquire into the activities of some officials who are brought in contact with the press to ascertain to what degree they are living up to the decision of Congress in its rejection of the press censorship section of the Spy bill that the freedom of the press shall not be curtailed.

Action in the House may also be expected when that body resumes its regular sessions.

It has been stated that the French and British governments were asked by an official of the American Government to hold up the press cable dispatches to American newspapers relating to the American military forces now in Europe, even after these dispatches had been approved by the army censor attached to the headquarters of General Pershing.

In what way this desire of the Government was conveyed to the governments of France and Great Britain is not known.

American correspondents were permitted to visit the port of arrival only the day following the first arrivals. French correspondents were there the day preceding.

The American correspondents were officially informed that there would be no publication respecting the troop movement until the American cablegrams were released.

The dispatches relating to the American expeditionary forces were not filed until after the entire force had been landed and all objection to the publication of the descriptive accounts had been removed by General Pershing or some one acting under his authority.

Accounts of the landing of the American troops had been printed in London as early as Thursday last, but this did not influence the French censors in showing leniency toward some of the dispatches filed at French telegraphic offices for cabling to newspapers in the United States.

GERMAN PAPERS COMMENTED ON TROOPS
BEFORE U. S. HAD FULL NEWS.

The stupidity of the French censors or their intent to make the censorship of dispatches to American newspapers as annoying as possible in the hope of thereby obliging this Government, is accentuated by the case of the London Times, which on June 28 printed a full account of the landing of the American expedition at a French port.

London is only a day's journey from Germany, where newspapers from the Allied countries in Europe are obtained in quick order. The phase furnished by the publication in the London Times is further emphasized by the fact that the London Times is believed to have received its report of the landing of the American troops by courier.

It is to be expected that this plan will be adopted by other newspapers in the British Isles, as the censor does not have access to news obtained in this way.

The result is that American newspapers are deprived of news which is nevertheless printed within a comparatively short distance of the borders of Germany.

The attitude of the United States Government, which has been exemplified in having the French censors hold up cable dispatches dealing with matters permissible to publish, is the outgrowth in part of the publication in American newspapers of a brief press dispatch telling of the arrival of the American expeditionary force.

This dispatch had been passed by the French censor, and when it reached the United States it was sent out over the wires of the press association by which it had been received. The American Government objected to the publication of the dispatch, asserting that it was premature, and that the War Department had requested newspapers not to print anything about the arrival of the American expedition in France until the department gave its consent.

While officials here were objecting to the printing of accounts of the landing of the troops English newspapers had already published the whole story.

How soon the German Government knew of the arrival of the American force can be gathered from the fact that German newspapers containing comment on the matter had been received at The Hague before dispatches to American newspapers telling of the event were released in Paris.

Last week was recruiting week for the regular army. President Wilson set it aside in a proclamation, calling for 70,000 volunteers to fill the ranks, but beyond the President's proclamation and the work of recruiting officers there was in general throughout the country little effort made to induce young men to join the colors.

The opinion prevails that if dispatches describing the landing of American soldiers had been published before the expiration of recruiting week, instead of having been held up by the censor, young men would have been stirred to offer their services to their country in the hope of being able to join the other "Sammees" on the other side of the Atlantic, and recruiting week would not have been a failure.

The Foreign Affairs News Service sent out the following from Washington in regard to the situation:

"While Secretary of War Baker stoutly refused to make any statement respecting the propriety of the publication of information in England and France respecting the landing of American forces in Europe, Secretary of the Navy Daniels, who had previously been surprised by the publication abroad of intelligence concerning the arrival of American naval forces in European waters, asserted that some arrangement must be devised so that America will be as quickly and efficiently informed as England and France.

"One military officer asserted that it would be just as well for the Government to permit the publication of prospective troop movements as to undergo a repetition of what actually occurred, namely, the publication in England and France of the arrival of the first contingents of the American overseas expedition before all the units had arrived, thus making it possible for German submarines to be informed of the approximate location of the transports still on the water.

"No effort was made by this authority to explain the action of the War Department in clamping down the censorship upon details which had already been published in London, and which were easily accessible to Germany via both Switzerland and Holland. It was the belief of military men here that all the units of the first contingent had been landed in France, but it was impossible to obtain any explanation of the refusal of Secretary of War Baker to permit any authorized publicity concerning the movement."

NEWS OF TROOP LANDINGS.

From the New York Times.

The Secretary of War is disposed to frown upon the publication here of news about the arrival of American troops in France. His position was stated in our Washington dispatches:

"Secretary Baker holds that information regarding the arrival of American forces in France should not be published unless authorized by the War Department.

"He stated only two days ago that he would authorize the announcement of the arrival of all units as soon as it could be done safely, but made it plain that the department would not make public the arrival of any contingent so long as it believed that such publication might jeopardize the safety of other units that might not have landed."

News of the landing of our soldiers in France is of deep interest to the American people.

It has been felt that recruiting might be stimulated by its publication in American newspapers.

The Secretary, however, is evidently fearful that if American newspapers publish the news of the arrival of the first, second, or third contingent of our troops, the enemy may thereby obtain information by which it would profit in planning for attacks upon contingents not yet landed.

But all this news is published voluminously in French newspapers, 3,000 miles nearer the enemy lines, and the French censorship is very strict.

If France can prevent the news from reaching German ears, cannot the United States maintain equally efficient safeguards against disclosure?

It would seem that the vigilance of the censor should be exercised, not upon incoming cable dispatches, but upon outgoing dispatches of nobody knows what ultimate destination.

THE HERALD TO ISSUE A WAR MAGAZINE.

Under the title of "The Magazine of the War," the New York Herald will commence the publication on July 15 and continue for every Sunday thereafter, of a special Sunday magazine devoted exclusively to the war and dealing as far as possible with the activities of the American sailors and soldiers. In explaining it to THE FOURTH ESTATE, Advertising Manager K. B. Cressey said:

"This is an entirely new feature in American journalism and the Herald is the first newspaper in the United States to inaugurate such a special war magazine.

"Arrangements are being made to secure photographs showing the activities of the American Navy in European waters and the activities of the American Army on the European battle-fronts. As far as possible this magazine will feature the troops from this section of the United States.

"It will constitute a complete pictorial and textual history of the participation of the United States in the great conflict since the declaration of war on April 6, 1917. Eight pages will be devoted to pictures and eight pages to reading matter. There will be a chronological feature on the progress of the war up to the day of going to press each week.

"This is the only exclusive war section issued by any newspaper in the United States and is an added feature to the Herald's war news, already considered the best of any New York newspaper.

"The Magazine of the War will be issued as a part of the Herald as an added feature, without extra charge."

Replacing the LYNN TELEGRAM on Express Schedule

IF THE GOVERNMENT GOT CONTROL OF PAPER!

WHAT THE HEARST NEWSPAPERS AND OTHER DEEP THINKING PUBLISHERS SEE IN THE PROPOSAL.

THE FOURTH ESTATE's contention that the Government should not be given control of the distribution of news print paper—even to insure lower prices and equitable supply—is backed up by many leading publishers—notably the Hearst newspapers. For instance, the New York American says:

"The Federal Trade Commission recommends that the Government shall take control of the white paper supply, operating all paper mills, fixing prices, and distributing the product.

"If the Government did this, the supervision and control of prices and distribution would probably be confided to the Federal Trade Commission.

"That is understood to be the desire of the commission.

"It is also the desire of the publishers of some of the smaller newspapers.

"But, so far as we have seen, it is not the desire of a single strong and independent editor in the United States that the Federal Trade Commission shall have this power.

"It is not necessary to efficiency that the Government shall take over the newspapers. And it is most important to the liberties of the country and the perpetuity of this Republic that the Government shall not control the distribution of the paper on which newspapers are printed.

"The Censorship bill, which Congress rejected by such an overwhelming majority—in spite of the earnest appeals for its passage by the Administration—would have been mild and inoffensive when compared to the autocratic control a Government would have over the press and public opinion if the Government could select the particular newspaper or periodical to have paper and the ones to go without paper when there was not enough paper to go round.

"The 'rentile press,' to which Mauley so keenly and cuttingly refers, was the press which existed under conditions similarly repressive—a press so under the domination of the authorities that it had 'to crawl on its belly' to some censor to whom the power of life and death over the press was delegated, to learn from that censor what the press would be allowed to say the next day.

"The habitual attitude of the newspapers of France, under that kind of censorship fifty years ago was that of a sycophant crawling upon the ground fawning upon power. Hence the name of 'the reptile press.'

"The founders of our Government sought to make such a situation, or such a press, impossible in this country.

"They sought to prevent the control of the press because they believed from what they had seen that free speech and free discussion were essential to an enlightened public opinion.

"They knew that the most important function of the press in a republic would be to tell the people what was happening, to disclose what public officials were doing, and, if necessary, to criticize frankly and fearlessly the policies of the Government.

"For public opinion truly crystallizes only after such free discussion, and in this country the greatest moral force, the only omnipotent power, is public opinion.

"The newspapers are often an indispensable aid to the Government, as shown by the celerity with which the Universal Military Service law was passed with their assistance, the great oversubscription to the Liberty Loan obtained with their aid, and the splendid Red Cross Fund of $100,000,000 has just been achieved with their co-operation.

"Without the free, hearty, unstinted support of the press, those great objects probably could not have been attained.

"The purposes and the duties of the Government and of the press are often identical, but they are necessarily separate, generally independent, and—if the Republic is to be preserved—must at times be diametrically opposite.

"No press that is controlled by the Government can be independent, can be honest, can be able impartially or without prejudice to inform the public or to criticize or, if need be, to fight with earnest sincerity in the public interest.

"At this time above all others the press must be free to tell the truth as it sees it, to guard the liberties of the people, to prevent any unnecessary encroachment upon the rights and privileges of the people, to prevent any misuse of the very autocratic powers which it is necessary to repose in the President in order, to use the happy phrase of the joint resolution of Congress, 'that all the resources of the Government may be used to bring the war to a speedy conclusion.'

"As Mr. Hearst telegraphed the American when the Censorship bill was at the crisis of its fate in Congress:

"The Hearst papers have specifically approved making the President supreme in all political and economical activities, but these papers have as earnestly advised that the people of the United States continue to exercise their essential functions as the final court of appeal in all matters.

"The nation should not muzzle its watchdog at the time when it may need him most, left, like the careless man in the fable, who preferred to sleep rather than listen to the watchdog's warning bark, the public awake to find its priceless privileges, its popular rights, its democratic principles, abstracted or at least impaired.

"An American free press has always been the trustworthy guardian of American republican institutions. A Government-controlled press belongs to the dark and fortunately ended age of Russian feudalism.

"Let no one assume that the Hearst newspapers fail to appreciate the greatness, the wisdom, the conscientious devotion to the public interest of President Wilson.

"The dominating idea of democracy, however, is that no man is as great as the whole people, no man is as wise as the whole people, no man is as able to understand and promote the interests of the whole people as are the people themselves."

"At a time when autocratic powers are being discarded by countries all over the world, and when the shackles of a Government-controlled press are being removed even in Russia; at a time when, as the President declares, we are fighting for the liberalization and democratization of people and processes everywhere, it is incongruous, unreasonable and almost unbelievable that this Republic, which has been the example and the model for all other republics, should be tending so strongly toward autocracy, and should be seeking so persistently, through direct and indirect methods, to censor and control the organs of speech and of public opinion."

PLAN HAS NO POSSIBILITY AS A REMEDY.

The St. Paul Dispatch and Pioneer Press, which own their own news print paper mill, call the proposal of the Federal Trade Commission "an impossible print paper proposition," on the same ground as the Hearst newspapers, but go further into it from the manufacturing point of view, as follows:

"It is incredible that Congress could overlook the fallacies, in an economic sense, and the dangers, in a public consideration, of a proposition that would submit the fate of every newspaper in the land to the dictation of a Federal administration without the remotest prospect of securing the remedy which is the prime consideration.

"There is no remote possibility of a remedy in this proposition.

"It is admitted that a largely increased demand for print paper, with a reduced manufacturing capacity, has created the situation complained of.

"The only permanent remedy lies in a plan by which the producing capacity may be increased at least to the level of the demand.

"It is the acme of stupidity to suppose that a term of Government control will make the paper mill business attractive from an investor's standpoint.

"At the end of the term of Government account, will one dollar of capital have been tempted to investment in the industry? There is every reason for believing that the situation will go from bad to worse under such treatment.

"Considered economically, the trade commission's plan is as unsound as it is dangerous from a public point of view.

"No commission theory or legislative enactment can repeal the immutable principles of trade.

"No edict of law can compel the continuance of an unprofitable business or alter the relations of supply and demand."

COLLEAGUES HONOR BINNS.

Jack Binns, former wireless operator, who has been on the staff of the New York American for several years, was honored last week by his co-workers on that paper by a dinner at the New York Press Club. Mr. Binns has left for the front, as a member of the Royal Flying Corps of the British Army.

He became famous several years ago when, as wireless operator of the steamship Republic, he sent the C. Q. D. call for help following that ship's collision off the New England coast with the steamer Florida.

EX-NEWSPAPER MEN WIN FOR RED CROSS IN CINCINNATI.

When Cincinnati, which was asked to give $1,000,000 to the Red Cross War Fund, contributed $1,650,000, much praise fell to the publicity committee, composed of ex-newspaper men chosen from the "old guard."

The committee included:

Charles J. Christie, of the Fleischmann Company, once city editor of the old Commercial Gazette, chairman; Charles L. Doran, Enquirer veteran, general press secretary; Walter A. Draper, vice-president of the Cincinnati Traction Company, former Enquirer financial editor; James Albert Green, president of the Matthew Addy Company, former city editor of the Times-Star;

Ren Mulford, Jr., with the Procter & Collier Company, former baseball editor of the Enquirer; Sam Assur, attorney and director of the Union Gas & Electric Company, former Commercial Tribune reporter; Howard Saxby, editor of Saxby's Magazine, formerly of the Commercial Tribune; Scott Small of the city hall staff, formerly Times-Star court house man; Horace Potter, Enquirer; and Isaac Pichel, Commercial Tribune.

CENSORSHIP OF WAR NEWS.

respondent. In this case an afternoon newspaper was affected and every minute was precious to it.

In another instance of an afternoon newspaper, the delay caused by transmission of a dispatch from New York to the War Department was sufficient to prevent the dispatch from reaching the newspaper before the last edition went to press. The cable dispatch was delivered at night to the office of the Washington correspondent of this newspaper.

CREEL CONFERRING IN NEW YORK.

Director Creel of the Committee of Public Information presided over a meeting of the committee on the afternoon of July 5, at which Secretary Lansing, Secretary Baker and Secretary Daniels were present, and discussed with them the situation produced by resentment aroused over the War Department's censorship of press dispatches from abroad.

Mr. Creel left at night for New York to meet newspaper editors and explain the reasons for the Government's action in putting a press censorship into effect.

Mr. Creel will endeavor to obtain the cooperation of the newspaper editors in formulating a new arrangement for the censoring of press dispatches from the theater of war.

The meeting was being held at the time THE FOURTH ESTATE went to press.

During his visit to New York Mr. Creel will look into the allegations that the censorship of outgoing cables has been lax and through this laxity important information has reached Germany.

There is no charge that the naval officers in control of the outgoing cable censorship have permitted military information to reach the enemy, but it is asserted that under their instructions they are powerless to prevent the transmission of cable messages addressed to newspapers in neutral countries which misrepresent conditions in the United States, and in that way convey "comfort, if not aid," to the enemy.

A striking feature of this situation is that dispatches to American newspapers from Europe are subjected to censorship, while dispatches to newspapers in neutral European countries from the United States are permitted to go forward uncensored, although many are written in an unfriendly spirit.

WHAT NEWSPAPERS SAY.

The New York Times and the New York Sun vigorously criticize Secretary Baker's usurpation of power.

Commenting on the statement of Secretary Baker that: "The Secretary of War, by unanimous consent, is empowered to take any steps necessary for the protection of American soldiers," the Times says:

"The newspapers will not unanimously consent that their cable dispatches shall be made the subject of a larcenous procedure, diverted from their own proper destination, delayed and perhaps altogether withheld from their owners and the public."

"No harm can come to the soldiers of the United States in France, no useful information can be given to the enemy, through the publication in the newspapers of the scenes and incidents attending the reception by the French of the American soldiers who are now with General Pershing."

"Fortunately, Secretary Baker has already seen his error and revoked his illegal and obnoxious order."

The Sun expresses the wish that the power of the authorities was exerted as vigorously against traitors as against patriots in the newspaper profession.

The World, on the other hand, defends the Administration and criticizes the Times and Sun in an editorial entitled: "A Lesson to Newspapers," concluding:

"If the (censorship) provision had been enacted into law the American newspapers would not now be subjected to four distinct military censorships, two American, one French and one British."

"There would be no excuse for the exercise of such powers as the War Department was employing and may employ again. Any issue between a newspaper and the Government would be adjudicated by the courts and not by the military authority."

"A majority of the American newspapers would not have it that way, however. They were determined to smother all legislation that defined their rights in time of war and to leave themselves at the mercy of arbitrary military authority."

"The Times and the Sun are getting just what they clamored for. They are getting just what was inevitable to anybody familiar with the relations of the Government to the press in the Civil War."

"The World does not like it any better than its contemporaries do, but it long ago foresaw that this would happen unless adequate legislation was enacted."

"The American newspapers have only their own shortsightedness to blame for the difficulties and delays of an additional censorship upon army news from the front."

"But the incident may serve a wholesome purpose in finally revealing to them the extent of the Government's war powers and the manner in which those powers can be exercised if there are no legislative restrictions such as the censorship clause proposed."

"The newspapers refused to have legislative safeguards when safeguards were offered to them, and now they are struggling with the consequences of their own folly."

CHANGES IN ATHENS, GA.

William C. Gredig has resigned as managing editor of the Athens (Ga.) Daily Herald and has returned to the staff of the Atlanta Constitution.

E. W. Carroll, who has been business manager for several years, becomes publisher and general manager.

Charles E. Martin, formerly advertising manager, becomes managing editor.

Dan A. Dean, formerly city editor, has become telegraph editor, in charge of an enlarged staff.

A. J. Brookbank has been appointed foreman of the composing room.

RECORD MEN DRILLING.

The Philadelphia Record employees have organized themselves into a "home guard" company of seventy-two men. They have been drilling steadily for weeks and recently made a ten-mile hike which was finished in good shape.

FIRE IN SAN JOSE.

The editorial department of the San Jose (Cal.) Mercury-Herald, which was seriously damaged by fire on June 17, is being remodelled and the staff will soon move into its old home from temporary quarters. The loss in the fire was estimated at $20,000.

ROTARY OFFICERS.

J. H. Allison, general manager of the Nashville Tennessean-American, and Walter Johnson, publisher of the Chattanooga News, have been elected president and secretary of the newspaper section of the International Rotary Clubs.

TO TRAP SLACKERS.

Joseph Hancock, president of the Wilmington (Del.) Evening Printing Company, has been selected as a member of one of the military exemption boards in Wilmington.

BROOKLYN WRITER DEAD.

John Dillman, political reporter of the Brooklyn Daily Eagle, died in St. Anthony's Hospital, Woodhaven, N. Y., on July 4.

MAGAZINE NOTES.

Arthur De Barry has been appointed advertising manager of Golf Illustrated, New York. He has been advertising manager for the Johann Hoff Malt Products and in charge of advertising and sales for the Borgfeldt Company.

The Town & Country Magazine has a new advertising manager in Raymond D. Thomas. For the past four years or so he has been with the Today's Housewife organization.

The advertising department of the Cosmopolitan Magazine is now in charge of J. Mitchell Thorsen, who has had a wide magazine and advertising experience. At one time he was advertising manager of the Metropolitan Magazine.

Walter Kellogg Towers has resigned as managing editor of the American Boy, Detroit, to become editor of Milestones, a new magazine being launched by the Franklin Press, Detroit. He is succeeded on the American Boy by Walter P. McGuire, formerly editor of Boy's Life, the official organ of the Boy Scouts.

Fred A. Berry, the new Western manager of the David C. Cook Publishing Company, has been a magazine man for the greater part of his business career, with a little newspaper advertising work thrown in. He was with Abbott & Briggs, publishers of the National Sunday Magazine, for six years prior to October, 1916, when that publication suspended, and prior to that was with Paul Block, Inc. He was also on the staff of Street & Smith and of Everybody's Magazine, starting in the Chicago Tribune's advertising department.

Turner D. McAlpin, for four years on the staff of Today's Housewife, New York, has been appointed Eastern advertising manager of that publication.

Owing to high cost of paper and labor and general war conditions, the Ohio Woman, Columbus, has suspended publication for four months. It expects to resume if conditions change.

James I. Peck has become Eastern representative of Association Men, with headquarters at New York. He is a graduate of the University of Missouri and upon completion of his course, became Eastern representative of the Advance, Chicago. He has been associated with the Church Press Syndicate from 1915 until a short time ago, when he went with the Association Men.

Wilbur L. Arthur has been appointed Eastern manager of Home Life, with headquarters in New York.

TRADE AND CLASS PRESS.

The Architectural & Building Press, Inc., has recently received incorporation papers under the laws of New York. This corporation will publish the American Architect, Building Age & Metal Worker, Plumber & Steam Fitter.

Perry P. Reigelman, reporter on the Salem (Ore.) Capital Journal, has undergone a minor surgical operation preparatory to taking examinations for a second call for the officers' reserve training camp at the Presidio, San Francisco. Reigelman has had a long experience in military work with the National Guard of Oregon and was with the Mexican border expedition last year.

SOUTH AMERICAN PLANT TO MAKE PAPER.

The Parana Paper Company, Inc., has been organized in Curitiba, Brazil, by several large interests in Boston and New York to manufacture paper on a large scale from what is said to be a hitherto unused fibrous plant. Among the organizers are Charles Sumner Bird, Jr., proprietor of the Boston Journal; Clayton Beadle of London, England, and Lucien C. Buck, until recently purchasing engineer of the Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, N. Y. The latter will be general manager of the mill.

Mr. Beadle has been investigating the paper making quality of the plant (the name has not been disclosed) for several years, and he claims that its practicability has been demonstrated in an experimental mill in Brazil which has been operated for some time.

The supply of the raw material is said to be practically inexhaustible. It will probably be a year before the new mill is in full operation and the products will be disposed of almost wholly in South American markets.

HEATH WITH WILLIAM HARRIS

Percy Heath has resigned as press representative of the Century Theater, New York, and is now aligned with the forces of William Harris. He will occupy an executive position, in addition to handling publicity for the Harris enterprises, which include "The Thirteenth Chair."

NEW AFRICAN WEEKLY.

A weekly review of politics, literature and art is being established at Durban, South Africa, by Gustave Halle, until recently editor of the Durban Evening Advertiser. Associated with Mr. Halle are G. F. Hollingsworth and W. Winston, also late of the Advertiser.

MUNSEY IN MOVIES?

Rumors say that Frank A. Munsey is the next newspaper magnate to enter the motion picture field, emulating William Randolph Hearst, and make movies of all kinds himself. Wall Street backing will finance his enterprises, it is understood.

ONE MORE FILM PAPER.

A new paper for exhibitors of motion pictures has made its appearance in New York in the shape of the Progressive News, published by the Progressive Film Service, and edited by Claude Phillips, publicity manager of that concern.

KISER'S NEW COLUMN.

S. E. Kiser, lately appointed editor of the Dayton (Ohio) News, has resumed his former hobby of "column conducting" in addition to his editorial responsibilities. His new column is called "Just Among Friends" and appears daily in the News.

FARM PAPER AD MANAGER.

Orland Thompson, formerly with Macavoy Advertising Company, Chicago, has been made advertising manager of American Farming with offices in Chicago.

ELDERED'S PATRIOTISM.

In all the subscriptions to the Liberty Loan, no greater patriotism was manifested than that of John Eldred, a printer on the LaPorte (Ind.) Herald. Eldred placed the savings of a life-time of hard work ($10,000) in all into the loan.

BRITISH CONFERENCE DATES.

The British Institute of Journalism will hold its annual conference in London on October 20.

TRADE BOARD NOT TO BE 'PRODDED.'

FREIGHT PROSPECTS AND AID FROM CANADA ARE DOUBTFUL.

"Playing politics" in the news print situation is not likely to get anywhere with the Federal Trade Commission.

This, at least, is the conviction of various persons, close to the Trade Commission, who have expressed themselves to THE FOURTH ESTATE since the moves made by Frank P. Walsh and United States Senator Reed.

Bearing in mind this sentiment, practical men in the newspaper field will be able to put two and two together when they peruse the resolution of the trade commission to the Reed resolution, in effect demanding action by the trade commission against the news print manufacturers.

While no public intimation to the effect has been forthcoming, THE FOURTH ESTATE happens to know that the Federal Trade Commission does not believe that the attitude of Messrs. Walsh and Reed represents the sentiment of the great body of newspaper publishers.

Members of the finance committee of the United States Senate have been telling their fellow members of the difficulties they encountered in trying to induce newspaper publishers to compromise their differences of opinion and get on a common ground with respect to war taxation and the increase of postage rates, and if, on the heels of that impression, it is made to appear that newspaper interests are likewise hopelessly divided in opinion as to what should be done on the subject of news print, Congress will have the excuse (for which it always looks under such circumstances) to do little or nothing.

FREIGHT PROSPECTS.

Meanwhile, a tendency to softening in both the book and news print markets is operating to render the situation less acute for the rank and file of publishers.

Most of the far-sighted publishers, he it confessed, are not so much worried just now by paper supply as by the uncertainties of delivery that may result from the car shortage and congestion of transportation lines that seem almost inevitable in the autumn when Uncle Sam begins to move the new National Army just at the time that the crops are due for shipment.

With this in prospect some forward-thinking publishers have made arrangements to henceforth carry a larger reserve in storage than has heretofore been their custom.

Other publishers who have never made a practice of storage are known to be considering the advisability of "hoarding" enough news print to tide them over, if need be, during the period in late August and September when transportation conditions may be at their worst.

As regards the situation as regards news print consumption, it may be noted that the experts of the Federal Trade Commission have lately taken stock of what has been accomplished by the publishers of the country in the direction of paper economies—narrower margins, use of smaller type, more compact headings, etc.

The conclusion reached was that the publishers have accomplished just about all that they can be expected to attain under stress of present necessity. If the paper situation became really acute, it is realized, even more drastic economies might be necessary, but as matters stand the commission feels that the publishers are doing just about all that can be expected of them.

HERMAN LEROY COLLINS,

WHOSE APPOINTMENT AS PRESIDENT AND EDITOR OF THE PHILADELPHIA EVENING TELEGRAPH WAS ANNOUNCED BY THE FOURTH ESTATE LAST WEEK.

FOREIGN INROADS NOT SERIOUS.

Government officials at Washington who were interviewed this week by THE FOURTH ESTATE do not take seriously the alarm of some newspaper interests lest serious inroads are to be made upon American stocks of news print by purchasers in South America and Australia who are represented as willing to pay almost any price to get the paper of which they are so sorely in need.

The ocean transportation situation is such that in the opinion of the officials of the Department of Commerce and other branches of the Government there is not the slightest danger of an export drain on America's news print resources.

They point out that the United States and Canadian paper makers have for some time past, owing to lack of cargo ships, been virtually restricted to the domestic market and they see no prospect of a change in this state of affairs until some time after the German U-boat campaign of destruction of shipping has come to an end.

Officials declare that if the paper manufacturers in the United States who have contracts to supply publishers in Cuba and other nearby countries cannot get ships for these comparatively short hauls, how can it be expected that they can obtain tonnage for shipments to destinations distant 8,000 miles or more?

Holding this view, they, naturally, see no need of the issuance by President Wilson of an export embargo on news print, such as he has power to authorize under the new legislation and which is being urged by some prominent publishers who have spent much time in Washington of late.

CANADIAN AID DOUBTFUL.

Suspicion is setting in at Washington that not much is to be expected from Canada in the near future by way of aid for the solution of the news print problem. According to information reaching Washington the Dominion news print investigation has gotten into a tangle over that bugbear, "cost of production," and prospect of an agreement that would clear the atmosphere is remote.

As the time draws near for the initial draft of men in the United States for the National Army and as the prospect of military conscription comes closer in Canada there is increased speculation as to the effect of the withdrawal of man-power upon news print production.

Furthermore the recruiting in the United States, for immediate service in France, of regiments of foresters and trained woodsmen injects a new disturbing element.

There was complaint in Canada last winter, it may be recalled, regarding the scarcity of labor for the cut of pulpwood and if this shortage is to be increased along with a short-handed condition at the mills, there may be a new factor to be reckoned with in the news print market next season.

THE A.P.A. & W.N.U. MERGER.

THE DECREE FORBIDDING IT IS APPEALED TO HIGHER U. S. COURT.

Charles E. Hughes appeared in the United States Court of Appeals in Chicago on June 28 as counsel for the American Press Association and the Western Newspaper Union in an attempt to obtain a modification of a lower court decree forbidding the sale of the plate business of the American Press Association to the Western Newspaper Union.

The original decision was handed down by Judge Landis, who ruled that such a sale would violate the anti-trust law.

The appellate court has not passed on the case.

DECISION IS RESERVED IN "GIRARD" SUIT.

Herman L. Collins, the new president and editor of the Philadelphia Evening Telegraph, has filed suit against the Philadelphia Public Ledger to restrain it from continuing to use the name "Girard" in connection with the column entitled "Girard's Topics of the Town," which has been running in the Public Ledger for several years. Mr. Collins has written for the column for a number of years and except, when he was on his vacation, was the only one preparing the articles appearing under that heading.

He contends that it has become known generally that he is the author of the articles, that therefore the name "Girard" has become associated with him and his work, and that the Public Ledger has not the right to continue the column in connection with the use of the name "Girard."

The case was heard this week and the above facts were practically admitted by both sides.

It also appeared that the Ledger had on one or two occasions advertised Mr. Collins as "Girard," and Mr. Collins contended that, having been held out to the world as the person known as Girard, the reputation so acquired by the articles belonged to him and that he was entitled to an injunction.

The Public Ledger, on the other hand, contended that the column having been established by the Ledger, and Mr. Collins having been paid a salary to write the articles, the name "Girard" belonged to the newspaper and could be continued.

Decision was reserved.

NEWSPAPERS' WAR TAXES.

SENATE COMMITTEE ADDS QUARTER-CENT TO 2D CLASS —5% TAX ON PROFIT.

The War Revenue bill is now held up awaiting action upon the Food Administration bill.

As finally drafted, the much debated publishers' tax section proposes a five per cent tax upon publishers' profits over $3,000, yielding $7,500,000 revenue; and an increase of a quarter of a cent a pound in second class postage rates, yielding $3,000,000.

Here is a table of the various sources of taxation and the revenue, in addition to the present levies, they are expected to yield annually under the terms of the war revenue bill reported by the Senate Finance Committee:

Second class mails.....	3,000,000
First class mails.....	50,000,000
Publications.....	7,500,000
Telephones and telegraphs.....	7,000,000
Incomes.....	$532,000,000
Excess profits.....	$22,000,000
Tobacco and alcohol.....	$20,000,000
Freight transportation.....	77,500,000
Express and parcel post.....	17,500,000
Passenger transportation.....	37,500,000

Schedule A, including play- ing cards.....	30,000,000
Tea, coffee, sugar, etc.....	85,000,000
Virgin Islands products.....	20,000

The most important last minute change in the bill broadens the scope of the tax on excess corporation war profits.

By raising the limit of the tax to 50 per cent, instead of 40 per cent, the committee added $18,000,000 to the appropriation, making the excess profits tax $748,000,000, instead of $730,000,000.

The scale of the excess profits tax as broadened by the committee is:

Not in excess of 15 per cent of the normal profits, 12 per cent.
In excess of 15 per cent and not of 25 per cent, 16 per cent.
In excess of 25 per cent and not of 50 per cent, 20 per cent.
In excess of 50 per cent and not of 75 per cent, 25 per cent.
In excess of 75 per cent and not of 100 per cent, 30 per cent.
In excess of 100 per cent and not of 150 per cent, 35 per cent.
In excess of 150 per cent and not of 200 per cent, 40 per cent.
In excess of 200 per cent and not of 250 per cent, 45 per cent.
In excess of 250 per cent, 50 per cent.

MOBILIZING WAR TALK.

Clarence J. Pyle, business manager of the Wilmington (Del.) Evening Journal, has been appointed chairman of the "four minute men" campaign in Delaware. He is to select men who are to make patriotic addresses aiding recruiting in the moving picture theaters.

NEW AD MANAGER.

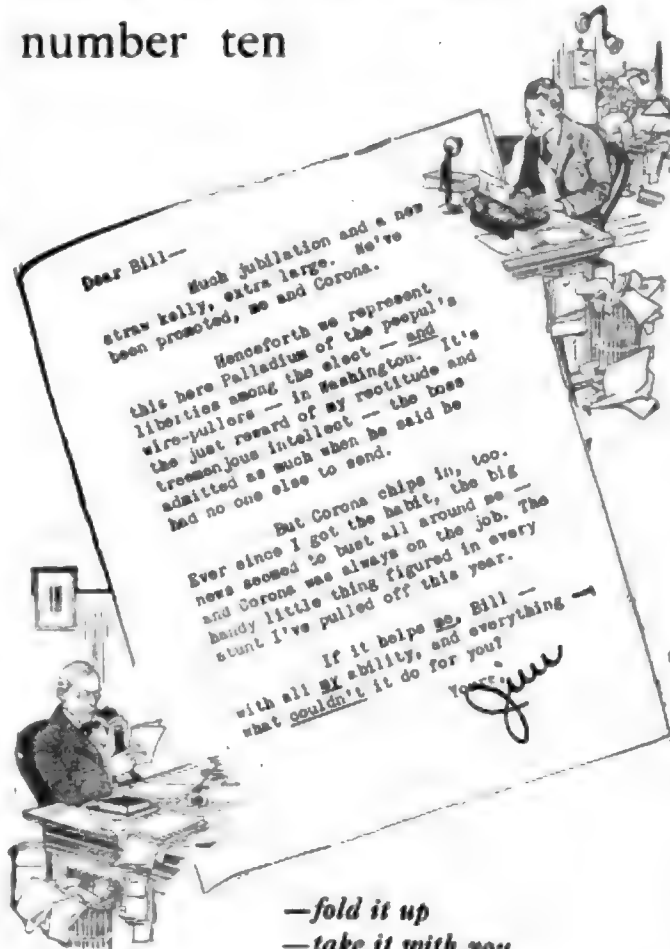

Harold Linton has been made advertising manager of the Elkhart (Ind.) Truth. For some time past he has been with the paper as foreman of the composing room.

AN APPENDICITIS VICTIM.

W. G. Anderson, owner and editor of the Winfield (Kan.) Free Press, was operated on last week for appendicitis. He is improving and his early recovery is expected.

WARNS AGAINST CENSORSHIP.

Lord Northcliffe, in his first important speech since his arrival in this country as the head of the British war mission, expressed the hope on June 28 that the United States would not make the censorship blunder that Great Britain made. He was speaking at an informal luncheon given in his honor by Isaac F. Marcorson at the Players' Club, New York.

Lord Northcliffe said:

"America can and will do a tremendous part in this war, first, because she is fresh, and, second, because she undoubtedly will profit by the mistakes of the nations which have been fighting since August, 1914. What the war needs more than anything else is brains and speed.

"I trust that the United States will not make the censorship blunder that England made, and which is just becoming an evil of the past. England was kept in the dark for nearly three years.

"The people were blinded by the fatuous optimism of soldiers and politicians, who, while efficient in peace, were incompetent in war. The people were not permitted to know the truth, and when the truth finally emerged out of costly blunders and sacrifice they were loath to accept it.

"I hope that America may permit her newspaper and magazine writers to be absolutely frank about what is going on.

"It is important for the nation to know the worst as it is for the nation to know the best.

"For one thing—and we have found it out from actual experience—it is a great stimulus for the men fighting in the field to know that they are being written about at home and that the country they are fighting for knows precisely what they are doing.

"Every man with a pen in hand and a printing press near by can do a patriotic service to his country by awakening his people to the fact that this war is just beginning, and that every ounce of energy, that every revolution of America's vast industrial machine, and, what is equally important, every gallon of gasoline, will be needed to bring the war to a successful end."

GEORGIANS TO MEET.

The annual meeting of the Georgia Weekly Press Association will be held at Thomasville from July 16 to 18.

Among the newspaper men who will address the meeting are: C. M. Methvin, Eastman Times-Journal; W. C. Woodall, Columbus Industrial Index; Franc Mangum, Swainsboro Blade; W. G. Suttie, Savannah Press; W. T. Anderson, Macon Telegraph, and J. Kelly Simmons, Telfair Enterprise.

William J. Harris of the Federal Trade Commission, H. M. Stanley, Georgia Commissioner of Commerce and Labor, and F. W. Bott of the Mergenthaler Linotype Company are also on the program.

RUSSIAN PAPERS SMALLER.

Owing to the shortage of print paper the Russian government has ordered that henceforth morning newspapers shall print a maximum of 250 columns weekly and evening newspapers 150 columns. The only newspapers exempted from this order are the organs of the government and of the Petrograd Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates.

AN INDIANA REVIVAL.

Publication of the Marengo (Ind.) Observer, which was suspended some time ago pending the settlement of the estate of Elmo Wilson, the late editor, has been resumed.

Mrs. Wilson is the new editor of the paper, with her son, Jesse Wilson, as general manager.

WHAT IS A GOOD NEWSPAPER?

EDITOR BRISHANE GIVES HIS IDEA, ON BECOMING A PROPRIETOR.

That Arthur Brisbane is now a newspaper owner lends especial interest to his editorial in the New York Evening Journal entitled "What Is a Good Newspaper?"

"Here is one answer; there are forty others," says Mr. Brisbane:

"The ablest editor in the United States said, 'There are forty ways of making a good and successful newspaper. All I ask is that you adopt and follow one of the forty ways. Don't try to work forty ways at once.'

"A reader asks this newspaper to define good newspaper work. Here is one of forty possible definitions:

"A good newspaper attends first to the most important work at hand. Today that work consists in earnest support of those that must get us honorably out of this war. Earnest support, and friendly constructive criticism—but earnest support above all, and the less criticism the better.

"A good newspaper feels toward its readers—the great body of them, not a chosen few who can repay favors—as an honest lawyer feels toward the client that retains him.

"There are newspapers in this country that give to the poor man, for his daily penny, service as faithful advocacy as determined as Rockefeller could buy from Root with a million-dollar fee—and that is saying a good deal.

"A good newspaper, like a good restaurant keeper, prepares carefully a mental table d'hôte.

"First comes news—the daily history of the race. A newspaper is the second-hand on the face of time's clock. And like the swiftly hopping second-hand, it must make a fuss about little things.

"Second comes humor—for this is a sad world, with its retail murders in cellars and its wholesale murders 'on the field of honor.' When you have read the news you need something that will help you to smile and forget it.

"After news and humor come good pictures. In this day of hurry we learn through the eye, and one picture may be worth a million words.

"Then there is the newspaper's spinal column, if it has one, the editorial.

"It is not the most pleasing or most interesting thing in the newspaper or in the human body—but it enables both to stand up straight, walk erect, look upward and outward and fight destiny.

"The young man thinks he marries for the girl's pink cheeks, curly hair, pretty hands and smile. He would resent your speaking of her backbone, but that, principally, is what he marries. Without it, she would be flat on the ground, inert protoplasm.

"There is a good deal of flat, inert protoplasm in the newspaper world—that's what makes newspaper success quite simple. Merciful Providence arranges your competitor so that he doesn't know what is the matter with him.

"The jellyfish doesn't know that he isn't a vertebrate. If he did know it, he would say: 'I am glad of it; I hate vertebrates—they are socialistic.'

"A good newspaper is to the public what speech is to the individual. The press is public speech.

"A good editorial column and honest news columns are to the nation of today what the public square was to the Greek city—a place for meeting and discussing, in which conspiracies are exposed and punished.

"For example, the Steel Trust, the Copper Trust, and a dozen others give a million dollars to the Red Cross with the well-advertised right hand, and with the left steal a billion from the nation in extortionate charges.

"How much more do you suppose these modern bandits would steal, if there were no newspapers to check them?

"What a nurse does for a crying baby a good newspaper does for the public. The nurse doesn't tell the baby what the nurse thinks, but finds out and tells what is the matter with the baby.

"The good newspaper expresses the thoughts, wishes, troubles, aspirations, just complaints of the public.

"You have written a good editorial if your reader says: 'That is what I have thought a thousand times.'

"A good newspaper tells the old truths with sincerity and earnestness that make them new.

"And, fortunately for those that work sincerely, the humblest man recognizes the good newspaper instantly; knows his friend's voice."

WILLIAM WINTER, VETERAN CRITIC, DIES IN 71ST YEAR.

William Winter, for many years dramatic critic of the New York Tribune, author and Shakespearean scholar, died on June 30 in New Brighton, N. Y., as the result of repeated attacks of angina pectoris. He would have been eighty-one years old on July 15. He was first stricken on February 9, 1916, but he continued his literary work until June 4 of this year. He was unable to leave his bed after that, but for several days carried on his work by dictation.

Mr. Winter had been writing verse ever since the age of ten years, and his first book of verse, dedicated to Longfellow, was published when he was eighteen. He delivered many Lyceum lectures before coming to New York, and made political addresses in the campaign for Fremont.

His second book of poems was entitled "The Queen's Domain and Other Poems," and was published in 1858, the year before he came to New York. On his arrival in the metropolis Mr. Winter became connected with Vanity Fair, the Saturday Press and other publications and began in earnest to map out his life career.

He married Elizabeth Campbell of Ederline, Scotland, a talented writer, on December 8, 1860, and the following year was made assistant editor of the New York Albion, for which he wrote the Mercutio Letters.

Probably he was best known to the public at large as a dramatic critic, a position which he held until a few years ago, and for the unprecedented term of fifty years. He joined the New York Tribune in 1865 and commenced the creation of a department which for critical scholarship made him a unique figure in the history of journalism.

From 1856 to 1870 Mr. Winter was managing editor of the New York

Weekly Review, to which he contributed many articles on dramatic and literary subjects. He wrote for the New York Express during the editorship of Erastus Brooks, and was for a time managing editor of Frank Leslie's Magazine. His main efforts were always devoted to this period to his work for the Tribune and to the creation of many books.

A year ago players and playgoers of the past and present day gathered in the Century Theater, New York, in honor of Mr. Winter. An impressive testimonial had been arranged at the suggestion of Viola Allen, which met with response from a hundred sources.

ON EXEMPTION BOARDS.

Among the citizens appointed by President Wilson to act upon applications for exemption from the military draft law in New York City are: Ralph Pulitzer, publisher of the New York World; Collin Armstrong, president of the Collin Armstrong, Inc., Advertising Agency; Simeon Strunsky of the New York Evening Post editorial staff and Dr. Fabian Franklin, formerly of that newspaper, and George Haven Putnam, president of G. P. Putnam's Sons.

NO HUMORISTS' UNION.

The American Press Humorists Association, at its first meeting under its newly elected president, James A. Waldron, on June 30, failed to reach an agreement on the subject of incorporation and unionization of the craft. Action was deferred until next year, when the association will meet at Chicago.

MRS. BAILLARD RECOVERING.

Maude Littleton Baillard, well known New York newspaper woman and publicity manager, has taken up her home in Montclair, N. J., for the summer. Her recently injured foot has compelled Mrs. Baillard to rest for some time past, but it is better now and she hopes to be able to return to her work soon. Her office is at 1180 Broadway.

N. E. A. MEETING IN MINNEAPOLIS

WILL START WORLD MOVE FOR PEACE—STRONG SPEAKERS ON PROGRAM.

The National Editorial Association will convene for its thirty-second annual meeting in Minneapolis on July 9 to 12 and will start what it hopes will become a world-wide movement by news paper men for an early peace in the European war.

The delegates will be welcomed by Mayor Thomas E. Van Lear of Minneapolis and Governor J. A. A. Burnquist of Minnesota, who will be answered by Past President J. Clyde Oswald of the N.E.A.

The feature address of the first day's session will be delivered by Dean Walter Williams of the University of Missouri School of Journalism, who is also a past president of the N. E. A. He will talk on "Schools of Journalism and Their Effect on the Publishing of Newspapers."

Joe Mitchell Chapple, editor of the National Magazine, Boston, will deliver an address on "Making the Paper a Community Power" at the morning session on July 10 and Norris A. Huse, vice-president of the American Press Association, will tell how to secure general advertising.

Charles H. Bettis, former president of the New York State Press Association, will discuss "Advertising from the Newspaper Standpoint" at the evening session.

Jason Rogers, publisher of the New York Globe, will ask and answer the question "Where Are We Weakest?" and H. H. Bliss, secretary of the Wisconsin Daily League, will tell how national advertising is secured through a state-wide organization of newspapers.

The service a newspaper can render its advertisers will be discussed from the newspaper standpoint by H. J. Blanton, president of the Missouri Press Association, who will be followed by F. H. Ralsten, vice-president of the William H. Rankin Company, Chicago, who will take up the same subject as seen by the advertising agent.

Numerous trips around the Twin Cities will take up the afternoons of the delegates and a tour of the Northwest will follow the convention.

To help give the members of the National Editorial Association a warm welcome, the Hennepin County Publishers Association has appointed the following reception committee:

J. Linn Lash, Weekly Mirror; L. Duempke, Northeast Argus; D. C. Martin, Hennepin County Rural Messenger, St. Louis Park; H. D. Maul, Finance and Commerce; George E. Silk, Hennepin County Enterprise, Hopkins; F. E. Covell, Weekly Mirror.

This committee will cooperate with the committee appointed by the Minnesota Editorial Association and the Civic and Commerce Association reception committee.

WILL TALK FOR NATION.

Among the speakers appointed by Governor Capper of Kansas to attend the National Security League's training camp for speakers at Chautauqua, N. Y., July 2-7, are Henry J. Allen of the Wichita Eagle and Charles F. Scott of the Iola Register.

The speakers will be trained for special war oratory.

NEWSPAPER MEN GOVERNING NEW BRITAIN.

Alfred E. Magnell, for many years New Britain representative of the Hartford (Ct.) Times, has been elected chairman of the newly appointed board of fire commissioners in New Britain. For a number of years he served as clerk of the former safety board, in joint charge of the fire and police departments prior to separation of jurisdiction into two boards of commissioners.

H. V. Camp, former New Britain representative for the Hartford Courant, now engaged in the real estate business in that city, was also recently appointed to the fire board.

Harold R. Jones, city hall reporter for the New Britain Record, is reported slated for the clerkship of the newly appointed police board, while Howard A. Timbrell, holding a like beat with the Record, is scheduled for appointment to the fire board clerkship. Chairmanship and clerkship of both boards are salaried positions.

PUBLISHING IN GERMANY.

Information comes from London that of the 3,500 German newspapers existing before the war, 564 have disappeared.

The same source mentions that the largest circulation of German newspapers is 270,000 and the smallest 150.

German newspaper only can now be supplied to persons who subscribed for at least one month. Publishers who break this rule are liable to a fine of $4,000 and imprisonment for six months.

OUSLEY'S "BIT."

Clarence Ousley, former editor of the Fort Worth (Tex.) Record and latterly connected with the extension work of the Texas A. and M. College, has been appointed assistant to Secretary Houston of the United States Department of Agriculture. Mr. Ousley's work will consist mainly of an effort to increase general food production in Texas.

ANOTHER SUIT ON NEWS PROPERTY.

I.N.S. SUED BY PHILADELPHIA LEDGER, WILL FIGHT TO THE LAST DITCH.

Suit to enjoin the International News Service from using without permission war news and other related matter has been begun in the United States District Court in Philadelphia by the Public Ledger Company. The suit is similar to that successfully instituted in New York against the defendant organization by the Associated Press, but which has been appealed against to the United States Supreme Court by the I.N.S.

The bill of complaint alleges that the Ledger Company held a contract with the London Times to furnish certain articles with the privilege of reselling the matter to newspapers in other cities.

It is alleged that the defendant appropriated these articles principally by copying them from early editions of the Ledger and other Eastern newspapers and telegraphing them to subscribers of the International News Service in West, availing itself of the difference in time and enabling its Western subscribers to publish the articles simultaneously with the newspapers to whom the Ledger had sold the service, and, in some instances, in advance of such publication.

John T. Sturdevant, associate counsel for the I.N.S., said:

"This seems to be an attempt upon the part of the Ledger Company to strike down a source of news that has been recognized by news agencies and newspapers as legitimate since news agencies have been established and newspapers published.

"The International News Service will contend, as it always has contended, that neither the Philadelphia Public Ledger nor the Associated Press has any exclusive control of the facts of news after the publication thereof, and will defend its rights and the free rights of a free press before the United States Supreme Court upon the grounds stated by Judge Ward in his opinion in the Associated Press case—that if a news agency or newspaper publishes or abandons or dedicates or communicates his information to the world his right of property in his information and his right to be protected against the use of it is gone."

THE CURE FOR THE NEWS PRINT TROUBLES.

NOT CONTROL BY THE GOVERNMENT, BUT ENCOURAGEMENT FOR AMERICAN INVESTMENT, SAYS W.W.WEAVER.

North Carolina newspaper publishers who favored the adoption by Congress of the Owen Bill, authorizing the Government to take over the manufacturing and distribution of news print paper, quickly changed their minds at their meetings on June 29 and June 30, when W. W. Weaver, publisher of the Durham Sun, outlined the situation to them.

Mr. Weaver, who heads the North Carolina Afternoon Newspaper Association's paper committee, told both that organization and the State Press Association, of whose paper committee he is also a member, many facts concerning the paper situation theretofore unknown to a majority of the publishers. Mr. Weaver has made a comprehensive study of the paper situation. It was this study that placed him in such close touch with the paper situation, and made it possible for him to show the folly of the Owen Bill.

The proposal, Mr. Weaver said, is an appalling one. The paper mills already have a large amount of money invested in their plants, and their business is a highly technical one.

In these days when the business is surrounded with great dangers owing to the supply of wood, coal, railway facilities and labor, they are in an extremely delicate situation, he declared. Pulp wood is being placed into some of the mills at a rate of $18 and $20 a cord.

WOULD CAUSE CONFUSION.

In this connection, the speaker pointed out that the Government has no intelligent or competent agencies to manage the mills and direct the manufacturing of a supply of paper. Government interference would consequently mean confusion and trouble as well as complete disorganization of the news print situation. It would also frighten capital out of the field.

An important feature brought out by Mr. Weaver was the fact that no man has had the courage to build up a new paper mill in the United States during recent years. This situation has been brought about mainly by Canadian competition. Government interference will mean the sending of practically all of the news print business to Canada.

Mr. Weaver pointed out to the editors that the Government investigation some years ago showed that the Canadian manufacturers of news print paper can produce this commodity cheaper than it can be produced in this country. This is due to the fact that the Canadian mills cut their wood from Government lands under lease and do not have to invest large sums of money in land. The Canadian mills are also fortunate in having available large water powers, controlled mainly by the Canadian government.

News print paper, Mr. Weaver said, alone has been placed on the Canadian free list. Since that day no news mill has been built in the United States. Many of them have been built in Canada. The consumption of news print has steadily grown and the consumption of Canadian paper has steadily increased.

This is due partly to the difference in the cost of production, and largely to the fact that although the Canadians have free entry to our market for their manufactured product, they have prohibited the exportation of pulp wood from Canada to the United States. In other words, they were given free entry for their manufactured product and in return they cut off our supply of raw material.

This action was taken by the Canadian government in the face of leases given to American manufacturers on government wood lands. Enormous amounts of money were paid for the leases. These leases were made with the understanding that the wood should be permitted to come to the United States. It was permitted to come for a long time when paper was not on the free list.

If the American manufacturers are to be protected and encouraged, he said, the Canadian government should be compelled to respect their leases and to let the raw material come into the United States; otherwise a duty should be laid on paper.

In the letter submitted by the Federal Trade Commission to the president of the United States Senate, June 13, Mr. Weaver said, it was stated that the consumption of news print paper in the United States in 1916 was 1,775,000 net tons.

The capacity of the United States mills, according to the American Newspaper Publishers Association, under date of April 1, 1916, amount to only 1,401,300 given 50 working weeks or 300 working days to the year. This leaves a deficit of 737,700 tons annually. It was further pointed out by Mr. Weaver that about 75 per cent of the news print production of Canada comes into the United States.

For nearly two years Mr. Weaver has been working on the news print paper situation. He has found that North Carolina has great opportunities to offer news print manufacturers, but that talk of Government control offers no inducement for investment.

The large papers, he told the editors, are more to blame than the manufacturers.

In a recent conference of big publishers, the Federal Trade Commission and manufacturers it was agreed that the big publishers should relinquish 5 per cent of their tonnage to the smaller papers. This agreement, he said, was not carried out. Now the big publishers are bidding on the open market and are causing the high market price of paper.

CITIES WILL ADVERTISE.

A national advertising campaign which will give publicity to the fifteen North Carolina cities in which are located the members of the North Carolina Association of Afternoon Newspapers was planned at the convention at Wrightsville Beach.

The publishers also adopted resolutions favoring the levying of a war tax upon the net profits of all newspapers, allowing no exemptions.

Previous to the passing of this resolution they had adopted a resolution endorsing the position taken by many of the Congressmen opposing the increasing of postage rates on newspapers. The publishers preferred that a tax be placed on net profits.

The convention opened Saturday afternoon following the adjournment of the North Carolina Press Association convention at Morehead City, thus giving members of the afternoon association an opportunity of attending both conventions.

The developing of a large shipping port on the North Carolina coast. President Jacobs of the Wilmington Chamber of Commerce contended, would be of immense value to all parts of the state. The idea met with the approval of the newspaper publishers, many of whom pledged to support Wilmington as the port of entry for all marine shipping in that state.

SOCIALIST JOURNAL STOPPED FOR ANTI-DRAFT ADS.

The issue of June 19 of the American Socialist, journal of the National Socialist Party, has been held up since that date. It was said that for three weeks the postmaster at St. Louis has been declining to distribute the paper.

Objection to the issue is said to have been based on an advertisement of a Socialist pamphlet entitled "The Price We Pay," and in general to the tone of the paper in opposing the war and the draft.

BIG DEAL IS ON IN VANCOUVER.

REPORTS INDICATE THAT THE NEWS-ADVERTISER AND SUN WILL MERGE.

Word comes from the coast that two morning papers, the Vancouver Daily Sun and the Vancouver Daily News-Advertiser are working toward a fusion of their interests.

The negotiations have been under way for some months and have now reached a stage where a formal announcement of the deal was made in the Province a few days ago and in an interview with George E. MacDonald of the Sun.

"Details of the deal are still under process of settlement, but it can be announced that between now and September 1 the Sun will absorb the older morning paper," said Mr. MacDonald, who is one of the principal directors of the Sun as well as being prominent in the Liberal party.

Negotiations for the combination of the papers have been proceeding for some time.

The understanding is that if the two papers are brought under one management it will be largely as the result of C. A. Abraham's influence in the field. Mr. Abraham is business manager of the Sun. Both parties recognized his wide newspaper experience and concluded that where the town was over-papered the best solution of the problem for all concerned was the elimination of one morning paper, leaving the other paper, under Mr. Abraham's management a chance to publish a newspaper alike creditable to British Columbia and the city of Vancouver.

It is understood, when the deal is completed, both papers will be merged under a new name and a more liberal editorial and news policy introduced.

ICE FUND IN OPERATION.

The annual distribution of ice to New York's poor people was started by the New York Herald on July 2 and will continue during the summer months. The Herald has been furnishing free ice in the congested tenement districts of New York since 192, when the first ice fund was started with a contribution of $1,000 by James Gordon Bennett, the Herald's proprietor.

NEWMAN RESUMES.

Harry Newman, automobile dealer de luxe, whose heavy advertising campaigns have been "trail-blazers" for other dealers on Automobile Row in Chicago, has re-entered business on a big scale after a period of comparative advertising inactivity.

He signaled his appointment as Maxwell representative with page advertisements in the Chicago newspapers. He will continue to be a heavy user of daily newspaper space.

BOOKS USEFUL TO EDITORS AND ADVERTISERS.

"PAPER" by H. A. Maddox; Isaac Pittman & Sons, Ltd., publishers.

The purpose of this work is to place within easy reach of those interested a sufficiently comprehensive technical handbook on paper and paper-making at a price rendering it available to those whose opportunity of purchasing the more ambitious publications is limited. While primarily written for those concerned in making, handling or using paper, it has been the author's endeavor throughout to arrange and modify the language in order to render the subject intelligible to the general reader, whose knowledge of technical or trade terms and formulae is naturally of a lesser degree.

"CHOOSING EMPLOYEES BY TEST," by William Fretz Kemble. Engineering Book Company, publisher.

Only in recent years have we been taught to appreciate the importance of vocational studies. And yet the work has been largely experimental and but very little of the collected and classified knowledge has reached the public in book form. Therefore all those interested in labor standardization will find Mr. Kemble's work particularly interesting and the complete tests that he has developed of real value. This volume is one of the most recent in the "Industrial Management Library," which series has included notable additions to the literature of modern business.

"MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP," by Carl D. Thompson; B. W. Huebsch, publisher.

A brief survey of the extent, the rapid growth and the success of municipal ownership throughout the world, presenting the arguments against private ownership, the failure of regulation and the advantages of municipal ownership.

"THE PLATTSBURG MANUAL," by Lieutenants O. O. Ellis and E. B. Garey, the Century Company, publisher.

Major General Leonard Wood said in his foreword for this manual: "In a word it is a useful and sound work and one which can be commended to those who contemplate a course in military training." And even though military training has received tremendous impetus in the last few months due to our activity in the war, still the Plattsburg Manual has not been displaced in its leadership as an inspiring primer of the infantry service.

"BOOK PLATES," by Carl S. Junge; Champlin Press, publisher. The book may well be recommended to all modern printers, for a practical and artistic display of book plates. The make-up of the volume and the arrangement of the matter show development in printing and design to a happy degree. A careful introduction concerns the making of book plate by Z. A. Dixon.

"UNFAIR COMPETITION," by William H. S. Stevens, Ph.D.; University of Chicago Press, publisher.

About the time that the Trade Commission Act was under discussion there appeared in the Political Science Quarterly two articles on "Unfair Practices," and these articles were influential in shaping the character of that section of the act dealing with the definition and prohibition of unfair practices.

So much interest was aroused that the two articles were written and expanded to the present form. Most interestingly written is Dr. Stevens' little volume, and, though dealing with practices now largely prohibited by law, it will be found worth the while for every business man to read.

"MOBILIZING AMERICA," by Arthur Bullard, Macmillan Company, publisher.

Written by an American who has spent the past few years in France and England, the book possesses a world-sense of war life as it is today. Mr. Bullard points especially a way in three stern and valuable chapters—mobilization of public opinion, of industry, of men. The facts in this volume are vital. The lessons are before us. Throughout rings the heartfelt constructive program for our part in the war.

Mr. Bullard is the author of "Diplomacy of the Great War."

"HEALTH AND DISEASE," by Roger I. Lee, M.D., Little Brown & Co., publishers.

The present-day attitude toward national health as a national asset makes this practical volume of a series of lectures delivered in Harvard University of real value. It is the purpose of the author to give the general public a better understanding of public matters, such as milk, water, sewage, general hygiene, which produce health or disease. This modern discussion is ably handled.

"FINANCIAL AND ECONOMIC ANNUAL OF JAPAN," Japanese Government Printing Office, publisher.

This is the sixteenth annual volume of a work useful to all people who are in any way interested in the Far East. It is printed in English and contains maps and diagrams; introductory tables; statistics and descriptive material on finance, agriculture, banking and money market, transportation, communication, provincial information, etc.

"PROFITS AND WAGES," by G. A. Kleene; the Macmillan Company, publisher.

A study in the distribution of income, explaining how the flow of goods from the mine and farm and factory spreads and divides into streams of private income, such as rent, profit and interest, for the well-to-do, or the wages with which the poor must be content.

"WHAT YOU CAN DO WITH YOUR WILL POWER," by Russell H. Conwell; Harper & Bros., publishers.

To those who have lost confidence in themselves this little book will inject renewed courage and inspiration.

"STRUCTURE OF AN EFFECTIVE PUBLIC SPEECH," by H. B. Bradbury; Sherwood Company, publisher.

The author, a member of the New York Bar, defines the proper form in which a speech should be divided and presented.

"THE TAYLOR SYSTEM OF SCIENTIFIC MANAGEMENT," by C. Bertram Thompson; A. W. Shaw Company, publisher.

A description of the Taylor system, its method of development and operation in actual practice, based on the training acquired by the author in a large number of plants systematized by members of the Taylor group. This manual also contains a bibliography of scientific management as a guide to those seeking information on this subject.

"CONCRETE HOUSES AND HOW THEY WERE BUILT," edited by Harvey Whipple and C. D. Gilbert; Concrete-Cement Age Publishing Company, publisher.

Compiled in book form in response to a demand greater than could be met with copies of "Concrete," in which the articles on the various types of concrete houses, their construction, etc., first appeared.

CUP FOR PUBLIC SERVICE

Rules governing the award of the losing cup offered by the school of journalism of the University of Missouri to the Missouri newspaper accomplishing the most constructive work in journalism on behalf of good citizenship during the next twelve months have been formulated by a committee consisting of the president and two former presidents of the Missouri Press Association: H. I. Blanton of the Paris Appeal; William Southern, Jr., of the Independence Examiner; and Fred Naefer of the Cape Girardeau Republic.

The contest is open to every Missouri newspaper.

The rules provide that the cup shall be awarded to the Missouri newspaper which in the twelve months ending April 1, 1918, does, in its field, the most constructive work on behalf of good citizenship, which is interpreted to mean promoting by publication of editorial, news, advertising and other articles, the elevation of the standards of living and the permission to all men of attainment of these standards.

The judges shall be: The president of the Missouri Press Association, the president of the Missouri Writers' Guild and the president of the State Historical Society of Missouri—or representatives named by them. Vacancies in the list of judges shall be filled by agreement of the judges present or by appointment of the dean of the School of Journalism.

The decision will be announced during Journalism Week, 1918, at the University of Missouri.

SOUTHERN PUBLISHERS MEET AT ASHEVILLE.

ANNUAL S. N. P. A. CONVENTION CLOSES YEAR OF SUCCESSFUL WORK—AD AGENTS MEET AT SAME TIME.

The close of what is said to have been the biggest year in the history of the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association will be marked from July 9-11, when the members gather at Grove Park Inn, Asheville, N. C., for their fifteenth annual convention.

Sessions will be held morning and afternoon for the three days, with a program so varied as to prove of interest to every member, whether he be an editorial or business executive.

Reports of officers and committee chairmen will set forth that the association has successfully worked not only for its members but for every Southern publisher, and that many new members have been brought into the ranks of the organization. It is said that the candidates for admission to membership represent about thirty newspapers.

An added feature of interest will be the meeting of the new Southern Association of Advertising Agents, which will be held at Grove Park Inn at the same time as the publishers' convention, thus giving the newspaper and advertising interests an opportunity to become mutually acquainted to the advantage of both.

While the convention will be strictly a business meeting, there will be sufficient diversion to please all who attend. No golf tournament has been arranged, but sufficient time will be allowed the golf enthusiasts for participation in their favorite game.

The complete program for the meeting follows:

MONDAY, JULY 9, 10 A. M.

Roll call.
Reading of minutes.
Report of president.
Report of secretary-treasurer.
Election of new members.
Appointment of auditing and other committees.
Reports of standing committees:
Advertising.
Newsprint.
Government reports.
Announcements.
Recess for lunch and committee work.

AFTERNOON SESSION, 2:30 P. M.

Address: "The A.B.C. and Its Value to the Newspaper," by Russell E. Whitman, managing director A.B.C.
Address: "Dry Mats," by Benjamin Wood, general manager Wood-Flong Company.
Discussion by members on the following:

The War Tax Bill.
The Newspaper Situation.
Second Class Mail.
Dry Mats.
"How many members operate a cost system and are able to determine the cost per inch of display advertising?"
"Have any members kept tabulated record along plans similar to those outlined by Jason Rogers in his booklet entitled 'Newspaper Efficiency'?"
"What members have signed new wage scales during the year, and what has been the per cent. of increase?"
"Has there been any improvement or revision of the libel laws during the past year?"

"How many members have defended libel suits, and with what result?"
"The press agent. Is he still on the job? Is his number growing less?"
"Have car shortages caused any inconvenience to members, especially in securing deliveries of newspaper?"

"Would it not be a good idea to have a committee to work out a newspaper cost accounting form and comparisons of the per cent. of cost on various departments made between members?"
Adjournment.

TUESDAY, JULY 10, 10 A. M.

Address: "The Southern Advertising Agents' Association," by Edwin F. Johnson, secretary, member Johnson Dallis Advertising Agency.

Address: "The Southeastern Advertising Agents' Association," by Dillard Jacobs, member Dillard Jacobs Advertising Agency.

Address: "The National Organization of Advertising Agents," by St. Elmo Massengale, member Massengale Advertising Agency.

Discussions by members on the following subjects:

"How is the good will of the newspaper determined?"

"Has the Federal Trade Commission accomplished anything for publishers?"

"What forms of advertising are members rejecting?"

"What percentage of local advertising receipts should be paid out in salaries for advertising manager and solicitors?"

"What co-operation could a newspaper extend to foreign advertisers?"

"How far should publishers go in censoring exaggerated bargain advertisements?"

"To what extent are members giving free publicity to automobile dealers and manufacturers?"

"Are publishers charging more than the regular rate on advertising set in body type with heads to imitate news heads?"

"How many publishers permit use of news head type in advertisements, and is it fair to readers to permit medical ads to imitate news articles?"

"And if so, should it be done at a higher rate, and if so, how much higher?"

"How many members carrying talking machine advertising recognize request of companies for monthly review of new records?"

"What system is used in advertising departments showing records of solicitation, space used, amount and kind of advertising carried?"

"Are any members of the Association operating without special representatives, and with what success?"

"What is the best basis of compensation for advertising solicitors? Should they be placed on a salary or commission?"

"How many members donated display advertising space to the Government or to local committees in the campaigns on Liberty Bond, Red Cross, recruiting, etc.?"

"Is the flat rate more desirable than the sliding scale of rates? Is there any reason for charging a higher rate on foreign advertising than is charged for local advertising?"

"How is the difference between a local and foreign advertiser determined?"

Address: "An Association of Dailies," by J. L. Horne, Jr., Rocky Mount, N. C.

Address: "Is It Preferable to Run a Hotel or Publish a Daily Newspaper?" by F. L. Seely, manager of Grove Park Inn.

Address: "Publishing a Small Town Newspaper," by W. G. Bryan, publisher Atlanta Georgian and Sunday American.

Reports of committees.
Election of officers.

Discussions by members on the following subjects:

"What steps have members taken to eliminate petty stealing of metal, electric globes, waste paper, etc.?"

"What is the best method of conservation of waste material? What would this amount to per year on the average paper, and is not this an asset heretofore unrealized?"

"What economies have members inaugurated in meeting the high cost of production?"

"What has been the per cent. of increase in earnings for the first six months of 1917 as compared with the same period in 1916?"

"What new labor saving equipment have members installed during the past twelve months?"

"Have any members made changes in their mechanical departments for the purpose of increased efficiency?"

"Have any publishers recognized pressmen's or stereotypers' unions during the year?"

"Is it opportune for Southern publishers to give serious consideration to the matter of erecting and operating a paper mill?"

"How many members used the Star Baseball Player in bulleting the World's Series games? How many expect to use it again this year?"

Adjournment.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 11, 10 A. M.

Address: "The Value of Attendance on the Annual Convention of the S.N.P.A.," by F. H. Miller, Montgomery (Ala.) Journal.

Address: "How the S.N.P.A. Can Be Made More Valuable," by W. T. Anderson, Macon (Ga.) Telegraph.

Address: "Efficiency Systems for Daily Newspapers," by P. C. Starr, of Starr Service Corps, Newspaper Experts, Chicago.

Discussions by members on the following:

"What is the best method of interesting the woman reader in your paper?"

"What constitutes a good newspaper?"

"What features have been cut in the interest of conservation of paper or bringing about economies?"

"Should the association, through a committee, or otherwise, undertake to perfect a standardized or comparative cost system, or should there be co-operation between competing newspapers to bring about comparisons of cost upon a unity basis, including paper and ink prices, wage schedules, elimination of waste, etc.?"

"The graduated zone for second class postage: how do members of the Association regard it?"

"How many members are members of the A.B.C.?"

"Have any dropped their membership during the year?"

"Can any business be traced to the A.B.C.?"

"Has any member who does not belong to the A.B.C. lost business through non-membership?"

"How many members are supplying A.B.C. reports to the Association of National Advertisers?"

"What is the best method of holding circulation after you get it?"

"What is the system of handling circulation at reserve officers' training camps or concentration camps, among papers in cities near which these camps are located?"

"Has interest in the war brought about an increase in home delivery or stimulated street sales?"

"To what extent should delinquent mail subscriptions be carried?"

"How many papers have raised their subscription rates, and with what results?"

"What method was pursued in making known the proposed increases?"

AFTERNOON SESSION, 2:30 P. M.

Address: "Use of Old Mats," by James H. Allison, Nashville (Tenn.) Tennessean and American.

Address: "My Experience With Dry Mats," F. C. Withers, Columbia (S. C.) State.

Addresses by the new members, on subjects of their own selection.

Resolutions.

Discussions by members on the following subjects:

"What percentage of the white paper should the receipts from the circulation pay for, after paying the operating expenses in the circulation department, including salaries, postage on paper, traveling men, etc.?"

BONE DRY MOTION VOTED DOWN.

SOUTH CAROLINA EDITORS WONT PLAY POLITICS—MIMS NEW PRESIDENT.

The South Carolina Press Association at its annual convention at Beaufort on June 28 and 29 voted down a resolution calling upon Congress for a "bone dry" law, proposed by the Anti-Saloon League. The editors held that the matter was political and if President Wilson wanted prohibition as a war measure he would so inform the American people.

The association called upon Congress to keep down the cost of news print paper. The following officers were elected:

President, J. L. Mims, Edgefield Advertiser; first vice-president, A. B. Jordan, Billton Herald; second vice-president, H. G. Osteen, Sumter Item; secretary, Joe Sparks, Columbia State; treasurer, B. P. Davies, Barnwell People; chaplain, Rev. W. P. Jacobs, Clinton.

The following were named on the executive committee: Rion McKisick, Greenville News; L. Wigfall, Cheatham, Edgefield Chronicle; Allison Lee, Laurens Advertiser.

SOUTHWEST BOOMING.

Tams Bixby, publisher of the Muskogee (Okla.) Phoenix, sends word that:

"Business was never better in the Southwest. The people down there are not slowing up on their enterprises because of the war. On the contrary, they seem to be increasing their activity if anything. The crop outlook is fine. Bankers and business men in our section do not fear a slump after the close of the conflict."

PRICES GO UP IN MONTANA.

PUBLISHERS CONTINUE TO EXPRESS SATISFACTION WITH RESULTS.

All Montana dailies, with one or two exceptions, increased their circulation rates on July 1. The prices range from $6 to $12 a year.

No permanent curtailment of circulation is expected, although it is believed and hoped by the publishers that much of the duplication will be eliminated. It is thought that the circulation will be back at normal at the end of three months.

The Association of National Advertisers considers the information being gathered by THE FOURTH ESTATE on the effect of price raising so important that it has notified its members about it. The A.N.A. current News Digest Bulletin summarizes what has already been printed.

The price of the Christian Science Monitor of Boston, beginning July 2, was increased from 2 cents to 3 cents a copy.

E. C. Brandenburger, business manager of the Belleville (Ill.) News-Democrat, told THE FOURTH ESTATE that that paper had not raised its subscription price, but had eliminated the weekly colored comic supplement and monthly magazine section without any effect on circulation, thereby saving $35 a week.

A New York state publisher, who did not wish his name used, reports satisfaction with the 2-cent price. His initial loss fluctuated between 30 and 40 per cent, but has now scaled down to less than 25 per cent. Advertising has increased and both advertisers and agencies have shown an attitude of cooperation.

A Western Pennsylvania publisher, who recently went to the 2-cent price, has an even more encouraging experience to tell. His first loss was only 5 per cent, but within 3 months it had been reduced to 3 per cent. Advertisers and agents have been cordial and advertising has shown an increase since the price-raising.

Edwin J. Paxton, president of the Paducah (Ky.) Evening Sun, said: "Our increase in price has proven entirely satisfactory. We frankly believe that a newspaper publisher is committing suicide when he refuses to increase his advertising and circulation rates when confronted with conditions that exist today."

"It is our intention whenever it is necessary to raise our subscription and advertising rates, since publishing a newspaper is just like operating any other manufacturing industry."

Answers continue to be received by THE FOURTH ESTATE to the following six questions it asked of each publisher who raised his price:

A—Are you satisfied with the higher price results?

B—By what percentage has your circulation been affected, either gain or loss?

C—What percentage of loss in circulation was the first result?

D—About how long did it require for the circulation to reach a steady basis again?

E—Has advertising increased or diminished as a result?

F—What has been the attitude of advertisers and advertising agents?

All are satisfied with the results and they say their advertisers are, too.

For instance:

Adrian (Mich.) Daily Telegram:

A—Yes.

B—About 7 per cent loss.

C—Ten per cent.

D—Three months.

E and F—No difference.

Cleveland Waehter & Ansiger:

A—Yes, regret we did not do it six months ago.

B—Too early to say; probably about 1½ per cent.

C—Less than 2 per cent.

E—No effect so far.

F—Very much interested.

Waynesboro (Pa.) Daily Record:

A—Yes.

B—About 3 to 5 per cent loss.

C—About 15 to 30 per cent loss.

D—One to two months.

E—Very little change; if any, a gain.

F—Favorably, with few exceptions.

Toronto (Pa.) Telegram & News:

A—Yes.

B—Slight gain.

C—About 10 per cent loss.

D—A month.

E—Increased.

A Genuine Space Buyers' Manual

The New Special Representatives National Directory

THE FOURTH ESTATE will on July 28th publish a special section to comprise complete lists of the Special Daily Newspaper Representatives in New York, Chicago, Detroit, Boston, Philadelphia, St. Louis, San Francisco and other cities, and a complete list of newspapers of the country having representatives, with the names of those representatives against each, both East and West.

In 1914 THE FOURTH ESTATE published a similar list, but the one now in preparation will be much larger and vastly improved in method of presentation. It will be up to the minute and as complete and comprehensive as the large organization and exceptional facilities of THE FOURTH ESTATE can make it.

This Special Representatives National Directory will be truly national in its character and scope, and will be a genuine Space Buyer's Manual of daily usefulness to national advertisers, advertising agents and agencies, supplying information nowhere else obtainable in one publication.

Advertising will be accepted for this special edition at regular rates.

F—Favorable.

Lethbridge (Ala.) Herald:

A—Yes.

B—Not affected.

C—None.

E—No.

F—No comment.

Antigo (Wis.) Daily Journal:

A—Yes.

B—None.

C—About 2 per cent.

D—About 3 weeks.

E—Rates increased; no business lost.

F—Agencies coming nicely now.

Evansville (Ill.) News-Index:

A—Yes.

B—Hardly 1 per cent loss.

C—Approximately 20 per cent news stand sales, which have been largely regained.

D—Three months.

E—No effect.

F—No comment.

Springfield (Ohio) News:

A—Yes.

B—Healthy increase.

C—Small loss.

D—About a month or 6 weeks.

E—No effect on advertising.

Philadelphia Evening Bulletin:

A—Necessary and satisfactory.

B—Loss of from 4 to 6 per cent as compared with last year.

C—About 12 per cent.

D—About 4 months.

E—Impossible to say.

F—Favorable.

Aberdeen (S. D.) American:

A—Yes.

B—Loss of 5 per cent by raise; 10 per cent by enforcement of payment-in-advance rule.

C—About 10 per cent.

D—About 3 months.

E—Gross receipts increased; inches diminished.

F—Unfavorable to increase, but little national advertising has been lost.

Atlanta Constitution:

A—Yes.

B—About 10 per cent loss.

C—About 15 per cent loss.

D—Approximately 6 months.

E—Increase in advertising.

F—Most agents met raise in rate in good spirit.

Winnipeg (Man.) Free Press:

A—Yes.

B—Less than anticipated.

D—Six weeks.

E—Not affected.

F—Advancing advertising rates also, and advertisers realize that they must share increased cost of production with readers.

St. Louis Republic:

A—Yes.

B—Average gain of 9,494 copies daily during April, 1917, over April, 1916.

C—About 10 per cent loss on total circulation, mostly on street sales.

D—About 90 days.

E—Increased.

F—No complaint.

Red Deer (Alta.) Advocate:

A—Yes.

B—No appreciable change.

C—Lost not more than half a dozen subscribers.

E—No change.

F—No comment.

Berkeley (Cal.) Gazette:

A—Yes.

B—Slight gain.

C—Small loss.

D—One month.

E—Increased.

F—No comment.

Livingston (Mont.) Enterprise:

A—Yes.

B—Slight gain.

C—About 10 per cent.

E—Not adversely affected; now 12 per cent better than a year ago.

Altoona (Pa.) Mirror:

A—Yes.

B—Practically no difference.

C—About 2 per cent.

D—About 3 months.

E—Not affected.

F—Favorable.

Paducah (Ky.) Sun:

A—Entirely satisfactory; increased subscription rate 25 per cent January 1 and by March 1 records showed loss of only 4 per cent.

B and C—At no time was our loss greater than 7 per cent.

D—40 days.

E—Increases have not made a cent's difference in advertising, advertisers realizing we were justly entitled to the advances.

F—Trouble only with two advertising agencies; it took only three or four letters to straighten it out to our mutual satisfaction.

NEW ZEALAND HIT BY HIGH COSTS.

PUBLISHERS, AS IN AMERICA, FORCED TO RAISE PRICES
—THEIR ASSOCIATION.

High cost of production was the chief topic discussed at the annual meeting of the Newspaper Proprietors of New Zealand in Wellington and the price of all newspapers was advanced on April 1 from 1 penny to 2 pence (2 to 4 cents) as a result of that body's deliberations.

Deep concern for future supplies of news print and other publishing necessities was expressed by P. Selig, president of the association, who rendered a report on the activities of the past year. Newspapers were compelled to "run close" to their margins of safety for the first three months of 1917, as the initial shipment of paper from Powell River did not arrive until March.

Contracts for news print for 1917-18 are "freight at buyers' risk" and at prices over twice as large as those prevailing before the war.

Mr. Selig was re-elected president for the coming year and will serve with the following officers: Vice-president, F. E. Hyman; secretary,

L. J. BERRY.

Secretary-Treasurer of the N.P.A.N.Z. treasurer, L. J. Berry; auditor, R. Bell; executive committee, H. Horton, L. Blundell, F. Pirani, G. Fenwick and E. A. Jones; awards committee, F. E. Hyman, F. Pirani, P. Selig, P. Bond and W. C. Weston. The next meeting will be held in Wellington.

He recommended the strictest economy in the use of news print and other supplies and pointed out that he had cut down the material used in the municipal offices 60 per cent as compared with ante-bellum consumption.

THE PRESS ASSOCIATION MEETING.

The New Zealand Press Association, meeting at the same time in Wellington, heard a report that the association had secured rights to both the great cable services now supplying Australian newspapers and was able to give the pick of the messages of both.

During the past year, the report stated, over 750,000 words had been supplied to the association's 74

P. SELIG.

PRESIDENT OF THE NEWSPAPER PROPRIETORS' ASSOCIATION OF NEW ZEALAND

clients and an increase over that number was predicted for the coming year. Despite delays in transmission, due to repairs and the pressure of government work, the service was reported to be highly satisfactory.

The following members were present:

Chairman P. Selig, H. Brett, Hon. G. Carson, C. S. Smith, F. Pirani, H. Horton, L. Blundell, P. Bond, C. East, C. H. Walker, R. P. Furness, I. A. McKay, T. C. List, A. McNicol, I. Coombe, W. C. Weston.

R. J. Gilmour, A. E. Jones, E. C. Huie, E. G. Kerr, R. Bell, F. E. Hyman, R. A. Duigan, G. T. Allen, A. E. Copping, W. Dinwiddie, E. Darley, W. McCullough, W. R. Kettle, C. J. Nightingale, W. Atkin, A. E. Manning, A. A. Lucas, A. L. Muir, W. J. Geddis, C. Earle and G. H. Dixon.

Messrs. Brett, Horton, Carson and Pirani, the retiring directors, were re-elected without opposition and F. Shaw was re-elected auditor.

HISTORY OF THE ASSOCIATION.

The Newspaper Proprietors' Association of New Zealand was established in 1898 and its membership has been increasing every year since. It now numbers 70 members, including the principal newspapers and proprietors in the Dominion of New Zealand.

Some of the objects of the association are:

To promote and safeguard newspaper interests when they are in danger of being adversely affected by parliamentary action.

To influence reform of the libel law and other legislation affecting the newspaper press.

To provide machinery by which members, when proceeded against for libel, may combine for their common defense.

To promote, as far as possible, uniformity of practice in advertising charges.

To assist in regulating the rates of wages and conditions of labor in newspaper offices.

To facilitate cooperation among members in all matters affecting their common interests.

The association has proved of incalculable benefit to its members. It has been instrumental in greatly reducing the amount of free publicity which found a place in the columns of the press.

Objectionable and fraudulent advertisements have been eliminated. It was estimated that in one year these to the value of £15,000 have been rejected.

Advertising agents are controlled by a set of regulations to which they must subscribe before being placed in the associations' "accredited list." A certificate, accrediting the agent, is issued annually on payment of a small license fee. Only to agents on the "accredited list" is commission allowed for business offered.

Through the solicitation of the association the government has adopted the practice of forwarding to the newspapers by post advance copies of lengthy documents to be presented to the houses of Parliament, such as the financial, works and railway statements for publication on a certain day, instead of using the telegraph at the last moment, thus obviating the chances of mistakes and blockage of the wires, and saving telegraphic charges.

Forty-four years ago Mr. Selig, who has a good grasp of the mechanical as well as the literary side of a newspaper, entered the government printing office as a copyholder. He has gone through the reporting and commercial departments; he founded and edited the New Zealand Referee, purchased by the company he at present manages, and incorporated with the Weekly Press, an illustrated weekly magazine known over the length and breadth of New Zealand, Australia and other parts of the world.

Mr. Selig, who was president for many years of the local Master Printers' Association (being an ardent supporter of typothetae and the cost system) is a director, and was chairman last year of the United Press Association, which distributes one of the finest telegraphic and cables services in the world to its subscribers.

L. J. Berry, who has a newspaper experience of some eighteen years and is now circulation manager for the Christchurch Press Company, Ltd., has been secretary and treasurer of the association since 1914.

NEW ZEALAND'S INTEREST IN THE UNITED STATES.

EDITOR THE FOURTH ESTATE.

SIR: I read THE FOURTH ESTATE most religiously and interestedly and can imagine what a busy time you are surely having.

The paper situation must be giving you a lot of thought and I have been greatly struck with your reports of the paper commission. I see that seven manufacturers, including Messrs. P. Dodge and Chaboon, are being proceeded against for not obeying the decision of the commission regarding the selling price of news.

Why shouldn't manufacturers take advantage of the opportunity to make up for the many lean years most of them—the I.P. Company particularly, according to report—have had.

The New Zealand Newspaper Proprietors' Association at their last general meeting decided that it was advisable to increase the selling price of all dailies.

Unfortunately, when the time came some of the centers—notably Auckland and Christchurch—could not agree, but the Wellington papers, both town and country, are now two-pence per copy.

The circulation of the Post dropped but little and the additional revenue helps pay the increased cost of paper.

We are giving the selling agents considerably better terms and they are working extra hard to keep their sales up to the old standard.

This country is remarkably prosperous, but we may feel the adverse effects of the war should the shortage of steamers mean our products being held up here. This is a great little country in every way and you should visit it so soon as you can get away for a spell.

The spending power of the people is very high and New Zealand should be a great field for American goods, particularly now that America has definitely and openly taken sides with the Allies.

I can quite imagine the excitement in New York over the great event and the immense demand for the papers—another additional strain on the poor news manufacturers.

I can also imagine your interest in and excitement at the news that America has at last openly gone in with the Allies. Needless to say, the news was received with real pleasure in this part of the world.

On page 11 of THE FOURTH ESTATE of April 21 is an article, "Recovering Lost News Print," which has rather interested me. We, of course, have a certain amount of paper damaged in transit, as have the other Wellington newspapers, and I shall be glad if you will ask the Seybold Company to send particulars of the machines they make suitable for cutting up small quantities of reel news.

PUTTING OVERTHE BIG CAMPAIGNS

ARTICLE IV.

SOUTHERN EXPRESS COMPANY TAUGHT CITIES OF DIXIE TO BUY DIRECT FROM THE FARMER—"BY EXPRESS."

BY W. LIVINGSTON LARNED.

The hard headed merchant or manufacturer who has cultivated a suspicion of all advertising, because he has never tried it himself or because some one experience in the past was disastrous, is finding it difficult to reconcile his purely personal views with certain developments of the militaristic present.

Uncle Sam believes in advertising! He is decidedly in favor of using newspaper space.

When he wants to put over a big deal national or local, he lies him to the "Billville Banner" or the highly profitable "Daily Democrat."

And these appropriations have not been squandered.

RESULTS, in big letters, have invariably been the reward.

Take the Liberty Bond campaign. Here was a nation-wide propaganda to be stimulated, every little hamlet and village and town and cross-roads community must do its bit.

Clever copywriters and ingenious artists set to work and the problem was handled just as an agency would handle a new soap, or a kitchen cabinet or any other commodity. The same principles were brought to bear—the same elements of human interest.

The Liberty Bond campaign was a hum-dinger. Our loyal country oversubscribed it.

And bankers concede that "advertising did it"—localized advertising—newspaper advertising.

The Red Cross appeal, recently closed is another striking instance of the power of the ad and of the press. That united driving force can batter down any prejudice, indifference or township inaction.

Enlistment campaigns, carried on in small-town papers, have brought the men, when nothing else would. Leave it to the copy expert to have his way with the public. He'll reach the heart, the pride or the pocket-book, sooner or later, by a studious method all his own.

Not until recently have advertisers themselves fully appreciated the rugged strength and vitality of the force they employed. Advertising will sell a sentiment, or an ideal. It will market human qualities, good or bad. It will rectify wrong and set entire states in order. It will throw logs on the rails of the nefarious food juggler, and make the grafter sowl for help.

Advertising, we now realize, aways morals as well as money. Advertising is the master-lever of our day. It will pry almost any old oyster loose.

The increasing terrors of the food situation are known to all. When Neighbor Jones says that one lamb chop, resembling a crack in the plate when cooked, costs him 18 good cents, we no longer call him an ignorant City dweller—people residing "in town," away from intimate contact with the farmer and his farm —face a condition that is positively distressing. How to live and to give, at a time when one is well nigh prohibitive and the other a duty one owes one's self and one's conscience, is a puzzle past the average man's solution.

SIMPLIFYING DISTRIBUTION.

It was left to the Southern Express Company to take a giant stride forward in the right direction.

If, somewhere up and down the line of trade, a bat-full of cooking greens increased in price from a fraction of a cent to fifteen, then why not shorten that circuitous route and decrease the number of vacation stop-overs.

"From the Farm—Direct to the Consumer" was not a new thought, but it offered new possibilities in an advertising way.

Perhaps Mrs. Housewife and Mr. Bread-winner had not been told all the facts by the mail order catalogs and the big department stores. A great many articles of merchandise had been coming and going via mail and express, for a great many busy years, but what about sending a cabbage to Mrs. Smith, in the city, from that great diversified farm less than 50 miles away?

Some genius had devised an egg-carrier that would negotiate a dozen white-leghorn globes of nutriment, without cracking eleven and a half of them. Mrs. Smith should and could be told that eggs were cheaper and fresher when ordered direct from the farm—by express.

The ideal and the idea were welded into a reality.

But this innovative story must needs be "put over" with the public. It was pretty radical. Could the housewife be made to dig herself out of her own traditional way of doing things? It wasn't an easy job.

THE NEWSPAPER'S PART.

Obviously, the quickest approach was via localized newspaper campaigns.

Advertisements, varying in size from 2 columns, 4 inches to 4 columns, 6 inches were constructed, and in liberal quantities.

Every advertisement was illustrated specialists in farm scenes being employed. The farmer was shown reaching across the intervening miles and handing supplies to the eager housewife on the opposite side.

Between them, in phantom form, sped a fast express train.

The fact was necessarily emphasized that all goods were shipped via the quickest route.

They were not dawdled through by freight; slow trains were taboo. Express was the word, in more senses than one.

It was conveyed to the reader that a head of lettuce could be ordered, so prompt was the delivery. Otherwise perishable goods could be shipped with safety—dressed fowls, butter, melons, eggs, fruit of all kinds—even peaches.

The economy of the procedure was taken up in some of the advertisements and it was pointed out that aside from receiving a better grade of produce the express way was the economical way.

But here was the way the copy man put it:

"HELP THE CITY SOLVE THE PURE FOOD PROBLEM"

"The city is clamoring for all you raise—chickens, turkeys, fruits, vegetables, eggs, honey, milk and meat. Supply the city's demand and deliver at their door by express. Every one wants the things the country can give whether they can live there or not.

"WE MAKE YOUR MARKET"

"We have organized a Market Bureau to help you sell what you have to offer from your garden, your orchard, your dairy or your poultry yard. The city consumers are anxious to buy what you have to sell. The way to get together is through the service of the Southern Express Company.

"We will be glad to aid any producer or shipper by putting into the hands of consumers reasonable information as to food products shipped or produced by him. Address all such information to your local express agent and he will do the rest.

"Our low rates on food products, prompt service and free city-delivery puts you in daily touch with the city trade and there's money in it for you.

"The foundation of this advertising campaign is to broaden the consumption and to find a greater number of consumers over a larger field of territory. This means more consuming power and better prices.

"A number of people are not so situated as to be able to deal directly with the producer, but there is a wide field for the development of direct sales of carefully selected and carefully packed products of the farm, orchard, garden, etc., to the ultimate consumer.

"The producer who will give attention to the grading and packing of his products can reap the advantages of this campaign, but without the cooperation of the grower, producer, etc., in this respect, as well as prompt attention to all orders received, the carriers can do little.

The campaign was general throughout the Southern states and space in rural district papers was used as well as the dailies of the larger cities. There was method in this.

Farmers were to be educated as well—they must realize that this constructive advertising was for their benefit; without expenditure a demand was to be created for overflown crops, an uncultivated source of revenue opened. They were to respond quickly and efficiently to orders when the orders did begin to materialize.

Six months had not passed before the remarkably beneficial results of the campaign began to materialize. The farmer himself was perhaps the first to see the great possibilities of the scheme and joined in most heartily.

Now that conservation is doubly necessary—now that the President himself is pleading with housewives to practice rigid economy in every branch of house-keeping, the newspaper advertising of the Southern Express Company is indeed welcome.

And another forceful instructive campaign is in the making.

JOURNALISTS' WAGES IN AUSTRALIA.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JULY 7, 1917

MEDDLESOME LEGISLATION IN CONGRESS.

The so-called Corrupt Practices Act is dead, with its objectionable "rider" on the subject of newspaper censorship, or at least has entered upon a long sleep.

Newspaper publishers, harassed by the news print situation, new Federal taxation and a prospective increase in postage rates, need not fear at this stage the "last straw" in the form of an enactment of a Corrupt Practices Act that would strike at the freedom of the press under guise of requiring the identification of paid political advertising.

This is, in effect, the intimation that comes to THE FOURTH ESTATE from persons in the confidence of Senator Owen and the other members of the United States Senate (including a special subcommittee) who are supposed to be strong in support of the Corrupt Practices Bill that attracted so much attention in the closing session of the last Congress.

The bill that is so obnoxious to most newspaper men was reintroduced in the present special session of Congress, but its sponsors have admitted to one another and to a few associates that there is no chance that it will pass or even be taken up at the present session.

It is understood that Senator Owen feels that the only time a Corrupt Practices Act can stand a ghost of a show of approval by the national legislature is immediately after a fiercely contested political campaign when the people are wrought up by rumors of corruption, etc. The farther we get from such a political campaign the less the chance of "reform." Hence, the proposition is likely to be allowed to become a dead letter.

To turn to another angle of the legislative situation that has special interest for newspaper executives it may be predicted that there is "not a chance" at the present session for several pending bills that have more or less strong newspaper support.

One of these is the measure designed to relieve newspaper publishers from the necessity of filing with the Post Office Department semi-annual statements of circulation.

The Stephens "Honest Advertising Bill," which with national advertisers lined up on one side and department store proprietors lined up on the other, has driven many news-

The advertising forms close on Thursday. Advertisements should be received as early in the week as possible to insure proper classification.

ADVERTISING RATES.

Transient, 50 cents a line; agate measure (14 lines to the inch; 140 lines to the column; 560 lines to the page).

One page, $280; Front page, $400. Discounts for consecutive insertions: One month, 10 per cent; two months, 20 per cent; three months, 30 per cent; six months, 40 per cent; one year, 50 per cent. Discounts based upon advance payment.

Small advertisements under classified headings, such as Help Wanted, For Sale, To Let, Instruction, Writers, Correspondents, Office Necessities, 25 cents a line (about 7 words) each insertion, without discount. Situations Wanted 10 cents a line net.

Advertisements in special position (not less than 23 lines in depth of column) double price.

paper publishers to the fence, will not be taken up by the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce which has had its hands full with the "Trading With the Enemy Act" the latter, by the way, a prospective statute that will touch newspaper advertising interests via its stipulations relative to the patents and trademarks of enemy subjects.

Chairman Smith of the Patents Committee of the House of Representatives informed THE FOURTH ESTATE this week that there is not the slightest likelihood that his committee will consent to attempt to break in on the war program with a Design Registration bill such as has been proposed to protect, among other things, originality in advertising copy.

Similarly, there is nothing stirring in the direction of the "Misbranding" Bill, which was laid over by the last Congress and which would, if enacted, afford the first national statute against untruthful advertising.

PRESS AGENCY NEARING THE SATURATION POINT.

Press agency, as distinguished from paid advertising, and a strict separation of the wheat from the chaff in news dissemination, has recently come in for several pretty hard knocks at Washington.

The worst blow sustained by the publicity lobby came in the form of the denial by the Interstate Commerce Commission of the plea of the railroads for permission to advance freight rates 15 per cent.

The railroads, unmindful apparently of the bitter lessons of past experience, elected in this instance to sidestep paid advertising and rely solely upon free publicity to reconcile the shippers of the country to a rate increase.

Failure of this campaign ought to convince the railroads once and for all; for never, by the confession of leading railroad authorities, have the transportation interests mustered such elaborate publicity forces in any public campaign.

Tons upon tons of press matter were sent out from the several headquarters at Washington and it would seem that a drive so barren of results would all but compel a revision of policy.

Even Governmental publicity is likely to come in for a few "falls" ere many weeks have elapsed, for all the saving grace it has thus far enjoyed through the anxiety of the newspapers to support Uncle Sam in this time of trial.

One circumstance that bodes ill for the whole cause of Governmental publicity is the strife within the ranks of the Federal press agents—"censors" arrayed against one another in conflict of authority and publicity seekers working at cross purposes.

Even more menacing, however, is the surfeit of press matter that is going out from Washington and that is calculated to swamp the everyday editor even if he were haunted by no news print nightmare.

Onlookers who have watched the flood of press matter pouring out from Washington are asking themselves how soon the "saturation point" will be reached.

To print merely the daily grist from the Department of Agriculture, the food administration, etc., would make a big hole in the news space of the average daily lay-out.

Overshadowing such gentle solicitation for space is the special pressure brought to bear from the fact that each succeeding week marks a special event that needs all the space that can be spared.

There was Registration Day, the wind-up of the Liberty Loan campaign, Red Cross Week and Army Recruiting Week, etc.

Close observers of the gentle art of grabbing newspaper space are beginning to ask how long this sort of thing can keep up without some loss of potency on the part of the whole mass of appeals for space.

As though there were not enough press stories going out from Washington in frank envelopes every day, some editors throughout the country are beginning to grumble because the Creel Committee of Information has no mailing list for its press stuff.

The committee is getting out anywhere from 8 to 26 mimeographed stories per day, but in order to obtain these it is necessary for a publication to have a Washington representative who will call in person each afternoon at the headquarters of the committee.

Papers that have no Washington correspondents evidently feel that they are being left out in the cold.

Meanwhile the Creel Committee continues to have troubles of its own.

With the State Department, the Navy Department and the War Department each going its own sweet way in handling publicity matter independently of the Committee on Information, there is gossip to the effect that certain members of Congress are getting ready to complain because of the alleged fancy salaries paid to Director Creel, Ida M. Tarbell, Will Irwin, Kendall Banning and other friends of Mr. Creel imported to Washington from New York for the occasion.

NOTE AND COMMENT.

The Daily News Record, a newspaper published in New York for the textile trade, has just instituted a department consisting of a classification of business articles appearing in current periodicals, the purpose of which is to give the business man directions where to find general and specific information of various phases of commercial activity.

The value of a compilation of sources of information such as this is obvious, including as it does every periodical devoted either to business subjects or carrying articles on more general forces. THE FOURTH ESTATE is among the publications listed as being regularly examined.

Almost coincident with the arrival of American troops on French soil, the New York Sun and Evening Sun started to raise funds to keep the boys supplied with tobacco. The members of both papers' staffs contributed liberally to start the fund and other moneys quickly arrived at the Sun office from all parts of the country. The idea has been strongly endorsed by officers of the Army, Navy and Marine Corps.

The New York American on July 3 printed a special eight-page, half-size section devoted to the President's proclamation on the rules governing the selective draft. The rules were briefly and clearly summarized and explained, giving the exemption rules, method of examination and full particulars on the duties of exemption boards.

The form, which was secured by printing two four-column pages in the space of a regular newspaper page, makes the section easy to read, handle and keep for reference.

The Mergenthaler Linotype Company has just issued a booklet of specimens of display in classified advertisements, effected by the use of one and two-letter matrices. A number of linotype faces are shown, especially adaptable for use in newspaper classified and miscellaneous small advertisements.

One of the errors most deeply ingrained in the public mind is an erroneous idea of the supposedly enormous sums paid for advertising, which many believe increases the price to the consumer of all advertised articles and thus constitutes an important factor in the higher cost of living.

The Association of National Advertisers has been able to collect facts and figures from its members which show the absolute error of this view.

Publishers, advertisers and agents alike have a vital interest in bringing these facts to the attention of the public, especially at this time when so much legislation vitally concerning the publishing and advertising interests is under consideration.

Now or never is the time for us to let in the light of truth on this subject.

Farm, Stock & Home, Minneapolis, is issuing a series of data and service booklets, intended to furnish definite and accurate information, secured from authoritative sources, about the agricultural situation in the Northwest, Minnesota, Wisconsin, the Dakotas, Montana and northern Iowa.

"We might as well attempt to live in the twentieth century without electricity, without the telephone, without the railroad, as to attempt to do business, to grow and prosper without the constructive daily newspaper," says W. C. D'Arcy, newly elected president of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World.

The Brooklyn (N. Y.) Eagle recently took advantage of building legislation pending at the state capital to work up a full page of small advertisements of business houses whose work would be favorably affected by the passage of the law. The page was not run until word was received that the bill had been approved by Governor Whitman, but it was kept in type and was published in the next edition.

WONDER WHAT THE OTHER TWO THINGS ARE.

"F.P.A." in New York Tribune.

If Secretary Baker knew more about the newspaper game, he would not, we believe, cramp the power of George Creel and his vice board. But it is proverbial that one of the three things everybody thinks he knows how to do is to run a newspaper.

PURELY PERSONAL.

William W. Moss, Jr., graduate of the University of Virginia School of Journalism and former secretary of the university's publicity committee, has been appointed city editor of the Post Exchange, a newspaper published by the soldiers of the United States Army Ambulance Corps stationed at Allentown, Pa.

Charles A. Hagner of the Wilmington (Del.) Evening Journal's staff has been elected secretary of a new department of elections for that city appointed to conduct a special license election in the fall.

Ben S. Boyce, son of W. D. Boyce, the publisher of the Indianapolis Times and Chicago Saturday Blade and other weekly papers, has joined the United States Signal Corps.

George Carter, editor of the Wilmington (Del.) Evening Journal, has been appointed secretary of the National Defence Committee for that city.

Jason Rogers, publisher of the New York Globe, won a sweepstakes match at the Essex Falls (N. J.) Golf Club last week, with a score of 85-17-74. He finished second in the June tournament of that club, being defeated in the final, 1 up.

George T. Kenney, assistant city editor of the Chicago Herald, is on a vacation which he does not propose to have disturbed by "S.O.S." calls from the office. He has not announced his destination.

L. B. Ashcom, a member of the Johnstown (Pa.) Leader's staff, has been appointed an alderman in Johnstown. He will continue newspaper work for a time.

Earl Bradley, formerly a reporter on the Battle Creek (Mich.) Moon, and now in France as a member of an ambulance corps, writes to friends in Battle Creek that the Americans are being feted by the French in a manner that is most pleasing to newspaper men, not accustomed to that sort of thing at home.

Mrs. Lois H. Allen and Mrs. A. M. Cochran, prominent Colorado newspaper women, had an active share in the recent war conference held in Denver for the purpose of aligning Colorado interests behind national war aims.

Richard O. Hansen, who was on the reporting staff of the Salem (Ore.) Statesman prior to being called into military service with M. Company, Third Oregon Infantry, is now in charge of a recruiting office at Pendleton, Ore.

John C. Shaffer, publisher of the Shafter list of newspapers, is mourning the death of his brother, W. Howard Shaffer, which occurred a few days ago at Asbury Park, N. J.

ITALIAN EDITOR QUILTS.

Manuel Lo Presti, editor of La Notizia, a Boston daily newspaper printed in Italian, who was arrested by the police, charged with criminal libel on account of alleged references in the newspaper to the Prince of Udine, has resigned.

The head of the Italian War Mission visited Boston on Monday. After the appearance of the newspaper a demonstration took place in which all available copies of the paper were seized by a crowd.

SUCCEEDS HIS FATHER.

The Littlestown (Pa.) Independent is now in entire charge of Burton Alleman, who succeeds his father, the late David B. Alleman. For the past three years the present publisher has virtually directed the paper.

VACATION NOTES.

Miss Edna N. Taylor, editor of the woman's page of the Wilmington (Del.) Every Evening, is on a two-months' vacation. Miss Alice L. Hoop is in charge of the page for the summer.

Arthur C. Scholl, Associated Press operator for the Wilmington (Del.) Every Evening, has returned from Allentown, Pa., where he spent his vacation.

Arthur E. McEvoy, city and news editor of the New Britain Herald, has returned from a brief vacation passed at the shore.

M. D. Myers, head of the New Britain Herald's proof desk, is on a vacation to his home in northern New York state.

Joseph H. Martin, president and editor of the Wilmington (Del.) Sunday Star, has just returned from a two weeks' vacation trip.

Philip A. Steinbach of the news staff of the Wilmington (Del.) Every Evening, is spending a week's vacation in Philadelphia, his former home.

J. Benjamin Rumbf, assistant city editor of the Wilmington (Del.) Every Evening, enjoyed a vacation last week, part of which was spent in Baltimore.

NEW BUSINESS MANAGER IN RICHMOND.

Samuel T. Clover, editor and publisher of the Richmond (Va.) Evening Journal, has promoted Walter A. Beswick, for the last year advertising manager, to be business manager. Mr. Beswick will continue to give his personal attention to the direction of advertising affairs.

The Evening Journal has made fine progress since Mr. Clover purchased it June 1, 1916. Advertising patronage, as well as circulation, has made sturdy strides.

A successful circulation contest, embracing $15,000 in prizes, was concluded on June 30, resulting in substantial increases in high class circulation. The Evening Journal advanced its subscription price from one cent to two cents on June 4.

AGARD IN DEMAND.

Clarence M. Agard, a former city and news editor of the Bridgeport (Conn.) Post and Brockton (Mass.) Times, served as publicity director of the Connecticut Prison Association's committee on delinquent women in their state-wide educational campaign during the recent legislative session to secure authorization for the establishment of a woman's reformatory. The campaign was a success, a generous amount being appropriated.

During the campaign he also served as personal press representative for Dr. Valeria H. Parker, field secretary of the Connecticut Society of Social Hygiene, in charge of an extensive publicity campaign. For the third consecutive year, the publicity campaign of the Connecticut Conference of Charities and Correction was handled by him.

ANOTHER MISSOURIAN FOR JAPAN.

Frank H. King, former editor of the University Daily Missourian, sailed from San Francisco June 30 for Tokyo to become a member of the staff of the Japan Advertiser.

King is the fourth University of Missouri journalist to join the staff of the Advertiser. The others are Oscar Riley, J. G. Babb, Jr., and Ralph H. Turner.

Russell L. Richards and Charles Roster, of the same school, will sail soon to be employed on the Honolulu (H. I.) Star-Bulletin.

STAFF CHANGES.

William W. T. Squire, former police reporter for the Hartford (Conn.) Courant, is temporarily in charge of the New Britain (Conn.) Herald's proof desk while awaiting examination for admission to the military training camp at Plattsburg.

C. E. Wilson, who for more than a year has been on the news staff of the Salem (Ore.) Capital Journal, has resigned to do newspaper work in Helena, Mont. His place at Salem has been taken by Harlan Hoffman, a Salem man.

Edward H. Harris has become advertising manager of the Donaldson Publishing Company, publisher of Oak Leaves, the Austinite and Forest Leaves, at Oak Park, Ill.

Lillian Macdonald, whose work for Boston newspapers has attracted some attention, has recently become an editorial writer for the Milwaukee Daily News.

J. A. Henderson, one time a Chicago special newspaper representative and later manager of the agency department of the Direct Advertising Service, Inc., Birmingham, Ala., is now with the advertising department of the Decatur (Ill.) Daily Review.

James Russell, former city editor of the Chicago Herald but out of the "game" for some time, has gone back into newspaper work as special political writer of the Herald.

W. Douglas Gordan of the Richmond (Va.) Times-Dispatch editorial staff has resigned to go with the Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch. He has been dramatic and music critic on the Richmond newspaper for the past fifteen years and has also written editorials and literary reviews.

James C. Latimer, for six years manager of the Richmond (Va.) Times-Dispatch News Bureau, has resigned to become editor of the Staunton (Va.) Daily News. He had been in Richmond for six years.

Eula Young Morrison, former woman's page editor and short story writer for the Richmond (Va.) Evening Journal, has joined the Times-Dispatch staff as book reviewer and dramatic critic.

Leo Bejack, of the Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser advertising department, has joined the Navy as a seaman and expects to see service shortly.

Kenneth C. Davenport, of the editorial staff of the Joplin (Mo.) Globe, has gone to France to serve as an ambulance driver.

"Jack" Henderson has joined the staff of Ryan & Inman, Chicago newspaper representatives. He was formerly with the Chicago office of Modern Priscilla.

Don Chamberlain, who has been covering the Wisconsin legislature for the United Press, has been transferred back to the Chicago office, the legislators having concluded their sessions.

William Martin, telegraph editor of the Springfield (Ill.) State Register, has resigned and returned to his home in Sullivan, Ill., owing to other business holdings there. He is succeeded by Malcolm M. Adams, who has been operating the Capital News Bureau.

NEWSBOY OF 1860 SELLS PAPERS FOR RED CROSS.

John T. Hilton, Civil War veteran and engineer, who claims to be the oldest newsboy in Paterson, N. J., having sold the old Paterson Intelligencer over fifty years ago, offered his services to the Paterson Press-Guardian on June 22, when that paper turned over its entire circulation receipts to the Red Cross.

WEDDING BELLS.

Edwin N. Lewis of the New York Tribune staff, now on leave of absence at the Plattsburg military training camp, and Miss Mary H. Hall of New Britain have become engaged. Mr. Lewis was for three years a member of the New Britain Herald's editorial staff and took a course in journalism at Columbia prior to joining the Tribune staff. Date of the wedding was not made public.

Joseph J. Early, political writer for the Brooklyn (N. Y.) Standard-Union, and Miss Olga Muriel Cook were married in Brooklyn on June 30.

James R. White, of the Detroit Journal advertising staff, and Miss Arline E. Wilkes, daughter of Robert R. Wilkes, for thirty-five years on the staff of the New York World, were married in Flushing, N. Y., on June 30.

Frank T. Buell, publicity manager of Luna Park, Coney Island, and Miss Estella Birney, leading woman of "The Prince of Pilsen" company, were married on June 26.

R. Howard Berg, circulation manager of the Miami (Fla.) Daily Metropolis, and Mrs. Berg were in New York during the past week on their honeymoon. Mrs. Berg demonstrated her art in cooking in the stops made at camp along the Dixie Highway between New York and Florida, as the newlyweds made their way North by auto.

Miss Lisetta Neukom, a newspaper woman of wide experience, including service on Battle Creek, Kalamazoo, Lansing, Milwaukee and Philadelphia newspapers, was married June 23 at Beaumont, Tex., to Max Brown Higgins, a civil engineer. Mrs. Higgins will retire from newspaper work and the newlyweds will live at Port Arthur, Tex.

Charles Coddington, editor of a weekly paper at Cartersville, Ill., and Miss Alice Fellows, cashier of the Racine (Wis.) Journal-News, were married recently. The wedding marked the culmination of a newspaper romance, Coddington having been a reporter on the Journal-News at the time he met Miss Fellows.

Irving N. Mack, a Chicago publicity man, and Mrs. Mary Harris of Chicago are to be married soon, according to an announcement just made. The date has not been announced.

H. B. Crozier, city editor of the Galveston (Tex.) News, and Miss Grace Younger, of Houston, have been married.

MCGRAW CASE RE-OPENED.

AS THE FOURTH ESTATE goes to press, the directors of the National League of Professional Baseball Clubs are hearing testimony in the case of John J. McGraw, manager of the New York Giants, which was reopened at the request of the New York Chapter of the Baseball Writers' Association. The directors of the league had closed the case recently following the repudiation by McGraw of an interview, which the writers allege to have been authentic in every detail.

NOT WITH THE REPUBLICAN.

William Hale Thompson, mayor of Chicago, who has been warmly defended in his pro-German attitude by the Weekly Republican, has issued a denial of any official or financial connection with the Republican.

The Republican has made repeated criticism of President Wilson and the general war policy and has been, as a consequence, under the questioning eye of Federal authorities in Chicago, although no official action has been taken against the paper.

THE RIGHTS OF A WHOLESALE

BROUGHT UP IN COURT BY PICTORIAL REVIEW IN SUING CURTIS CO.

The case of the Pictorial Review Company against the Curtis Publishing Company, for an injunction under the Clayton Act, to prevent the Curtis Company from interfering with the distribution of the Pictorial Review by independent wholesalers, is explained by R. A. MacKinnon, its circulation director, to THE FOURTH ESTATE as follows (the case has not yet come to trial):

"At the time the action was begun the Pictorial Review asked for a temporary injunction effective until the case could be tried. This motion was heard upon printed papers and no witnesses were brought into court by either side.

"The court before whom this motion was heard has decided not to grant such a temporary injunction.

"The effect of this decision is to leave the matter as it was until the case is tried.

"The opinion handed down by the court in deciding the motion is given up almost entirely to a discussion of the system of selling the Curtis publications through boys.

"Upon the trial we do not think that the boy question will be a decisive factor, because we abandoned any idea of a boy sale for the Pictorial Review in February of this year, and so notified all wholesalers at the time.

"We had then come to the conclusion the boy system, such as it is in use by the Curtis Company, was not suitable for the distribution of our monthly magazine.

"The real question which will be submitted by the complainant for decision upon the trial is, whether the independent wholesalers who are already under contract with the Curtis Company can be prevented by the Curtis Company from supplying retail dealers with the Pictorial Review or other magazines.

"It is needless to say that we shall bring the case on for trial at the earliest possible date.

"We confidently expect that when the case is presented to the court upon an actual trial and the witnesses heard in court, the result will be favorable to the Pictorial Review.

"We are waging this fight not alone in our own interest but also in that of every independent wholesaler in the country, as we believe that the wholesalers should be free to handle any publication they may desire and not be subject to the dictation of any one publisher.

"What we desire to see accomplished in the magazine distribution field is free and unrestricted competition."

MONGER'S POLISH BOOKLET.

The official book of the National American Committee for the Polish Victims' War Relief Fund has been compiled and published under the direction of R. S. Monger, the circulation and general publicity promoter, whose office is at 5614 John Avenue, Superior, Wis.

The booklet is fifty-two pages in size and is generously supported by advertising secured by Mr. Monger's service.

A voting contest, directed by Mr. Monger, is being held to aid the fund, in which a large number of valuable prizes are to be awarded, headed by five automobiles. The votes of the contestants may be acquired by actual balloting of friends and on the amount of money each contestant raises through flag and button sales.

EVENING POST ACQUIRES A MARINE PAPER.

America's oldest shipping journal, the Nautical Gazette, has been acquired by the New York Evening Post Company and appears under new management.

The title of the publishing company remains the Nautical Gazette, Inc. Oswald Garrison Villard is president, Emil M. Scholz is vice-president and treasurer, Robert B. McClean is secretary.

Walter B. Hayward, city editor and for years a writer for the Evening Post, is the supervising editor of the Nautical Gazette.

James Gray, who for the past year has been editor and one of the owners of the Gazette, remains with the paper as assistant editor.

HIT BY ESPIONAGE LAW.

Under the provisions of the new espionage act, the Savannah post office on June 28 held up deliveries of Thomas E. Watson's newspaper, which has been attacking the army draft, pending a decision by the Post Office Department.

Watson is a Georgia editor who frequently has clashed with the Federal authorities over his publications.

NEWS NOTES OF CIRCULATORS.

Lyal McLaughlin (familiarly known as "Mac"), who has been connected with the outside circulation department of the Decatur (Ill.) Daily Review for the past two years, has accepted the call to the colors.

The newshoys and carriers of the Peoria (Ill.) Journal and Transcript will hold their annual picnic on July 11.

Adopting progressive circulation methods, Thomas F. Jackson, circulation manager of the New Britain Herald, has arranged with the Western Union Telegraph Company to have current issues delivered by messenger boys, in case regular carriers fail any of their customers. According to announcement published, subscribers failing to receive their paper by carrier at a certain time only have to call the Western Union office to secure prompt service.

The newshoys of the Wichita (Kan.) Beacon were given a picnic last week by the business department of that paper. A. T. Butler, business manager, acting as host.

The Wilmington (Del.) Evening has added a music department, which is made a feature of each Thursday issue. For a long time there has been an automobile section on Wednesdays.

The Youngstown (Ohio) Vindicator caters to its cosmopolitan clientele by running a special "Cosmopolitan Page" in the Sunday issue. All of the many nationalities represented in the Youngstown district have access to the page and an interesting feature is the result.

G. Proctor Cooper and his brother Delbert, formerly of the carrier staff of the Duluth Herald, have enlisted in the Navy.

EDITORIAL GUNS SPIKED.

The Frankfurter (Germany) Zeitung is now under a preventive censorship. The newspaper announces the discontinuance of editorial comment of war measures until further notice.

The Frankfurter Zeitung, during most of the war period, has been known as Chancellor von Bethmann Hollweg's organ, and it stood by him through thick and thin on the question of peace terms. Its Berlin correspondent is the Chancellor's most intimate newspaper acquaintance.

INSURANCE PAPER CHANGES.

E. Weston Roberts, son of the late Harvey E. Roberts, has succeeded the latter as editor and manager of the Insurance Advocate, New York. He had been associated with his father for the past four years as business manager of the Advocate, which is now owned by Mrs. Adeline Weston Roberts, wife of the deceased.

NEW ENGLAND CIRCULATORS READY FOR MEETING.

The New England Circulation Managers' Association are all ready for their quarterly meeting, to be held in New Bedford, Mass., on July 11 and 12.

A number of prominent members of the International Circulation Managers' Association, which organization has just decided to hold its annual meeting in Atlanta from October 8 to 11, will be at the New Bedford gathering as guests and speakers.

D. B. G. Rose of the Louisville (Ky.) Post, James McKernan of the New York World, Martin A. Miner of the Utica Observer, Thomas Downey of the Boston Globe, T. H. Bridge of Troy, Ohio, E. C. Johnson of the Louisville Courier-Journal and Times and C. H. Hastings of the Lynn (Mass.) Item are among those who have already registered in New Bedford.

The complete program was printed in THE FOURTH ESTATE of June 30.

I.C.M.A. IN OCTOBER.

The International Circulation Managers' Association will hold its annual meeting in Atlanta from October 8 to 11. The pressure of war conditions necessitated the postponement of the meeting from last month.

ARTICLE IV.

EXAMINING THE BALANCE SHEET OF A PAPER TO BE TAKEN OVER—LOOSE METHODS OF BOOKKEEPING.

BY EDMUND WALKER.

In this series of short articles on newspaper work Mr. Walker has created a hypothetical company and takes it through all the stages of an organization's financial existence.

Starting with the period of incorporation, he showed the opening of the accounting books. He will take the paper through a period of prosperity and finally make a mistake in financing, necessitating compulsory liquidation.

In the course of the articles he will introduce various phases of accounting, such as methods of handling depreciation, insurance, amortization plans, building funds, profit-sharing systems, etc.

Our competitor, who has given us an option on his business as a going concern, has at last submitted a balance sheet which he claims to be correct.

We are not at liberty to have our auditors inspect his books; we have only the balance sheet as submitted, to judge.

Let us endeavor to read behind the balance sheet and see the real business.

The first item on the asset side appears as follows:

Cash on hand, $1,763.20.

What does that indicate?

Possibly you will consider that the item is perfectly clear and that the amount represents actual currency on hand.

I would come to exactly the opposite conclusion.

If he were running his business methodically, he would be banking his total receipts each and every day and merely carrying on hand a specific given amount—which is always an even amount—as an imprest fund.

Therefore I would assume that this item is composed largely of I. O. U.'s and employees, unbankable checks, etc.

This fact alone would immediately put us on guard for other loose business.

The next item appears as cash at bank—$2,463.27.

There is no way of reading behind the accuracy of this figure, unless we are permitted to ask for a statement from the bank; and even if this request were granted the figure given us would not agree with the above amount owing to certain checks which would be outstanding.

Let us then merely consider whether or not he is in the habit of keeping an adequate amount on hand considering the amount of his business, and his immediate liabilities. He should be able to pay all of his accounts payable, wages accrued, salaries accrued and expenses accrued and still have a balance left at the bank.

Naturally bills payable are not included in the above calculation.

The next item is bills receivable on hand, $5,000.

What does that represent to you?

Assuming that his cash balance at the bank was too small from the above calculation then he has probably tried to discount these bills, but has been unable to do so.

Furthermore, as the amount at the bank is too small, it is obvious that he was forced, against his will, to accept these notes and probably did so in contemplation of having to sue for recovery, arguing that by accepting customer's paper he would strengthen his suit and throw the onus probandi onto the debtor.

That is one opinion.

But there is still another. Five thousand dollars is an even amount. Perhaps this is one note from one of the directors and that would account for its not being discounted?

The next item represents accounts receivable and these are held at $54,367.89.

From our information, we believe that he is doing about $20,000 a month in advertising. Some of this will be paid during the month. It is then an easy calculation to see that many of his debts are past due, and carrying this thought one step further we conclude that many of his advertisers are in the habit of taking their time in paying bills.

That will be a hard custom to break and may lose us much business. He has not stated the amount reserved for bad debts separately, merely giving $54,367.89 as the net amount after deducting an allowance for bad debts.

You are correct in assuming that the reserve is inadequate. He has been afraid of the large amount outstanding and rather than show the actual total amount has decided to show the net figure.

All these assets have been classified under the heading liquid assets.

And our next item is investment account, $3,478.92.

We have no information as to what this is.

If it represented Government Liberty Bonds he would have told us in detail and it would not be an odd amount.

It is placed under the heading of liquid assets in order to mislead us—a newspaper is not an investment corporation.

It is impossible, as we have already seen, that he had too much cash and had to invest the surplus.

This is probably some speculative proposition which he has been feeding and which may take years to liquidate.

His next heading is current and working assets, and the first item appearing under this heading is news print, $5,000.

That is obviously a guessed figure and indicates that he does not keep his press room reports nor check the mill sheets to ascertain the actual consumption in pounds.

Metal likewise is round amount of $400 and is obviously a guessed figure.

We see no record of matrix paper, stationery and office supplies. He has not valued these at all and evidently keeps no check on them—which ratifies our first opinion, that he employed a very loose accounting system.

Insurance is valued at $280.02, and the heading is "Unexpired value of Insurance." In brackets he has told us that he is insured for $35,000.

Obviously he has policies containing the 80 per cent Co-Insurance clause.

Is $35,000 equal to 80 per cent of the property insured, which would be his plant, furniture, news print and supplies, etc.?

If the calculation does not prove out, then it is obvious that he is under-insured and we will remember that all his stated profits earned are too high because profit and loss account has not been charged with the correct premium which should have been paid.

Passing on we see that the next heading is fixed assets, and the first item represents plant and machinery, which are valued at $64,218.97, and from this amount $6,261.34 has been deducted for depreciation.

What does that indicate to you?

He has been in business ten years. This is what he has done.

He made no allowance for depreciation until two years ago when he wrote of 5 per cent, or $3,210.94, and on the reducing balance method he last year wrote off $3,050.40, or 5 per cent of $61,008.03.

Therefore, apart from the fact that the reducing balance method is wrong, we know now that all his profit and loss accounts for any period prior to two years ago are also wrong and the profits are all over-estimated.

On working out the same calculation for the item of furniture we see the same result and draw the same conclusion.

Before leaving this figure of plant we will note that no separate amount is given as representing his cost of installation, which indicates that this somewhat intangible asset is included in the total plant figure. This opinion might be strengthened if our insurance calculation proved him to be under-insured, basing our calculation on the total plant figure.

The next item is goodwill. But we will pass this over, as we have already discussed the same carefully in our last article.

Turning now to the liability side of the statement.

Under the heading of actual liabilities the first item is bills payable.

We are not permitted to inquire at the bank if he has a direct loan but we can perhaps form some opinion of this from the balance sheet, although it is not stated.

His creditors' accounts are very high and yet he maintains a balance of some $2,463.27 at the bank.

Unless he were more or less compelled to maintain a fair bank balance he would pay down as low as possible and save interest charges and endeavor to maintain his credit.

The reason he does not use this money is because he has a loan from the bank and is compelled to maintain a fair balance.

Bills payable show at $21,500—he could not have borrowed this amount on his business from the bank therefore we will assume that there are lien notes outstanding against his linotype machines and perhaps against his press.

The next item is salaries accrued and this must be passed as presumably correct.

If we know on what day he pays we can accurately calculate the amount of his payroll from this figure. As he has no heading for wages accrued, we will correctly assume that salaries and wages have been lumped together.

The only items left are capital and profit and loss account.

Now you will notice that no mention is made of subscriptions in arrears or advance.

Perhaps the subscriptions in arrears are so bad that he did not want to show them and as he has put on so many special circulation campaigns he may have a very heavy list of paid-in-advance subscriptions, which he has accidentally omitted from the balance sheet, claiming no doubt that the arrears about offset the advances.

In order to continue our chain of articles let us assume that we make some suitable arrangement to purchase the business and next week we will take over his accounting records and set them in order.

S.N.P.A. MEETING IN ASHEVILLE.

(Continued from Fourteenth Page.) do newspapers make exception when train delivering papers is late? Does agent assume equal responsibility with the newspaper? Where agent states packages never reach destination, what success have newspapers had in collecting damages from express companies?

"One or two newspapers report having had packages sent to agents both by mail and express broken into in transit. What has been experience of other newspapers, and what steps, if any, have been taken to obviate?"

"Are newspapers generally meeting with the hearty co-operation of Post Office Department in delivery of papers? Post office inspectors rarely acknowledge the receipt of complaint from newspapers, and although final report with return of all papers is supposed to be made to complaining newspaper by Post Office Department, this is done in few cases."

"Delayed papers and irregular service is matter of great moment, and should not matter be taken up with Postmaster General to have each complaint acknowledged by inspector and every case finally reported on?"

"Have any newspapers attempted to arrange with undertakers for cards of thanks from families, such cards to be charged direct to undertakers, by the newspapers, the newspapers making a special rate to undertakers, but also fixing a charge to be made those interested?"

"The papers of the West and East have been successful in developing considerable church advertising. This is especially true of Baltimore papers. Several Southern papers have attempted without success. Does not this offer a is now an independent Democratic journal, its chief policy being to boost every movement for the welfare of the city.

I am a real specialist in reorganizing and rehabilitating newspaper properties. If your property is not developed to the highest possible point, you can profitably employ me. I develop and perfect the Business, Advertising, Mechanical and Circulation Departments. Have been doing this sort of work successfully for many years. I have doubled the income of some papers and very largely increased that of others. It costs nothing to use my services and my system, as I am sure to produce a volume of new business sufficient to meet the expense several times over, not to mention the permanent benefits which will accrue. I really know the game and can put it over. Will be at liberty about August 1. Who wants next? Write for particulars and an interview. Address "Specialist," care The Fourth Estate.

The editor of the Sunday Times, George C. Ingling, first became connected with the newspaper as a reporter in January, 1890. He later was made city editor, which position he held for nearly ten years. Upon a change in ownership being made he was advanced to the position of editor and continued as such when the change was made from a daily to a Sunday newspaper. He has been connected with the newspaper longer than any other man on the staff.

LIQUOR AD LAW TERRITORY.

On and after the dates named below the Federal Liquor Advertising Act applies to:

Alaska—Entire territory, January 1, 1918.

Indiana—Entire state, April 3, 1918. The attorney general of Indiana advises that the section of the law forbidding liquor advertising in the state is not effective until immediately after April 3, 1918, but it is contended by others that this section of the law is already in effect. There have been no decisions by the courts upon these conflicting views, and until some authoritative decision of the courts is available the opinion of the legal officer of the state will be accepted.

Michigan—Entire state, April 30, 1918.

Montana—Entire state, December 31, 1918.

Utah—Entire state, August 1, 1917. As THE FOURTH ESTATE told last week, these states were wholly affected, commencing July 1:

Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, Colorado, Georgia, Idaho, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Mississippi, Nebraska, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Vermont, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia.

The Post Office Department will furnish further information as to the states partially affected.

BUSINESS TROUBLES.

The Slovenian Printing & Publishing Company, of Duluth, publisher of the National Herald, a Finnish weekly, has petitioned the district court for permission to liquidate the affairs of the company preparatory to its dissolution. The advancing costs of publication have made the business unprofitable and the Herald will therefore suspend publication.

The company is on a substantial basis and merely desires to quit while the "quitting is good."

COOPERATION

The Service Bulletin of the St. Paul Dispatch and the St. Paul Pioneer Press is a monthly publication issued by these newspapers for the purposes of aiding the grocers of St. Paul and the Northwest and the food and food accessory manufacturers of America. This Bulletin is mailed free each month to more than 1,000 retailers.

It is accomplishing the purpose, but it is not the only reason why these papers carry such a large amount of food advertising. The real reason lies in the fact that the St. Paul Dispatch and St. Paul Pioneer Press daily enter by carrier more than

41,500 of the 46,000

NEWSPAPERS LAYING THE ROAD FOR "ELFIZ."

An interesting advertising campaign is being launched by the Stavrum, Thompson & Bennett Agency, Lytton Building, Chicago, for the C. & J. Michel Brewing Company, of La Crosse, in behalf of their new non-alcoholic beverage "Elfiz."

The campaign is being tried first in South Dakota newspapers, where prohibition statutes just now going into effect are turning the attention of the public to non-alcoholic drinks. It opened with four days of "teasers," followed by a half page smash, excellently illustrated. The remainder of the copy, which runs to Labor Day, consists of half-page, quarter-page and eighth-page lineages.

The campaign is being supplemented by wall bulletins and a special "three-free" offer by mail.

In this mail offer, telephone subscribers are circularized in the local dealer's name and are offered a case of "Elfiz" on approval, to be returned if they are not convinced on the "three-free" offer. The wall bulletins, special follow up, stationery and dealer helps of one kind and another have all been prepared in the office of Stavrum, Thompson & Bennett.

The South Dakota campaign is the first of a series of state campaigns to be released as the manufacturing and distribution facilities are increased.

Major E. E. Critchfield, member of the board of directors of the new American Association of Advertising Agents, is president of Taylor-Critchfield-Clague Company, Chicago, and has been actively and prominently connected with the advertising business for twenty-five years.

Major Critchfield gained his military title in service with the Tenth Pennsylvania Infantry, when that organization was engaged in preserving the peace of the commonwealth.

He began his career as a school teacher in Pennsylvania, Kansas and Nebraska, and then went in for dairy farming. His work in this field resulted in his election to the presidency of the Pennsylvania State Dairy Association. He was a lecturer in farmers institutes and a contributor of important articles on the scientific research of agriculture to farm papers. make a strenuous effort to fulfill its purpose as laid down in article 2 of its constitution:

"To assist in the development of New England by studying and improving the methods of advancing business through advertising . . . to promote among New England merchants and manufacturers a thorough understanding of the power of good advertising . . . and in other ways to assist in the development of New England commercial enterprises and resources."

"We learn by the experiences of our cousins across the sea that successful war-making must travel hand-in-hand with industrial efficiency—efficiency in production, in manufacturing and in distribution.

"We want New England to hold up its end in the stirring days that are with us—to lead if possible, and at least to keep step in the rapid progress that must be made in American industries."

The new Pilgrim president is a real pilgrim—he was born in Rom-ford, Essex, England, and his work in the United States has taken him to various parts of this land—so that he qualifies both according to history and to Webster.

He became an advertising man with Marshall Field & Co. in 1895, after a few years in various lines. During his advertising career he has handled appropriations for the National Cash Register Company, Walter A. Wood Mowing & Reaping Machine Company, National Lead Company, John Wanamaker and others, becoming advertising manager of William Filene's Sons, Boston, in 1912.

He has been active in the councils of the A.A.C.W. for several years.

AD FOLKS' NEWS.

The Poor Richard Club of Philadelphia has challenged the New York Advertising Club to a golf match. The challenge has been accepted and W. Roy Barnhill, victor in the recent tournament at Hot Springs, has been appointed chairman of the committee to handle the match. He has already assembled several of the fifteen players who will represent New York, including Don Parker, Lee Maxwell, Charles P. Eddy and Manning Wakefield.

The time of the match has not been decided upon, but one game will be played in each of the contesting cities.

An important promotion has come to T. L. Briggs, advertising manager of the Remington Arms-Union Metallic Cartridge Company, Bridgeport, Ct. In addition to handling the advertising he is now assistant to the vice-president in New York.

John K. Allen, a member of the Wood, Putnam & Wood Advertising Agency's organization, has been elected chairman of the board of directors of the Pilgrim Publicity Association, Boston.

The Pilgrim Publicity Association, Boston, has ceased publication of its monthly magazine, Pilgrim Publicity, supplanting it with a live weekly, the Pilgrim Publicity News.

Walter H. Van Deusen has resigned as director of advertising and sales of the Detroit Motor Car Company, Detroit.

Harry Tipper, business manager of Automobile, is to address the Young Ad Men's Club of New York on July 13.

Berry Rockwell, merchandising counsel of the Curtis Publishing Company, Philadelphia, has been made sales manager of the Smith Motor Truck Corporation, maker of the Smith Form-a-Truck and Smith Form-a-Tractor.

At a meeting of Grand Rapids (Mich.) business men, called by Edwin L. Quarles it was decided to organize a club of those engaged in professional advertising to study the subject from a scientific standpoint.

The Johnstown (Pa.) Ad-Press Club has decided to maintain permanent quarters, following the policy of similar organizations in other cities.

J. E. Fields, for several years sales manager of the Hupmobile, has joined the Liberty Motor Car organization, in charge of sales, advertising and service.

Mr. Fields will be succeeded by O. C. Hutchinson, previously supervisor of branches.

Mr. Fields was formerly with the Chalmers, and in going to the Liberty joins an old associate, Percy Owen, now president of that company.

Mr. Hutchinson has been with the Hupp since 1915.

John Fisk, formerly employed in the publicity department of the Mutual Film Corporation at its Chicago offices, has resigned.

The St. Louis Advertising Club gave a dinner last week in honor of William C. D'Arcy, the new president of the A.A.C.W., who is a member of the organization.

A summer chautauqua course in advertising, with all the lectures free to the public, is being conducted during the summer by the Cleveland Advertising Club.

Nat S. Stronge, who has been manager of the news service department for Greater Vitagraph-V.L.S.E. in New York, for several months, has been made publicity director and is in direct charge of all publicity.

Paul N. Lazarus, who for more than a year has been assistant advertising manager, has been made advertising director of the organization and is in charge of all advertising.

The changes in the publicity and advertising department were made necessary by the departure of E. Lanning Masters.

For more than a year Mr. Masters has been the executive head of both the publicity and advertising departments with the title of publicity and advertising director. With his departure this position is abolished, it being considered unnecessary owing to the close personal co-operation between Mr. Stronge and Mr. Lazarus and their departments.

BERNSTEIN GOT THROUGH.

Because his name was on an old blacklist of the Russian Government, Herman Bernstein, New York editor and Jewish leader, who is on his way to Petrograd, was held up a week at Tornea, Finland, and received permission to enter only after the intervention of the United States Minister to Stockholm and on the request of the State Department at Washington.

Mr. Bernstein, who left Stockholm ten days before, telephoned the American Minister that he was being detained. The latter cabled Washington, and received a reply in twenty-three hours saying the department desired that Mr. Bernstein be permitted to enter Russia.

REST FOR MISS HUFFAKER.

Lucy Huffaker, who has handled the publicity of the Washington Square Players at the Comedy Theater, New York, is going on an extended vacation, preferring a cooler climate than that of New York during the warm months.

The idea of the Washington Square Company had few precedents in modern dramatics, and Miss Huffaker, who has been with the company from the beginning, had to work hard to bring to the players the success that attended their efforts at the Comedy
Theater during the last season.

HOUSE WON'T SAVE DAYLIGHT —JUST NOW

The Boreland Daylight Savings Bill, passed by the United States Senate last week, will not be acted upon by the House at this session of Congress, the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce postponing action upon it by adjourning

The legislative status of the bill is not improved by the adjournment and it will not have to be re-introduced in the Senate in case of favorable action by the House next winter.

He spent some time with the New and copy-reader and then returned to Binghamton as the first city editor of the Press, when it was founded in 1906 by Willis Sharpe Kilmer. Three years later he went as a special in 1912 he returned to Binghamton as managing editor of the Republiwhen that paper was consolidated with the Evening Herald.

He was appointed editor a short

STRAITS OF THE GERMAN NEWSPAPERS

The Bayerische Landeszeitung, of Würzburg, before recently discontinuing publication, said that the war has proved fatal to the economic situation of German newspapers generally, and of the medium and smaller papers particularly.

One thousand five hundred newspapers and periodicals have already ceased publication, and many which formerly appeared twice are obliged to appear once daily.

The war has made demands on the German newspaper industry which are characterized as frightful and entirely unexampled.

Paper has reached a price which has enabled most paper mills to increase their dividends considerably.
grease and oil for lubricating machines are only obtainable at monstrous prices, while the prices for colors have enormously risen.

The same is true of all other materials requisite to a newspaper printing office.

Salaries and wages have increased with other increments.

Hitherto printing works have been compelled to give their employees increasing grants in aid to meet the increased cost of living, apart from the fact that regular wages have also been augmented. Women news-women have also received an increase of pay, and the paper shortage and the coal famine have further aggravated the situation.

The Landeszeitung said that all these extra charges do not exhaust, by a long way, the list of newspaper hardships.

The plant of the Taylor (Tex.)
Daily Press was damaged to the extent of $7,000 by a fire last week.

EASTERN WEEKLIES BEGIN TO COOPERATE.

Publishers of small Eastern states newspapers have formed the Eastern Publishers Association, with George C. Woodruff of the Litchfield (Ct.) Enquirer as president, in the belief that by cooperation, and by having a representative on duty at all times, the members (which it is planned will include most of the weekly newspapers in the East) will benefit by being able to secure print paper cheaper, other supplies at a lower figure than at which they can be singly secured and also that considerable advertising may be secured.

The organization was started at a meeting in New York on June 30.

Louis E. Peck, formerly with the American Press Association and previous to that publisher of papers in Connecticut, was elected secretary and manager. Mr. Peck will open an office in New York in the very near future and until that time he will conduct the affairs of the association from his office in Stratford, Ct.

The next meeting will probably be held in Albany, N. Y.

President Woodruff is also the president of the Connecticut Editorial Association. The other officers are:

First vice-president, F. W. Ferrall, Chateaugay (N. Y.) Record; second vice-president, E. T. Johnson, Pocomoke (Md.) Ledger; third vice-president, F. L. Moser, Spring City (Pa.) Press; secretary, Louis E. Peck, Stratford (Ct.) Times.

Legislative committee, Edward C. Kraus, Saranac Lake (N. Y.) News; Norman B. Nuss, North Wales (Pa.) Review; J. B. Varley, Somerville (N. J.) Messenger; F. J. Lyon, Milford (Ct.) Citizen; George Kelley, Boothbay (Me.) Register; Arthur Howard, Salem (Mass.) Mercury; D. J. Hanrahan, Berlin (N. H.) Reporter.

years old. The next twenty years of his life were spent in the Twin Cities, where he obtained his education.

His first newspaper work was with the Minneapolis Tribune, where he held the positions of northwest editor, reporter, telegraph editor, make-up editor and Sunday editor. He then joined the Chicago Tribune staff, going from there to the National Cash Register Company, Dayton, Ohio, where he was in charge of all advertising publications. Later he held positions as copy-writer and then solicitor with Frank Seaman, Inc., the New York advertising agency.

He returned to Chicago as retail advertising manager of Marshall Field & Co., and later took the additional work of the sales manager of the "store for men." He left this position to become Western manager for O'Mara & Ormsbee, Inc., with

THE COMMERCIAL'S RAILROAD
EDITOR SERIOUSLY ILL.

Harry D. Vought, railroad editor of New York Commercial since the paper was published at a daily, and affectionately referred to by his associates on the Commercial as "dean of the staff," is dangerously ill at his home in Montclair, N. J.

Mr. Vought is well known throughout the United States through his intimate acquaintance with leading railroad officials of the country covering a period of thirty-four years. He has enjoyed a great popularity and it may be here recalled that after serving six years as secretary to the International League of Press Clubs he was, during its annual session in Buffalo, elected president and the following year, at the meeting in New York, was succeeded in that office by the late Joseph Howard.

POST OFFICE MAPS COST LESS.

Post Office route maps, beginning August 1 will cost 50 cents instead of 80 cents a sheet, in accordance with the law, which provides for their sale at the cost of printing and 10 per cent additional.

HOW OLSEN GOT IN.

Though the United States Navy decided that R. L. Olsen of the New York Herald could not join its forces, Olsen not only joined the Navy but brought in with him eighteen other persons who had not thought of going to war. The examiners all told him that he was architecturally incorrect. After raising a strenuous protest he wanted to know whether there was any branch of the service, machinist, stenographer, tailor, barber or anything that would not be so fussy about his defects.

"Can you play any musical instrument?" asked the officer in charge.

Those who were present state that Mr. Olsen jumped twenty feet, and subsequent measurement of the ceiling height would indicate that he might have done so. He said he could play the cornet and that he belonged to a band at Hoboken, N. J., which could play around any brass band east of the Pacific. They could have him or they could have the whole band if he had an hour to notify his friends that here was a chance to aid the Government. He'd recruit them himself by nightfall if the Navy would give its word that he, poor of vision and flat of foot, would be let in with them.

The navy needs musicians. At five o'clock p. m. the Phenor Band, of Hoboken, consisting of nineteen men, appeared at the recruiting offices with their instruments and signed up for the duration of the war. R. L. Olsen is in the navy.

CROCKETT WILL FIGHT.

Albert S. Crockett, who has had charge of the news bureau at the Waldorf-Astoria, New York, for two years, has resigned to get into real war work here or in Europe. As a memento of the occasion the hotel orchestra a few nights ago for the first time played on the roof two new songs of Mr. Crockett's composition.

The audience enthusiastically applauded "Hunting Hohenzollerns," which is dedicated to the United States Army, and there were generous plaudits for the other song, "Till All Be Free."

NEW MICHIGAN EDITOR.

H. G. Hart, former city editor and business manager of the Manistique (Mich.) Pioneer-Tribune, has become editor of that publication, succeeding the late George E. Holbein. Mr. Hart has had experience in all ranks and departments of daily and weekly newspapers in Michigan and Illinois.

Mr. Miller has been with the Telegram since March, leaving the Los Angeles Examiner. He has been in newspaper work for fifteen years, most of which have been spent with the Hearst publications.

He was at one time assistant to George Hamlin Fitch, news editor of the San Francisco Chronicle, and has also written special articles for that newspaper.

Besides a period in the theatrical business and a tour in the Orient with a theatrical company, Mr. Miller has been managing editor of the Bakersfield (Cal.) Evening Californian, news editor of the San Jose Mercury Herald and owner of the San Jose Examiner.

OBITUARY NOTES.

LIEUT. WARDEN McLEAN, son of William L. McLean, publisher of the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin, was killed on June 29 when he was thrown from his horse at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga.

Since his graduation from Princeton in 1912 Lieutenant McLean had been active in newspaper work in the Bulletin office and those who had the privilege of working with him found in him much the same qualities of energy, enthusiasm and application possessed by his father.

In order to thoroughly master the newspaper business, he served an active apprenticeship in the Bulletin press rooms and on the staff and just before being called into active service was employed in the business department under the direction of Business Manager William Simpson.

Lieutenant McLean was the eldest son of the publisher of the Item—in his twenty-ninth year. When the prospect of active military service became bright, he passed the examination and was commissioned second lieutenant.

He had previously taken the course of extensive training at Plattsburg, N. Y. When the officers' training camps were started, he was active and enthusiastic in furthering the plans for them. He was sent to Fort Oglethorpe to assist in the instruction of newer men. His brothers, Robert and William L. McLean, Jr., are in training at the Fort Niagara camp in New York.

JOSEPH B. LIVELY, for thirty years with the Atlanta Constitution and later with the Georgian, died in Oakhurst, Ga., a few days ago, aged sixty-seven years.

SERGE BASSETT, a distinguished French war correspondent attached to the British armies, was killed on June 30 by rifle fire while watching the fighting about the Lens salient.

Although several correspondents have been wounded, Bassett is the first journalist to be killed in the field during the present war. He had been awarded the Legion of Honor for literary and dramatic work.

RICHARD P. BARHAM, postmaster of Petersburg, Va., and former editor of the Petersburg Index-Appeal, died suddenly at his home on June 23. He was seventy-one years of age.

THOMAS J. STITES, formerly publisher of the Albany (Ore.) Democrat, is dead, aged seventy-seven years.

LIQUOR AD TROUBLES.

Pittsburg newspapers are experiencing keen difficulty in meeting the demands of the West Virginia "bone-dry" law.

They have heavy circulation in the adjoining state and since no liquor advertising is permissible, special editions have to be run for West Virginia.

As a consequence, liquor advertising is being run on special days only and must be grouped on separate pages so that the West Virginia subscribers can be handled separately.

Other cities contiguous to "bone-dry" territory are experiencing similar difficulties.

RED CROSS AMBULANCES FROM TWO CHICAGO PAPERS.

GREEN'S DUAL POSITIONS.

EDITOR THE FOURTH ESTATE.

SIR: On June 6 you wrote me care of the Richard Hudnut organization, asking for confirmation of my appointment as advertising director of Richard Hudnut.

I answered, stating that it was correct and that it was in addition to my duties as merchandising manager of William R. Warner & Co.

But before this verification reached your office, I noticed an article in THE FOURTH ESTATE in which it was stated that I was "formerly connected with William R. Warner & Co." giving the idea that I had left that organization.

Several of the trade publications have copied this article and, of course, all have the wrong impression and many of my friends have commented on it.

In reality, I have a dual capacity, being connected with both organizations.

Are Japan and America on the eve of a new era in diplomatic relations?

The suggestion that the Japanese Commission's visit may dissipate many past misunderstandings is advanced by the New York Evening Post in its second Japanese Supplement, which appeared June 30. The supplement is frankly aimed at promoting closer relations, commercial and otherwise, with the Oriental Empire.

Numerous prominent writers, Japanese and American, contributed to the supplement.

W. J. Lampton, poet, author and editor, left his entire estate, estimated at $100,000, to his niece, Miss Florence Symphon, by his will, which was filed in Winchester, Ky., for probate on June 27. The will was executed by Mr. Lampton July 23, 1906.

The properties are to be held in trust for Miss Symphon by her mother, Mrs. Nannie Symphon. Miss Symphon, who is a resident of Winchester, is twenty-five years old. Col. Lampton left a large amount of cash and securities, two houses and lots in Winchester, as well as life insurance.

THE PAPER REFERENDUM OF THE A.N.P.A.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION'S PLAN IS ENDORSED BY MEMBERS BY OVER TWO TO ONE.

At the A. N. P. A. meeting at Washington on June 21 a resolution endorsing the Federal Trade Commission recommendation was laid upon the table. As there were only fifty active members of the A.N.P.A. present, it was thought best to take a vote of the entire active membership by referendum. This was ordered by H. L. Rogers, the president of the association.

Up to the time THE FOURTH ESTATE went to press the vote in favor of endorsing the Federal Trade Commission's recommendation stands over two to one.

Of the 422 active members, 204 have voted.

It is understood that Frank P. Glass, chairman of the news print paper committee of the A. N. P. A., is actively engaged in presenting these facts to the entire membership of the Senate and House of Representatives.

The hope is confidently expressed that this overwhelming majority of the members of the A. N. P. A. who have gone on record, together with the recent actions of the New York State Press Association and the National Editorial Association, the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association and the American Association of Foreign Language Newspapers this week will so impress Congress that immediate steps will be taken to enact into law the recommendations of the Federal Trade Commission.

The Federal Trade Commission recommendation follows:

"By reason of this condition and cause of the vital interest to the public of an efficient dissemination of news in this crisis, the commission recommends as a war emergency measure that Congress by appropriate legislation provide:

(1) That all mills producing and all agencies distributing print paper and mechanical and chemical pulp in the United States be operated on Government account; that these products be pooled in the hands of a Government agency and equitably distributed at a price based upon cost of production and distribution, plus a fair profit a ton.

(2) That, pursuant thereto, some Federal agency be empowered and directed to assume the supervision and control thereof during the pendency of the war.

(3) That by reason of the fact that approximately 75 per cent of the production of news print paper in Canada comes into the United States, proper action be taken to secure the cooperation of the Canadian Government in the creation of a similar governmental agency for the same function, which shall be clothed with power and authority to act jointly with the governmental agency of the United States for the protection of the consumers and manufacturers of print paper and the public of the United States and Canada.

(4) That in case the Canadian Government shall not join in such a cooperative enterprise, then importation of paper and mechanical and chemical pulp into the United States shall be made only on Government account to or through the Federal agency charged with such supervision and distribution.

Publishers say that if the authorities at Washington are to recognize the interests of the daily newspapers as officially expressed they cannot do other than enact into law and put in operation the suggestion of the Federal Trade Commission, especially in view of the almost unanimously expressed endorsement of the policy on the part of newspaper publishers.

Some doubt has been expressed as to the wisdom of this course, but it is obvious that American newspaper publishers regard it as the wise course to pursue in the interest of not only the publishers themselves but the country as a whole.

The New York State Press Association endorsed the recommendations in these resolutions:

"As the Federal Trade Commission has said in an official report that their efforts to restore competitive conditions in the news print industry expeditiously, and to arbitrate and effectively project a fair price for news print have failed, and as the commission also has said in the same report that:

"The news print paper situation is very serious, not only to consumers of paper but to the public generally and to the Government of the United States, which is itself a large consumer of paper, and the commission has reason to believe that this situation will be still more serious and aggravated in the ensuing months;

"Resolved, That this association heartily endorses the recommendation of the trade commission."

The National Editorial Association, in the report of George E. Hosmer, chairman of its executive committee, also endorsed the trade board's recommendations, as will be seen in the report of its Minneapolis convention in another column of this issue.

JUST PROFITS FOR NEWSPAPERS.

GOVERNMENT SHOULD BUY ADS AS IT DOES ANY OTHER COMMODITY.

N. A. Huse, vice-president of the American Press Association, insisted in a speech in Chicago on July 12 that newspapers should not give free publicity to any cause, not excepting the Red Cross or Liberty bonds.

"Right now the Government should be advertising the next Liberty Loan," said Mr. Huse. "Individuals paid millions to advertise the bonds, and newspapers were asked to feature the campaign on the first page long after it had lost its news value.

"With the next Liberty Bond issue to be floated on September 15, the Government should use co-ordinated, controlled advertising, paid for by the Government.

"The Government has no more right to commandeer advertising space from the newspapers of the country than it has to commandeer the output of the steel companies.

"The President has just said that manufacturers are entitled to a just profit, but the newspapers are expected to give their space to the Government without remuneration."

Mr. Huse also suggested that the Government should buy advertising space to place reasons for the war plainly before the people.

His address was delivered at the convention of the Illinois Press Association.

SENATE ANSWERED BY TRADE BOARD.

CALLS FOR MORE POWER IN HANDLING NEWS PRINT SITUATION.

Replying to Senator Reed's resolution asking what it has done to relieve the news print situation, the Federal Trade Commission, in a formal statement on July 10 pointed to its recent recommendation to Congress that power be given the Government to assume control of news print manufacture and distribution.

The commission again emphasized what it considers the need for more power.

At one time, it says, a formal complaint against news print manufacturers was considered, but the plan was not carried out for fear of embarrassing the Department of Justice, which meanwhile had started prosecution against the manufacturers for alleged violations of the anti-trust laws.

As an order directing news print makers to cease their present trade practices would have afforded no practical immediate relief, the commission declares it was powerless to remedy conditions.

Reviewing efforts to bring manufacturers and news print users into a price agreement, the statement tells how after a price of $2.50, fixed by the trade commission, had been agreed to, manufacturers withdrew on the return of indictments against some of their number in the New York courts.

"The commission," the statement adds, "again earnestly invites attention to the serious condition which is confronting the public and the newspapers of the country, if a situation continues where prices are to be paid for paper based, not upon cost of production and fair margin of profit, but upon conditions such as have obtained in the past and give promise of obtaining in the future, where price is based on panic demand."

"Some of the larger newspapers of the country may be powerful enough to weather the conditions which have obtained during the last year for an additional year, or some of them may be powerful enough to secure advantageous positions in the purchase of supplies, but it is of paramount importance that the great body of newspaper publishers of the country shall procure their supply of print paper at a fair price, based upon cost and a fair and reasonable profit."

"Such a price will enable them to continue in business and to serve the public efficiently."

THE NEXT MOVE.

The next move in the news print controversy is up to Congress.

This is the attitude of the Federal Trade Commission at the close of the present week, as indicated to a representative of THE FOURTH ESTATE who talked with various officials at the headquarters of the commission on the afternoon of July 12.

Having made formal reply to Senate Resolution 95, which, in effect, asked the commission why it had not adopted active methods in dealing with paper manufacturers, the trade body is now disposed to sit tight and wait for the come-back of Senator Reed or any other critic who can offer constructive criticism.

Practical newspaper men may be inclined to dismiss from mind with scant consideration the trade commission's latest communication to the Senate on the theory that it is little more than a historical resume of what has happened in the past in connection with the news print proposition. However, the milk of the cocoanut is found in the closing paragraphs wherein the trade commission emphasizes anew "the serious condition which is confronting the newspapers of the country."

The communication to the Senate does not go into detail on this score, but THE FOURTH ESTATE is in a position to say that if publishers knew all that is behind this renewed warning by the Federal officials they would sit up and take notice more sharply than ever before.

In the main, the misgivings are founded not only upon the future price conditions "based upon panic demand," but upon the gravity of the transportation conditions, which impend this autumn and which have already been alluded to in THE FOURTH ESTATE.

Even in this slack summer season there is a shortage of railroad cars and congested traffic conditions and what will happen in the autumn when the new national army begins to mobilize, when the crops are being moved and when a million men are suddenly withdrawn from productive industry and transportation activities, is deserving of more pondering than it has received at the hands of most newspaper executives.

An expert on the trade commission staff told THE FOURTH ESTATE this week that he did not see how the Minnesota paper mills and other plants in that section of the country were going to operate at all next winter. His worry was occasioned by the fact that no coal is accumulating at upper lake ports.

Ordinarily enough coal goes into storage at the head of the Lakes each summer to provide fuel for the paper-making plants during the interval when the lakes are closed to navigation. This year, however, such is the demand that it seems impossible to accumulate any fuel in storage.

This means, if the condition persists, that Northwestern paper plants may be mighty short of fuel next winter or else compelled to bring the coal the entire distance from the mines by rail, a method that will send soaring the cost of paper production.

STORING PAPER.

Despite the outlook for a long, hard winter for news print consumers, there is surprisingly little disposition on the part of publishers to go to new lengths in storing paper. The present summer is witnessing the natural, normal falling off in news print demand which is usually characteristic of the vacation season but which, it will be recalled, was strangely absent last year, due to various causes, including bulk of newspaper advertising, etc.

As for storage against a "rainy" day, newspapers such as the Chicago Tribune and Daily News that have always carried certain paper reserves as against strikes and other contingencies, are keeping up their surplus, but there is no disposition in this quarter to increase the margin of safety, whereas the general run of publishers who have not stored in the past do not seem inclined to do so now.

The claim that news print deteriorates in storage is put forth as one of several objections to storage.

Oddly enough, perhaps, the only manifestation of a desire to insure the future by precautionary storage is coming from the smaller publishers. That same forwardness was exhibited by some of the small publishers just before the situation became acute last autumn and there have been instances where publishers of smaller dailies have stored paper sufficient for intervals of from six months to a year.

In the communication sent to the Senate this week the commission hints that there may be publishers (Continued on Twenty-seventh Page)

TO CENSOR CABLES BUT NOT MAIL.

SPIES TO BE SHADOWED, BUT "HUE AND CRY" METHODS ARE NOT IN FAVOR.

A new censorship plan has been adopted by the Government, and a widespread extension of it is under consideration. In effect it provides for the strictest possible scrutiny of all outgoing cable messages and a virtual lifting of the censorship of incoming press cable dispatches. The outgoing censorship will apply more particularly to commercial messages.

Although Washington officials give little credence to the more sensational spy rumors that have followed the submarine attack on the American expeditionary force, it is likely that the agitation may result in more stringent espionage regulations, particularly with regard to outgoing mails and cables.

No general rearrangement of the spy detection machinery of the Government is contemplated, because officials consider that results of the present system have demonstrated its efficiency.

It has been declared authoritatively that startling revelations of what already has been accomplished might be made if it were considered in the public interest. The Government realizes that such a course probably would serve no good purpose and might generate a spy hysteria of dangerous proportions, like the scares which resulted in injustice to innocent persons in several European countries earlier in the war. It also would warn the spies themselves of the methods employed by the American investigating agents.

High officials consider the efficient German spy system operating in this country as an inevitable circumstance of the war. The large foreign population makes espionage easier than in most countries since the spies can scatter among the foreign colonies and be completely lost to sight.

It is pointed out that Great Britain and France, with more homogeneous populations, have not succeeded in three years of war of freeing themselves of spies, nor has German efficiency itself been able to keep invaluable military information from its enemies.

Many officials believe, however, there should be a closer Government control of outgoing cables, and legislation to that end may be asked. It is possible also that power will be sought to censor outgoing mails. Whether this would cover mails to all countries or simply to those not now covered by the British mail censorship is uncertain.

MAIL CENSORSHIP OPPOSED.

The question of a cable censorship has been widely discussed, but that of censoring mails has received little attention. The British have secured an enormous amount of information from mail inspection, especially as to German activities in neutral lands and trade intrigues.

Postmaster General Burleson has stated that he is opposed to any mail censorship to neutral countries, on the ground that it is not necessary.

Communication to Spain will probably be first investigated by this Government, as messages sent there via Cuba do not in any way come under British surveillance. The Government knows that there are many wireless plants in Spain, and that the Germans there are communicating directly with Berlin. This and all phases of the spy question have been discussed with several of the foreign missions to this country, and much information has been gathered.

There has also been an extensive communication of important information to Germany from the United

EVERY MONTH A GAIN—

During the first six months of 1917 the advertising space in The Kansas City Star showed a gain of 384,534 lines over the first six months of 1916.

A good record in itself—but more significant is the fact that each individual month contributed its individual share to the increase.

Six monthly increases in six months tell a story of prosperity that reflects in turn the prosperity of the great city which The Kansas City Star circulates.

States by way of Mexico and South America. A cable running from Tehuantepec, Mexico, to the coast of Ecuador had been employed by German agents to get their news to Berlin.

A censorship of telegrams going from the United States into Mexico had been established with officers and enlisted men of the United States Army Signal Corps in charge. But their scrutiny did not extend to letters for Mexicans containing information to be telegraphed to Germany by way of Tehuantepec, and was not able to prevent German agents from crossing the Rio Grande at El Paso, Texas, to Juarez, Mexico, and other border points to file telegrams there.

The Government, however, several weeks ago came to the conclusion that the Tehuantepec cable route was being used for enemy purposes and official censors scrutinized all dispatches before they were permitted to go forward. But this means was not entirely effective, and other steps were taken to prevent communication.

The southern end of the Tehuantepec cable was a place in Ecuador.

Then the messages received from Tehuantepec for addresses in neutral countries were sent to Pernambuco, Brazil. At Pernambuco was a powerful wireless apparatus that sent messages to the coast of Spain. Once delivered at the Spanish receiving station, it was easy to transmit the messages to Switzerland, to which they were usually addressed, and thence into Germany.

After reaching the conclusion that the method of relaying cable messages at Panama was not entirely perfect, the Government took up with the government of Brazil the matter of stopping further transmission by wireless from Pernambuco to the European coast. The Brazilian Government was happy to oblige, and it is believed that this means of communication with Germany has been shut off.

NEWSPAPER DISPATCHES WATCHED.

One of the things discovered was that dispatches were being sent from New York to a newspaper in the Orient that evidently were intended for German consumption. The allegation that German "kultur" has frequently been unable to overcome stupidity was exemplified in this case for the newspaper correspondent in telling of certain happenings used the pronoun "our" in referring to German accomplishments. As a result of this discovery a strict censorship on cable dispatches to the Orient has been established.

If the plan under consideration is adopted in its entirety, no suspicious cable message will be permitted to go forward from any American cable office until it has been carefully investigated.

It is not acknowledged that the Government was remiss in permitting press cable dispatches to go to newspapers in South American and other neutral countries that represented a condition of affairs in the United States that would bring comfort at least to the enemy. Where it is obvious filled with false information it will not be forwarded if the plan is put into operation.

SPIES DON'T GET DATA FROM PAPERS, SAYS NORTHCLIFFE

Lord Northcliffe, head of the British missions in this country, has authorized publication of parts of a confidential speech on spies and censorship made to the National Press Club on July 4. He described the work of spies in England and the flood of fatal information that pours over the cables through neutral countries to Germany, and spoke of the dangers of any except technical military and naval censorship of the press.

Only twice in the last month, he said, had he seen anything published in American newspapers that might have been of value to the enemy.

In his address he said:

"What does not yet seem to be understood here, and what we did not understand at the beginning of the war is that the really deadly high explosive news is not newspaper news but the news sent out by spies in code to neutral countries for transmission to Germany."

PRINTING IN HOLLAND.

Newspapers and periodical publications in general give practically no evidence of a scarcity of printing paper in Holland on account of the war. Daily newspapers usually have a morning and an evening edition every day excepting Sunday, when there is no evening edition. The only observable economy now practiced is the suspension of the Monday morning edition, by direction of the Government. This was done with a view to economy in fuel.

There also seems to be no scarcity of paper for book printing in Holland.

Figures show a substantial decrease of all except periodical books in the year when the war broke out. As the next year, 1915, showed an increase which was maintained in 1916, it is evident that the decrease in 1914 was due to the panicky condition and the general uncertainty immediately following the beginning of hostilities.

In normal times about 80 per cent of the printing paper used in Holland was made there and 20 per cent imported from Germany. Now the import from Germany is only 5 to 10 per cent of the total consumption, the rest being made locally. There is no present scarcity of paper in Holland, and no prospect of any unless the shortage of fuel reduces the production of it.

"ADLESS" PAPER QUILTS.

The Daybook, Chicago's "adless" afternoon newspaper, published by N. D. Cochran of Toledo, ceased publication on July 6. Mr. Cochran who blames the high cost of print paper for the journal's demise, has gone to Washington to enter national service.

A NEW FEATURE

OF THE

American Newspaper Annual and Directory

As publishers of the American Newspaper Annual and Directory we have always taken our task seriously—the task of describing and setting forth in detail the vast publishing interest of the country. When they have sensed the magnitude of this undertaking, some advertisers, and even some publishers, have suggested that the Annual should cover only the largest publications. This has always seemed to us a very superficial suggestion. Where and by whom could any line be drawn? Small papers often possess greater relative importance than large ones, and the trade and class publications certainly have definite value. The enormous publishing industry of the United States is carried on in more than 10,000 different cities and towns; for a directory to omit any legitimate factor would seem to us misleading and inequitable.

The Annual and Directory originated in the need of our own organization, when placing advertising, for information as to where the publications of the country are, what they are like and what is happening to them. The book stands in type the year round and is revised from day to day as the numerous changes in the newspaper world are discovered and verified. Some idea of the magnitude of this work may be obtained from the statement that perhaps 15,000 changes of one kind and another have already been made for the volume that is to appear on January 1, 1918.

It has long been our custom to advise our own people of the most important of these changes as they reach the editor of the book. It has now occurred to us that it might be well to share this knowledge with its patrons. We have accordingly issued a list of material changes in the publications of the country for the first half of 1917. These include only such as tend to interest advertisers and publishers; that is, changes of name, issue, consolidations, suspensions and removals. With this we have included a list of all new papers received up to the 10th of May and found worthy of insertion in the next issue of the Annual.

This pamphlet, entitled "Mid-Year Supplement," will be sent without charge to those who have purchased the 1917 Annual and Directory, as far as we have their address, and it will also be furnished to any one who may buy this volume. We shall be interested to learn how patrons of the book regard this attempt to extend and improve the service which it seeks to render them.

THE NEW ATLANTA JOURNAL HEAD.

MAJOR COHEN NOW PRESIDENT
—PASCHALL AND BRANCH MOVE UP TOO.

Major John S. Cohen has been unanimously elected by the board of directors to succeed the late James R. Gray as president and editor of the Atlanta Journal. Major Cohen's promotion to the editorship of the Journal was received with keen delight by the men who have worked under him. The entire editorial staff of the paper presented him with resolutions of congratulations.

Succeeding him as managing editor will be John Paschall city editor, and succeeding Mr. Paschall will be Harlee Branch, Capitol reporter. Both of these men have been with the Journal for years and have the utmost love and loyalty of the staff.

Major Cohen has been in the newspaper business since he was sixteen years old; he is now forty-seven. He has served in every capacity from apprentice boy in the mechanical department to managing editor of the Journal, which he held at the time of Mr. Gray's death.

Major Cohen was born in Augusta, Ga., his father was Phillip Lawrence Cohen of Augusta, who entered the Confederate Army at the age of sixteen and served throughout the war. His mother was Miss Ellen Gobert Wright, daughter of Major General A. R. Wright, member of Congress and editor of the Augusta Chronicle at the time of his death. General Wright was succeeded as editor of the Chronicle by Henry Gregg Wright, who in turn was followed by Patrick Walsh, under whose editorship Major Cohen, then sixteen years old, got a job as printers' apprentice.

Since then Major Cohen has been actively in the newspaper profession at all times save for a brief period as secretary to Secretary Hoke Smith, of the Interior Department, during Grover Cleveland's Presidential administration, and again for a year when he was in the Army in the Spanish-American war. Major Cohen's editorial work has been as news editor, Washington correspondent, editorial writer and managing editor. His first editorial experience was on the staff of the New York World. In 1890 he went to Atlanta and has been with the Journal ever since.

Major Cohen's wife before her marriage was Miss Julia Lowry Clarke, daughter of the late Robert C. Clarke and Mrs. Mary H. Clarke of Atlanta and a niece of Colonel Robert J. Lowry. He is a nephew of State Comptroller General William A. Wright. He has two children, John S. Cohen, Jr., midshipman, third class United States Naval Academy, and a daughter, Miss Mary Clarke Cohen.

H. J. Glesener has sold the Greenville (Ga.) Gazette to E. P. Johnson.

WURZBURG ON THE HEARST GENERAL STAFF.

A new member of the general management of the Hearst newspapers is Francis L. Wurzburg, for some time past business manager of the Cosmopolitan Magazine.

J. Mitchell Thorson succeeds Mr. Wurzburg on the Cosmopolitan.

FETE FOR NATION'S "MARYS."

Mrs. Mary G. Wicker, of the Noblesville (Ind.) Daily Ledger, is busy just now making preparations for the annual "Reunion of Marys," to be held soon at Noblesville. Mrs. Wicker is secretary of the Association of Marys, the only organization of its kind in the country. All plain Marys are eligible for membership, but Maries and Maryes are ineligible.

THOMPSON AGENCY HANDLES FOOD ECONOMY ADS.

The world's biggest advertising campaign, in which the American people are to be called upon to join in a movement for the conservation of foodstuffs, has been organized by the conservation section of the Food Administration.

The main advertising campaign will be in charge of the J. Walter Thompson Company, a national advertising agency, with headquarters in New York, which has volunteered its services. Charles E. Raymond, vice-president, has come from the Chicago offices to Washington to direct the work.

Miss Nellie Holt has bought the Square Butte (Mont.) Tribune. The Wilsonville (Neb.) Review has been sold to John D. McInerney.

OHIOANS IN NORTH CAROLINA.

DURHAM DAILY SUN IS NOW OWNED ENTIRELY BY THE WEAVERS.

W. W. Weaver and H. R. Weaver, brothers, have purchased the entire stock of the Durham (N. C.) Sun. Both have been connected with the ownership of the paper for several years and simply purchased the interest of Roger Steffan, who acted as editor for the past year. The latter has joined the editorial staff of the Cincinnati Times-Star.

W. W. Weaver, who was president and general manager of the Sun, becomes president and publisher.

H. R. Weaver, who has been secretary and advertising manager, becomes secretary and business manager.

W. W. Weaver began his career on the Springfield (Ohio) News. He was general manager of the American Issue Publishing Company at Westervelt, Ohio, for a few years and was part owner of the Portsmouth (Ohio) Blade at one time.

H. R. Weaver began newspaper work as a "newsie" on the Springfield (Ohio) News. He is a graduate of the Ohio State University School of Journalism. He was advertising manager of the Poughkeepsie (N. Y.) News-Press for one year and advertising manager of the Durham Sun for four years.

AMATEURS ELECT.

The National Amateur Press Association at its meeting in New York elected Harry Martin of Alliance, Ohio, president; James Mosley of Westfield, Mass., first vice-president; Olive G. Owen of Whitehall, Wis., second vice-president; Joseph Vahlheimer, Jr., of Phoenix, Ariz., secretary. Herman Weekstein of Newark, treasurer; Graeme Davis of Vermillion, S. D., official editor.

Executive judges: George J. Houtsin of Brooklyn, Hazel P. Adams of Tupper Lake, N. Y., and Marjorie H. Outwater of Roxbury, Mass.

IN LONDON FOR CHICAGO NEWS.

Julius B. Wood has been selected to represent the Chicago Daily News as London correspondent. Mr. Wood distinguished himself recently by a series of articles in the News on the possible dangers of negro immigration into the North. He wrote in a prophetic vein of the troubles that were likely to result from such immigration and his prophecy was strikingly fulfilled by the recent race troubles in East St. Louis.

NOW VICE-PRESIDENT.

C. A. Dickens has been made vice-president of Municipal Engineering, Chicago. He will continue as advertising manager.

S.N.P.A ENDORSES FEDERAL TRADE PROPOSAL.

ALSO BACKS A.N.P.A IN DEMANDING FAIR WAR TAX TREATMENT—AGENTS HAVE PART IN PROGRAM.

The Southern Newspaper Publishers Association, representing 105 of the leading newspapers of the South, meeting in Asheville, N. C., on July 9, 10 and 11, approved of the proposal of the Federal Trade Commission for the Government to take control of the news print mills in the United States and distribute the paper for the period of the war.

The association also favored the placing of second class mail on the parcel post zone basis, in accordance with the stand of the American Newspaper Publishers Association. It endorsed the proposed amendment of Senator McKellar of Tennessee to House Bill 4280, made on July 22.

The following telegram was sent to the Senate and House:

"The Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association, composed of 105 of the leading daily newspapers of the South, in convention assembled on July 9 unanimously passed a resolution expressing the keenest sympathy with the Government's needs in the present extraordinary financial situation; the most cordial willingness to co-operate in raising the necessary additional revenues, and their desire to stand their just and fair proportion of the increased taxation."

The convention, however, unanimously voiced the opinion that the proposed extra tax on the net revenues of newspapers, which does not apply to other lines of business, is unjust, unfair and discriminatory.

"In reference to the proposed increase in second class postage rates, this association believes that it has no place in a revenue bill, and the proper rate or rates should be determined by an impartial investigation."

"If, however, an increase in postage rates is absolutely necessary at this time, this association believes that the only fair and equitable basis is the zone system, the theory of which is fully outlined in Senator McKellar's amendment, with the present rate applying for the first 300 miles, which investigation has shown already affords the Government a profit, and increasing rates for longer distances, in proportion to the cost to the Government for services rendered publishers."

The McKellar amendment, which was referred to the Senate Finance Committee on June 22, is called an amendment "to provide revenue to defray war expenses and for other purposes. It follows:

"Sec.—That on and after July 31, 1917, all newspapers, magazines and other publications regularly admitted to the mails as matter of the second class, when mailed by the publisher, shall hereafter be subject to the following rates of postage—the zone system now applying to parcel post matter to be adapted also to second class matter:

"Local—1st, 2nd and 3rd zones (under 100 miles) 1 cent per pound.
 "Fourth Zone—(300 to 600 miles) 2 cents per pound.
 "Fifth Zone—(600 to 1000 miles) 3 cents per pound.
 "Sixth Zone—(1000 to 1400 miles) 4 cents per pound.

"Seventh zone—(1400 to 1800 miles) 5 cents per pound.

"Eighth zone—(over 1800 miles) 6 cents per pound.

"Provided: That free in county circulation provided by law shall continue as at present.

"And provided further: That the Postmaster-General may hereafter require publishers to separate or 'make-up' in zones, or in such manner as may be directed, all matter of the second class when offered for mailing."

The association also voted to have printed and sent to the publishers of leading American newspapers an argument in favor of the McKellar amendment prepared by Major E. B. Stahlman of the Nashville Banner. Summed up, Major Stahlman said:

"There is really only one equitable manner of adjustment in dealing with the question of postage rates—and that is in the application of the zone system on the lines indicated in Senator McKellar's amendment, and the press should urge Congress, now that the matter is up for consideration, to promptly adjust the matter in this way."

The telegram was drawn up and presented by a special committee, of which Victor H. Hanson of the Birmingham News was spokesman.

Besides being sent to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House, copies were forwarded to the Senators and Representatives of all Southern states, and to the National Editorial Association, meeting in Minneapolis, suggesting its endorsement. Every member of the S. N. P. A. was urged to impress the matter on his Senator and Congressman, and a copy was also sent to Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, who has shown himself interested in the welfare of the South.

Senator Hoke Smith of Georgia telegraphed the meeting that he fully endorsed the views of the S.N.P.A. and would fight for them on the floor to the last ditch.

Some of the members were in favor of sending a special representative of the S. N. P. A. to Washington and keep him there to watch the war revenue situation and protect the interests of the Southern publishers. It was finally decided to appoint a legislative committee to keep in touch with matters through Urey Woodson of the Owensboro (Ky.) Messenger, who is looking after the interests of the smaller publishers in Washington.

This committee consists of Major E. B. Stahlman of the Nashville Banner; Robert Ewing of the New Orleans States, and R. J. Wortham of the Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

Members were of the opinion that the matter of placing special war taxes on newspapers would not be settled until it is fought out in the House and Senate conference; and that this may not be until August or September.

FOR FEDERAL PAPER CONTROL.

A. V. McIntyre, special paper representative of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, addressed the members on the news print situation and after he had finished he answered questions for over an hour. Resolutions were then adopted endorsing the proposal of the Federal Trade Commission to place the manufacture and distribution of news print paper under Federal control. The resolution follows:

"RESOLVED, That the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association, representing 105 leading daily papers of the South, in convention assembled unqualifiedly approves and strongly urges the immediate adoption of the complete plans of the print paper committee of the American Newspaper Publishers Association to empower the Federal Trade Commission by legislative enactment to control the production of news print paper, to pool its distribution and to fix its price. This action is absolutely necessary to conserve the best interest of our Government and our people under the present extraordinary emergency."

"RESOLVED, That the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association, representing 105 leading daily newspapers of the South, in convention assembled unanimously endorses and urges the adoption of the plans for the release and development of the water power of our country as proposed in the Walsh Bill in the Senate and the Reed Bill in the House. We believe that the adoption of such measures insures the development of our country along industrial lines and especially do they promise permanent relief to the newspapers of the country from the oppressive condition brought about by the news print manufacturers' trust."

OFFICERS.

The officers for 1917-1918, are: President, F. G. Bell, Savannah (Ga.) Morning News; first vice-president, J. H. Allison, Nashville Tennessean-American; second vice-president, Charles H. Allen, Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser; secretary-treasurer, Walter C. Johnson, Chattanooga (Tenn.) News.

Executive Committee: Victor Hanson, Birmingham (Ala.) News; W. T. Anderson, Macon (Ga.) Telegraph;

W. A. Elliot, Jacksonville (Fla.) Times-Union; W. G. Bryan, Atlanta Georgian & American; Edgar M. Foster, Nashville (Tenn.) Banner; Curtis B. Johnson, Knoxville (Tenn.) Sentinel; R. S. Jones, Asheville (N. C.) Citizen; F. C. Withers, Columbia (S. C.) State; S. L. Slover, Norfolk (Va.) Ledger-Dispatch; M. E. Foster, Houston (Texas) Chronicle; Arthur Newmyer, New Orleans (La.) Item; H. Giovannoli, Lexington (Ky.) Leader.

ADVERTISING, SAYS BRYAN

Walter G. Bryan of the Atlanta Georgian and American declared that advertising is just as important for publishers as it is for people who advertise in the newspapers.

He urged them to analyze the reasons why people advertise in and subscribe to their papers, and why they do not; then set to work and systematically remedy the defects found. He said telephone solicitation for subscribers was very successful—stating that one girl in an office can get from 6 to 12 new subscribers a day on the telephone. The circulation department, the editor and even the proprietor of the paper should take a hand in the work in turn when other methods to get a subscriber fail.

Education of advertisers must be accomplished by the publishers themselves and people must be educated to read advertisements. This is to be best accomplished by the publisher taking his own medicine and advertising, then following up the advertising in a proper way.

Circulation and advertising rates should be raised, said Mr. Bryan, and rate cards must be strictly adhered to. He said the Georgian and American recently raised its street sales to 3 cents a copy. The loss in circulation at first was 20 per cent daily and 10 per cent Sunday. The daily is now back to within 10 per cent of what it was before the raise, and Sunday is normal again. In addition the receipts for papers have increased by $33,000 over what they were at the lower price.

"When newspaper publishers learn the use of advertising for their own uses, they will lose much of the lost motion that hampers them, said Mr. Bryan. When they utilize advertising, publishers will make successful competition no matter whether they are confronted by war problems or almost any other obstacles."

Russell R. Whitman, manager of the Audit Bureau of circulations, and Amon G. Carter of the Fort Worth Star-Telegram, talked on the advantages of the A. B. C. and the recent improvements in the service that are calculated to reduce the length of time heretofore consumed in making the audits.

The report of the committee that audited the accounts of the secretary treasurer was highly complimentary to Secretary W. C. Johnson and in recognition of many special services rendered by him a bonus of $3000 was voted to be presented to him.

STATE ASSOCIATION.

J. L. Horne of the Rocky Mount (N. C.) Telegram told what state associations of daily newspapers can accomplish for the benefit of members. He explained the workings of the North Carolina Association of Afternoon Dailies, which has arranged for news service, buying of print paper and the promotion of advertising. Its work now has reached the point where each member is the local advertising representative for the other 14 members. Each member endeavors to get business for the entire membership and several accounts have been worked out to advantage along this line. If he cannot close a campaign for all members he sends a tip out and each member works for himself.

President R. S. Jones of the Asheville Times said: "The S. N. P. A. has more than justified its existence in the past year and has every reason to look forward to many more years of still further usefulness." He said the actions taken by the S. N. P. A. has helped materially in killing censorship and second class mail increase proposals and in getting government action against news print manufacturers.

Mr. Jones further said:

"The past twelve months have been ones of great activity and probably of considerable anxiety to most members of the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association.

"A year ago it seemed as though the prices of white paper and other materials entering into the manufacture of a daily newspaper had about reached their zenith, but the prices of a year ago seem low as compared with prevailing quotations today.

"The problems confronting us now are therefore much more serious than they were a year ago.

PRICE INCREASES NECESSARY.

"Subscription and advertising rates have quite generally been increased to meet the rising cost of doing business, but further increases will be necessary and additional economies must be introduced to maintain newspaper properties at a high degree of efficiency and continue them as useful factors in the various communities which they serve.

"During the past few months the Government's need of the daily newspaper has been strikingly emphasized by the phenomenal success of the Liberty Bond and Red Cross campaigns.

"This attitude of loyalty and patriotism was not confined to any particular class of newspaper, but was general throughout the country and the members of this association have every reason to feel proud of the part played by the press of the South, fortunate in its selection of a secretary and treasurer. Walter C. Johnson has performed the duties of his office in a manner to cause most favorable comment from every member.

"His office has been the source of information along all lines and his bulletins have contained a surprising amount of data, facts and figures which have been of great help. Too much cannot be said in praise of Mr. Johnson's efficiency and all-around usefulness to the S. N. P. A. and all its members."

"It is particularly gratifying to record the fact that the American press remains unmuzzled and that there will be no censorship exercised by the Government as long as the newspapers maintain their present course in acting as their own censors.

"It has been clearly demonstrated that the newspapers of this country will not betray the confidence which the Government reposes in them."

TRIBUTE TO JOHNSON

To Secretary W. C. Johnson, of the Chattanooga News, President Jones paid this compliment:

"Our association has been most Reports showed that various advertising campaigns conducted by Southern newspapers have been productive of much good, and it was hoped that this year the scope of advertising may be greatly broadened.

The increase in membership was marked, and most satisfactory and clearly indicated that the S.N.P.A. fills a need which Southern publishers are rapidly coming to recognize.

Although the times had been strenuous, several members erected new buildings and many installed additional equipment indicating the healthy condition existing in the publishing business in the South.

Although the original object of the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association was to bring the publishers and business managers of Southern newspapers together for the discussion of questions pertaining to the business departments of their various properties, the scope of the association has gradually but steadily broadened and now extends to the editorial department as well. The discussions, therefore, with entire propriety included subjects pertaining to the editorial as well as the business department.

The healthy condition enjoyed by Southern newspapers even in the hard times of the past year, was attested by the reports showing that not one of the 105 members suspended publication, and there were no consolidations.

A survey of the membership of the S.N.P.A., including the new members, revealed that out of a total of 103, 42 are morning papers printing a Sunday morning edition; 8 are morning with no Sunday edition; 35 are evening papers (six-day); while 18 are evening papers with Sunday morning editions.

The average daily circulation for the six months ending October 1, 1916, was 1,922,534. Average Sunday, 1,447,953.

A survey of quite a number of publications comparing the figures of October 1, 1916, with that of the Government statements and A.B.C. reports April 1, 1917 showed that without an exception there has been splendid increases in circulation.

The total news print requirements of the membership for the year 1917 is 95,040 tons.

Seventy-three members of the association are members of the A.B.C. while eighty are Associated Press papers.

Secretary Walter C. Johnson, of the Chattanooga News, reported:

"The Southern Newspaper Publishers Association is on a solid foundation and is capable of rendering greater service to its members in future years than in the past.

"Despite the growth of the association numerically and the fact that a number of extraordinary conditions arose during the year that entailed considerable expense, the association has operated within its income and has a cash balance over and above that of last year. A portion of the funds was placed on a savings account and interest was earned during the year.

"The increase in membership and financial showing in a manner reflects the healthy condition existing among our members and this, too, in the face of the high cost of printing a daily newspaper."

MEMBERSHIP.

The election of 35 new members at the meeting gave the association a total membership of 105, or an increase over last year of 50 per cent.

Secretary Johnson estimated that "there are yet approximately 60 daily papers in the Southern states of sufficient size to justify their becoming members of the S.N.P.A., quite a number of whom have already manifested an interest and will no doubt join when they are awakened to a realization of the value of the association."

The following were the new members elected:

A number of cooperative advertising campaigns were conducted during the year by groups of S.N.P.A. members in behalf of the South and Southern newspapers, but only one of these was handled by the association. At the last convention a fund of $500 was appropriated for the use of the advertising committee to publish a booklet.

S.N.P.A. SERVICE.

On service rendered to members, Secretary Johnson said:

"During the year the secretary has been called upon and has rendered helpful service to a number of members who availed themselves of the invitation to make the secretary's office a clearing house.

"Quite a few called for and were supplied print paper, matrix paper, tissue paper and metal to meet emergencies.

"Other members repeatedly sought advice regarding contracts for print paper, during the acute stages of the news print shortage.

"Another member used this office in collecting a long past due account.

"In one instance the good offices of the secretary were sought and used in bringing about an understanding between a member of the association and an organization in which his publication as well as a number of our members are affiliated.

"The office has been instrumental in supplying pressmen, advertising men and reporters to members making known their wants.

"A member making known his desire to sell an interest in one of his publications was put in touch with a prospective purchaser and a trade consummated.

"This service was rendered without profit to the secretary or the association."

The bulletin form of keeping members in touch with news of interest was successfully adopted and operated by the secretary. From January 2 to June 30 twenty bulletins, aggregating 108 pages, were issued and mailed to members, prospective members, trade papers, etc., to the number of 1,941. A form of binder was adopted and sold to members who desired to keep bulletin files.

The secretary began work on a past record of the association and completed it as far back as 1913, when the present constitution and by-laws were adopted. The record of previous years will be further compiled in the future.

NO HIGHER DUES YET.

Some of the members recommended increasing the dues, but the secretary was not in favor of it at this time. He said:

"In view of the present condition of the treasury and the increase in income through the addition of new members with the prospect of further increase from additional new members and the fact that many of the recent additions to the membership are small publications and the amount of the dues in the association appeal to them, the secretary is of the opinion that no increase in dues should be made until the activities of the association make it necessary."

Fitting marks of respect, in the form of resolutions, were paid by the association to members who had died during the year—Harvey L. Wilson of the Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch, and James R. Gray, president and editor of the Atlanta Journal.

(Ky.) Leader, and James H. Caine of the Asheville Citizen, were appointed a committee to draft the resolutions, which they did as follows:

"Whereas since the last annual meeting of the S. N. P. A., two of our most highly esteemed members have departed this life, and

"Whereas we have learned of their deaths with deep sorrow, therefore be it

"Resolved: That we, the members of the S. N. P. A. in convention assembled at Asheville, N. C., July 9, 1917, hereby tender to the families of these deceased fellow newspaper men our sincerest sympathy and add our testimonials to their worth as men and citizens and as honorable and useful members of our profession.

"Second: That these resolutions be spread upon the minute book of this association and that copies be sent to the bereaved families."

In the discussion of news print paper, many of the publishers complained of high prices. Some believed that the situation would be relieved in a few months. Others held just the opposite opinion—that an era of even higher prices is coming. But it was decided that the matter might just as well be left in the hands of the Federal Trade Commission and the Department of Justice for the present and wait and see what becomes of it.

About a dozen publishers reported having increased wages to union employees ranging from 5 to 15 per cent. No reductions were reported.

In discussion of the libel law, no one was able to announce that any improvement had been made in any state. The S. N. P. A. may appoint a legislative committee to keep its eye on national legislation, with members co-operating in their respective states looking after any matters that may arise detrimental to the interests of the newspapers.

All expressed the desire for a universal libel law, but thought that such a thing was well nigh impossible—now at least. A reduction in the number of libel actions in which members were involved during the past year was reported. This was accounted for by the fact that great precautions are being taken in editing material.

Reports showed that the press agent is still on the job to get all the free publicity he can. His number is not growing any less; but the newspapers are greatly reducing the amount of space the free grafter is getting.

For the first time in the history of the association a woman delegate was in attendance. She was Lois Mayes of the Pensacola (Fla.) Journal. She was warmly welcomed by her associate members.

The publishers closed their meeting with a golf tournament for the Editor and Publisher Cup.

ECONOMY AND EFFICIENCY.

MEANS THE S.N.P.A. MEMBERS HAVE FOUND TO BETTER CONDUCT BUSINESS.

Much interest was shown by the S. N. P. A. members on the subject of economy in the operation of their plants. A goodly portion of the program was given over to discussion of this kind and many present told ways and means of saving.

The S. N. P. A. has its greatest value to members, it was declared and agreed to, in getting the publishers together at a time and place where they can best discuss their problems, and P. T. Anderson of the Macon Telegraph said that any member of the S. N. P. A. who accomplishes something in his home office and doesn't come to the annual meeting and explain it to his fellow publishers is unfaithful to his S. N. P. A. membership obligations.

The serious attention brought out by meetings is accomplishing great things for Southern publishers, said Mr. Anderson.

"Never stand for the newspaper business being called a game," he said. "It is a sacred trust. Be proud of your profession."

He also believes the newspaper publisher has no place in politics; he must represent the public welfare—not his own private interests. "A poor paper reminds me of a mad dog let loose in the community," said Mr. Anderson.

The speaker called attention to the great amount of loss in money suffered by publishers because of wasted stereotype and composing machine metal, saying many publishers believe their metal is being stolen when in reality there is a leak in the business office.

"See that the waste sold back to the refiners is nothing but black dust," he said. "If there is any shiny metal in it you are losing money. Have the skim melted over and over until the good metal is out of it. Mold it into pigs and put one or two into each pot of metal; they serve to strengthen it. The refiner will pay just as much for the black waste as he will for wasted metal. Insisting on a thermometer being used to give the right temperature to the metal will eliminate much costly trouble."

Mr. Anderson and J. H. Allison of the Nashville Tennessean and American said that it is well to encourage employees to work out their own departmental problems. Both have had fine results in saving money and getting efficiency by telling their men the end they wanted to reach and letting them find the way to it themselves.

Both these publishers reported fine results in making home-made and re-making stereotype mats. Mr. Anderson's men make satisfactory mats from 7 sheets of news print, either white or printed, pasting each together, and topping them with two sheets of stereotype tissue. He declared these mats are just as good as the regulation new mat made of 1 sheet of white blotting paper, 2 of red rags and 3 sheets of tissue.

Mr. Allison reported making a satisfactory mat out of old mats. It is excellent for cuts and impossible to tell from a brand new one. His formula is:

Let the old mats soak in a tub of water for a half hour.

Take them out and let them stand overnight in the water they have absorbed.

Iron them out with an iron hand roller to remove the water.

Take off the old tissue, replacing it with two new sheets of tissue; the under sheet to be of cheaper domestic quality and the top one of better imported tissue.

That gives a mat as good as new, but is not usable again. Its cost is only about 45 per cent of new mats, which have lately increased 50 per cent in price. The remaking method overcomes this advance.

Mr. Allison said newspapers can use scrap rope, buying it cheaply. He pays about 9 cents for what would cost 13 to 15 cents for the same amount of new rope. Then he sells back the knots and ends for the same price he paid for the rope.

Another publisher reported selling used mats for 75 cents per 100 pounds to a waste dealer.

Speaking of selling waste paper, Mr. Allison said he sells sweepings, wrappers off rolls and ends for 15 cents per 100 pounds; printed over-issues at 40 cents per 100 pounds, and waste white paper for 75 cents.

Publishers who had had experience with the dry mat process of stereotyping heartily recommended the method for economical and trouble reducing reasons. A paper from Ben B. Wood, of the Wood Flong Company, gave practical information in the use of the dry mat, showing that from 1½ to 3 per cent could be saved in the amount of news print consumed, besides its time and labor-saving and other operating reducing qualities.

In telling the value of attending an S. N. P. A. meeting F. H. Miller of the Montgomery (Ala.) Journal said his attendance last year saved him $22,000 since then. It showed him that he had been conducting business in a loose way. He eliminated colored combs and dead-head copies; decreased size and installed a waste paper baler. He is now selling waste for $48 a month.

He learned to use old paper for wrappers, and in cutting the size saved $2,000 a year in composition. In electric light globes he saved $300 a year. By establishing a stock room every item of supply, from lead pencils up, is given out only by requisition.

F. G. Bell of the Savannah News reported his paper in the past year had printed 100 less pages in total, with 100 more pages of advertising. His circulation went up 900 and it had made $1,500 more money. He used to spend $600 a year for Manila wrappers. He substituted for them old papers and they were not missed.

W. A. Elliott told how the Jacksonville Times-Union is working toward the point of being a "50-50" newspaper. In 1915 he said its proportion of advertising was 42 per cent; in 1916, 43 per cent; and this year so far it has been 47 per cent. He said he finds it effective to supply the composing room foreman on the first of each month with the schedule for the corresponding month of the previous year. This guides him in making-up to beat the old record. The size of the paper is being reduced by cutting reading matter in a way that does not hurt its quality.

P. T. Anderson mentioned he had found that the proper cost for operating a stereotype department is from 1½ to 2½ per cent. If it exceeds that, there is something wrong.

NEWSPAPERS AND THE A.A.C.W.

A. G. NEWMYER TELLS WHY THEY SHOULD JOIN—FIGHT BATTLES COLLECTIVELY.

The first gun in the very important matter of strengthening the Newspaper Departmental of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World was fired by A. G. Newmyer, business manager of the New Orleans Item and vice-president of the A.A.C.W., and also vice-president of the Newspaper Departmental of the same organization, when in an executive session of the S. N. P. A. he said some trite truths that caused five newspapers to immediately join the A.A.C.W. and others to take the matter under consideration.

In his talk Mr. Newmyer had the following to say:

It has been but little more than a month since I was elected one of the vice-presidents of the A.A.C.W., representing the fourth district—the territory running from Maryland through New Mexico.

"President William C. D'Arcy has begun to formulate plans for the association's activities during the coming year. His cabinet has met but once. I am, therefore, unqualified to speak with any authority as the official representative of the 17,000 membership of the Associated Clubs.

"However, I do welcome this opportunity to briefly discuss with fellow newspaper men my personal belief that the Newspaper Departmental of the Associated Clubs, from both selfish and unselfish viewpoints, deserves greater support from them than it has received in the past.

"The 17,000 members of the Associated Clubs represent in the main buyers of advertising; and right here it is probably well to remark that blue-sky, hand-shaking, mere mixability are playing a lesser part in advertising than ever before.

"The advertising man possessed of a generous gift of gab and a shift of garb is fast disappearing. In his place has come the fellow with facts; the dealer in distribution; the chap offering cooperation. The old stock of get-rich-quick adjectives has been given a well earned rest. Plain, simple, unvarnished truth is the basis of get-the-money copy today.

"The A.A.C.W. is largely responsible for this change. Its membership, working from within, has brought respect—self-respect and public respect—to paid printed publicity.

"The most important activities of the association are classed under two heads—educational and vigilance.

"The educational efforts of the clubs are making better buyers of advertising and better sellers of advertising.

"The vigilance work is making better buyers from advertising and surer sales from advertising.

"The work of the educational committee, I am sure, is known to all of you. More efficient advertising writers, buyers and sellers have been created; the public has been educated to a proper appreciation of the paid printed word; authoritative books on advertising have been written; schools and colleges of advertising have been started and manned.

"Advertising has been lifted from the circus tent and placed upon the college campus.

BETTER BUSINESS BUREAU.

"In a recent letter President D'Arcy expressed a dislike for the term 'Vigilance Committee.' He called it a misnomer. He expressed a preference for the term 'Better Business Bureau.' I heartily agree with him.

"Frankly, I believe that a lack of understanding of the plan and scope of the A.A.C.W.'s vigilance work has kept your whole-hearted support from the advertising club movement.

"I am fearful that some of you have been under the impression that the organization was damnably destructive rather than carefully constructive.

"I believe you have figured that 'high-brow' advertising men have been working overtime to show you how to kill copy, and have spent precious little time in creating new fields of business.

"You have simply been out of touch with the constructive work of this great body. I can understand your viewpoint; because there have been times and there are occasions when newspaper publishers have only been approached by the associated or local clubs when money was wanted, or when some advertiser became 'over-enthusiastic.' Now the facts as I see them are these:

FIVE PER CENT OF ADS FRAUDULENT.

Less than 5 per cent of all advertising is fraudulent. But the honest advertiser is surely entitled to 100 cents worth of reader confidence for each dollar he invests.

"With 5 per cent dishonest advertising in your columns, he is likely only to get 95 cents worth of reader confidence for that dollar. You wouldn't be satisfied—and he isn't satisfied.

"I know that none of you want to form commercial partnerships with fakera. I know that none of you have one standard of honesty for your news columns and another stand-

THE A.A.A.A. MAKES START WITH PUBLISHERS.

SOUTHERN DIVISION MEETS WITH THE S.N.P.A.—PRESIDENT MASSENGALE TELLS AIMS AND PURPOSES.

The really first step of the recently organized Association of American Advertising Agencies to bring into closer contact its agent members and the publishers occurred at the annual meeting of the Southern Publishers Association, held in Asheville, N. C., this week. The Southern Advertising Agents Association, the sectional division of the A. A. A. A., met at the same time and place and enjoyed a part of the program of the publishers' meetings.

It elected the following officers: President, St. Elmo Massengale, of Atlanta; vice-president, Jefferson Thomas, Jacksonville; secretary-treasurer, Edwin F. Johnson of the Johnson-Dallis Agency, of Atlanta. James Cecil represented the Cecil Agency of Richmond; D. D. Staples represented the Staples Agency of Richmond; Thomas Basham of Louisville, and S. O. Landry represented the Chambers Agency of New Orleans.

The Southern Advertising Agents Association is confined to agents who are recognized by the American Newspaper Publishers Association and the Periodical Publishers Association. Its membership is now only seven, as noted in the attendance; but any other Southern agent who receives recognition is eligible to membership.

These meetings of the publishers and the agents are believed to be the first of their kind ever held in the United States. They mark the beginning of the movement of the A. A. A. A. to bring the agents and publishers to a "point of close contact."

ation of welcome and asked the southern Agents' Association and the

The publishers appreciated the new spirit of the agents and passed a resolution of how the S.N.P.A. can co-operate with the advertising agents for best mutual advantage, and also endorsed its "Standards of Practice."

St. Elmo Massengale, president of the Southern Agents' Association and a member of the executive committee of the A.A.A.A. addressed the publishers and gave them a thorough explanation of the aims and purposes of the "4 As" and on the functions of a recognized advertising agent. He said:

"As old as the advertising agency business is nationally, there has never been a national organization until now.

"I quote W. H. Johns, our president:

"For the first time, the really representative advertising agencies have come together into an organization closely knit, well grounded and meaning business. This is proved by the fact that our annual dues will aggregate from $50,000 to $60,000 a year, which will be ample for us to maintain offices in both New York and Chicago, each office being under the competent direction of an executive manager.

"All agencies recognized by A.N.P.A. and Periodical Publishers' Associations are eligible to membership in the "4 As."

"The chief aim of our plan is to give a definite point of contact between the agencies of the country, acting together with other associations such as the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association, the National Periodical Publishers' Association (the Quoin Club), the Farm Paper Association, the American Press Association and other associations of advertising media, and at the same time to be able to act as a body in conjunction with the Association of National Advertisers and other important commercial organizations interested in the development of adequate and sincere advertising methods."

"I know that publishers will welcome this development in the business of the advertising agencies because so many of your important members have told us that it was the one link needed in the chain in the movement to improve conditions such as better credits, cleaner methods, a fair basis of proper recognition and particularly in co-operating with you and your associations in establishing a better understanding and appreciation on the part of the business and financial world as a whole, of the usefulness and proper scope of advertising in modern business.

"It is our hope that by our activities, plus your own, that we can promote good advertising and thereby serve the public and at the same time protect the interests of the advertiser, the publisher, and on the other hand, to be in a position to safeguard the rights and privileges of our own members.

"Much has been said pro and con on advertising agency relations.

"The banking and insurance industry has gradually improved as men become more intelligent, but it would be suicidal to undertake to do away with these institutions because certain defects have developed. They are institutions which it is impossible to get along without because they are useful.

"The same is true of our profession. There may be some defects in the present advertising agency arrangement, but each year they are becoming less, and those who want to make advertising fulfill its greatest usefulness are now devoting their thought to improving the agencies.

"It is well to take a broad view of this situation and consider the real facts, and therefore I am going to set them down for your consideration.

"As it stands today 90 per cent. of all the advertising has been created or developed by advertising agencies, which means that if advertising is good for anything advertising agents are responsible for a major portion of it.

"The reason is simple. The advertising agency which is thoroughly organized to do the hundred and one things for an advertiser cheaper and better than he can do them for himself, has proved its worthiness by the one known test—success.

"This worthiness is two-fold. On the one side is a worthiness of service, on the other side, economy.

"The dues of the national organization are from $200 to $1,000 per member.

"The educational work of the Association of American Advertising Agents will begin soon and will be thorough and along practical lines.

STRONG MEN MAKE STRONG ORGANIZATIONS.

"And remember you cannot have a big strong organization unless that organization has sufficient work to command the services of high class men.

"According to the present arrangement, it is a big economy to the publisher to co-operate closely with the agency because he receives the following direct benefits:

"First: He deals with an organization which can get in close touch with the different advertisers and decide what is best for each in a more intimate manner than can the publisher.

"Second: It costs money to get business and the present compensation received by the agencies produces the business for the publisher at a less price than he could possibly secure it in any other way.

"Third: They do away with the possibility of loss to the publisher through credits and the enormous expense that would be involved should the publisher be obliged to make collections from individual advertisers.

"This matter of finances is a serious one in advertising. It is not always so much a question of whether the advertiser has the money to pay the bill as it is to see that the advertiser himself is judicious in the expenditure of the money he has.

"Both of these problems the advertising agency can handle much better than can the individual publisher.

"If the publisher had to receive his order and bill each advertiser separately, it would greatly increase his expense, which of necessity would have to be added to the cost of space.

"This valuable service the publisher gets from the advertising agency and when it is all taken into consideration—outside of the value of the creative power of the advertising agency—the commission he pays the advertising agency is extremely nominal, because it is an absolutely known fact that if he did not do business through the agencies as at present, he would have to increase his expense, which would mean increasing the price to the advertiser, who in the end must settle the entire account.

"If the present arrangement were discontinued whereby the advertising agency furnishes these services to the publisher which otherwise would cost the publisher more money, it is certain that the gross rate of advertising space would be increased at least 25 per cent, because the experience of some of the biggest publishers shows that it would cost them that much more to do business direct with the advertisers.

GOOD TO THE ADVERTISER.

"Now, let us turn the matter squarely around and look at the subject from the standpoint of the advertiser and see exactly where he stands.

"If you will thresh this matter out carefully you will find that our only critics come from three sources:

"First: The class of advertising managers who believe their positions would become more important. Some of them fancy they would receive higher salaries. But how can they expect salary increase for raising cost of space to their principals?

"Second: There are certain special representatives of publications who have not been able to secure business in as large amount as they felt their publications were entitled to, and have attempted to unload the responsibility of their failure on the agencies.

"As a general proposition it can be safely set down that the advertising agencies are composed of a set of keen business men, and they know that unless they select mediums of value they will not be able to hold their business, and therefore while in individual cases the agents may make certain mistakes in the selection of publications, in the main the agents are as anxious to select good publications as any one else.

"The special who cannot put his publication over as a rule has a publication which lacks certain essential elements of value. The agents have no faith in it. The agents have experience and records gathered from a hundred sources that are reliable.

"Third: Certain advertising publications have tactfully printed all the matter obtainable on one side of the subject—evidently believing they would procure more advertising themselves, and possibly derive an income from their so-called 'service departments'—which method is bound to become retroactive when advertisers and publishers realize—as they are bound to eventually that this is criticism detrimental to advertising in general.

The publisher fulfills his mission when he provides a creditable medium which is carefully read and generally circulated.

"It is beyond the province of any publication to say 'yes' or 'no' to any large number of advertisers, except on the basis of honesty.

"He can eliminate the dishonest advertiser, and there he must as a rule stop, because it would be impossible for him to go deep enough into the individual problems of the advertiser to formulate a just opinion regarding the feasibility of his work. This is the business of the advertising agent, and we never could have the kind of mentality directed toward this work unless there was some provision to pay for this very important service.

"I fancy that a good many advertisers who have enjoyed agency service sometimes fail to appreciate the unwritten part of their work.

"By this I mean that they have only looked upon the finished product produced by the agency and have frequently paid too little attention to the elimination process which has taken place in order to produce an ad which was worthy, practical and profitable.

"The average advertising campaign in any reputable agency is a result of the thought and effort of a number of expensive men, and when I say expensive, I mean that they are men whose value commands their price, and not that they are expensive in any arbitrary way.

"There are a few articles which do deal in the way of copy or plans. They are articles which seem only to demand the repetition of the name, as we used to say 'Keeping the name before the public.'

"But my mind refers to a product which has been advertised for years on the principal of 'keeping the name before the public.'

"Within a year this concern came to the conclusion that it was losing an immense amount of their effort because they did not do more, and since that time they have used expensive space in educating the public to use their products in new and different ways, greatly to their profit. The new plans were suggested and carried forward by a good agency.

REPEATING THE OLD OR TELLING A
"If it were only a question of reiterating the name over and over again, I will agree that a space buyer and a man who could set type might do the business, but such advertising propositions are so comparatively few that they cut absolutely no figure in the total proposition.

"The advertising campaign today is a campaign.

"Moves on the checker-board of business; expanding one idea and backing it up with another; getting close to the selling heart of the business and reflecting it to the best advantage in the advertising.

"Even in advertising a simple product, such as soap, baking powder, or crackers, there is immense opportunity for creative, ingenious and effective effort, which only trained advertising minds can develop.

"If this were not true we never would have had the present conditions in advertising. The real fact of the matter is the advertising agents are doing 90 per cent. of the business simply because they have made good. Otherwise some other method of handling advertising would be in vogue at the present time.

"I have seen accounts grow from small beginnings. I know intimately how the work has been handled and I have yet to know a single account which called for general advertising which could not be handled in a much better manner in an agency than by any other method.

"I am personally acquainted with some of the most important advertisers in the United States. I know many who have good advertising organizations of their own, but I do not know a single one today which does not feel the need of matching their ideas up alongside of the best ideas which an advertising agency can furnish.

HOW ADVERTISERS SEE THE AGENT.

"Just the other day I was talking to the head of the largest concern of its class in the United States. It has an advertising organization of its own, which in my judgment is the best in America.

"I do not know of a selling organization or advertising organization that seem to require anything unusual which has a better, more self-contained working force than has that organization. The manager told me that they had their plans well outlined for the next year's work and that they were going to take those plans and go over them carefully with their agent before fully determining what should be done.

"And what does this mean?

"It means that that advertiser realized that at least he could only understand a part of his own problem and that his business required the broad view which the thorough-going advertising agency men could give it.

"He would no more think of getting along without that advertising service than any other big company—no matter how well equipped their own legal department—would think of getting along without the expert advice and assistance of associate counsel.

"Should you tell that man that a plan had been devised whereby the advertising agency service was to be abolished, he would laugh at you, because it would set him back to the condition he was in some years ago when I first knew him, when he had no advertising agency, did no general advertising whatever, and depended entirely upon circulars and form letters to the trade.

"At least one thousand clean-cut and reputable representatives are employed by the advertising agencies.

"They do not cost the publisher a cent beyond their pay for the business actually produced, and then the charge covers a service for the advertiser and the guaranteeing of the collections to the publisher.

"Take away this creative force, oblige the publisher to do business with the advertiser direct, and the entire machinery would become disorganized.

"It would surely cut the volume of business in two and reduce its efficiency one-half.

"I am for the honest agents.

"The majority are honest and their good work proves it. There is a chance for improvement. The only way I know of to make a thing better is to let everyone know the facts about it.

"We have organized for that purpose.

"I am for the honest publishers because I believe most of them sell space at a reasonable price—a cost which will yield a profit if properly made use of.

"Considering the magnitude of the business and the responsibilities involved, the agent is not receiving enough for his services.

"There is a sufficient variety of agents from which to choose to enable every advertiser to secure one exactly to his liking.

"I am in favor of any and every plan to improve agency service.

"The publishers know, possibly better than any of the advertisers, how much they rely upon the agents and how far short their present organizations come of being able to handle the complex problems of advertising.

"The publisher cannot possibly handle with equal impartiality and ability the diversified and competing interests which use space in his columns.

"I have asked big advertisers how they would like to depend upon their own organizations for regular, continuous advertising service, and the answers are all the same.

"The advertising agency has the purchasing equipment, based upon the broadest possible experience.

"Here and there an agency may fool an advertiser on the selection of his mediums for selfish reasons, but as a rule any trifling with the best interests of the client spells the loss of an account, and no one knows this better than the agency man.

"Every consideration of economy and efficiency is on the side of the present advertising agency arrangement for the mutual benefit of publisher and advertiser, whereby the agent creates and increases business for the publisher—guarantees the accounts and is charged with the responsibility of making the transaction profitable for the advertiser.

"The present methods have not been brought about by the ingenious calculations of any one man, but rather they are a result of the growth, development and requirements of the business, and therefore they represent the best thought in advertising.

"The right agent must have your full confidence. He must have ability, experience and integrity, and these are qualifications which do not travel hand in hand with the hammered-down price.

HIGH CLASS MEN.

"It takes money to furnish service. In Chicago, there are five agency men earning $20,000 a year, and they are not the proprietors either.

"There are twenty earning $10,000 a year, and probably fifty who earn $5,000.

"If you had an employe costing you these amounts, would you have him do a cut-rate business which only yielded enough income to cover a little more than the expense of clerk hire?

"If you were an agent, would you expect to make money at such odds unless the business would repeat?

"There is considerable agency service that can be done by clerks; the bookkeeping, the checking and the details of orders.

"But the message part, the honest selection of mediums and the real campaigning, is not machine work.

"There is no such thing as agency perfection or advertising perfection. The only thing we can do at present is to press steadily forward.

"But in which direction?

"You can help us.

"The auction block agent has little at stake and little to lose. With him it is only a question of a 'clean-up' the profits on this order.

"With a real agent it generally eats up the profits on the first year's business to get it started. If it goes right, it sticks. If not, the 'account changes hands'.

"The biggest evil of the whole business lies in the fact that the advertiser himself does not go deeply enough into his own affairs to really know service from 'salve.' If he did, he could judge with more accuracy.

"Many accounts have been 'switched' too soon and others have drifted too long.

"The publisher and the agent know these facts to be true. Depending somewhat upon circumstances, they will acknowledge their accuracy.

"The advertiser should also know them. Then he will be able to get the full benefit of his advertising money.

"There are approximately 300 advertising agents in the United States.

"They are all reasonably keen after business. Probably half of the total number are not entitled to confidence when measured on the basis of experience, ability and success—137 have formed our national organization.

"The half which are worthy carry fully nine-tenths of the total business.

"It is said that about $400,000 a year is carried through cut-rate agents. The majority of the accounts that fall down are cut-rate accounts.

"This is approximately a true picture of the conditions as they exist today.

ELIMINATING THE UNWORTHY.

"Advertisers are continually going back and forth across the line. The dumping end of the procession is the cut-rate end, for the simple reason that it does not produce sufficient revenue to pay for the necessary service, which in every case is quite as necessary as the space itself, even though the cost is about 90 per cent. less.

"Therefore is there any reason why the advertiser should not avail himself of this advantage without imperiling his business existence?

"Why should he do without service which, if it is right—the kind you can get if you are careful in the selection of your agent—will vitalize your entire appropriation?

"I firmly believe that my profession is as honorable and as important as that of any other in existence, not excepting doctors, lawyers or any one.

"The brains side is a dangerous side on which to economize.

"Won't you help us, brother publishers, clean out the cut-rate, unreliable advertising agents?

"I believe you will.

"We ask very earnestly for your help and co-operation, as we go along, growing, adding other members and at the same time improving service, eliminating the evils and those things that bring criticism on our profession."

COUNTRY EDITORS EXPRESS THEIR WILL.

N.E.A STANDS BY BIGGER PUBLISHERS IN DEMANDING FAIR TREATMENT BY GOVERNMENT—FOUNDER DIES.

Several hundred representative members of the rural newspapers of the United States answered "A Call to Service" in Minneapolis on June 9 to 12. They conferred on the best ways of serving their country during the war and afterwards, and aiding themselves by adopting better business methods.

The usual enjoyment by N.E.A. members of their annual meetings was greatly dampened by the sudden death of Colonel B. B. Herbert, the association's founder, while he was attending the convention.

The sessions were of usual interest and well attended. Definite expression of the sentiment was embodied in suitable resolutions, which were unanimously adopted affecting burdensome conditions and calling on Congress to enact as speedily as possible legislative relief as recommended by the Federal Trade Commission.

These resolutions cover the "paper trust" controversy, the revenue tax, postage rates and kindred interests brought on by war conditions. One especially calls on the Government to take over all paper manufacturing industries in the United States and regulate the imports from Canada.

H. C. Hotelling of the Mapleton (Minn.) Blue Earth County Enterprise was elected president. The other officers are:

Vice-president, Guy U. Hardy, Colorado; secretary, George Schlosser, South Dakota; treasurer, J. Byron Caine, Kansas; executive committee, Edwin Albright, Tennessee; Dietrick Lamade, Pennsylvania; G. L. Caswell, Iowa; B. C. Bragdon, Michigan; E. L. Peterson, North Dakota; H. H. Bliss, Wisconsin.

The standing committees are to be named by the new president.

A spirited contest for the next place of meeting between 17 cities culminated in the selection of Little Rock, Ark., for 1918.

The report of the executive committee, presented by G. E. Hosmer of Denver, chairman of the committee, dealt with the efforts of publishers to obtain print paper at reasonable prices, and also touched on economies which should be practiced by publishers.

"During the last year," said Mr. Hosmer, "this committee has assumed the burden of attempting to protect the newspaper men, particularly those operating small establishments, from the greed of the 'print paper trust'."

"Investigation by the Federal Trade

Commission and by our committee has clearly shown that there has been only a slight increase in the cost of manufacturing print paper since 1915, and you all know the increase has been from 50 per cent to 200 per cent in the selling price.

"I am firmly of the opinion that but for the work that has been done by our organization and by the affiliated state and district organizations, we would now be paying at least an average of 1 cent a pound more for paper than we are paying.

"I would estimate that the work that has been done by this organization and by the various other press and editorial organizations of the country, has saved and will save the newspaper publishers during 1917 at least $25,000,000 over what they would have had to pay had the fight not been taken up by us a year ago."

TRADE BOARD PLAN ENDORSED.

Of the proper method to obtain relief Mr. Hosmer said:

"It seems to me that what should be done is to give the Federal Trade Commission specific power to fix prices and take charge of distribution of print paper. If that is not sufficient, give the trade commission power to take over mills and operate them during the war period. We are now in a critical condition in this country, and the pirates who have been holding us up on print paper, as well as those who have been holding the people up on foods, should be prosecuted and their privileges curtailed.

"There is no question but that the interests of the country demand that the publishers be furnished paper at a reasonable price and in sufficient quantities to meet their legitimate demands. We should economize in every way possible. If you can get out an issue of six pages do not print eight, just simply to show that you are printing a larger paper than your competitor.

The report said that the censorship question had been settled "fairly satisfactorily," and that newspapers should not misuse their privileges.

A resolution urging Congress to enact legislation requiring the Federal Trade Commission to take over the operation of American paper mills and to import and distribute Canadian print paper as a war measure was forwarded to Washington. Adoption of the resolution followed lengthy discussions relative to print paper prices, which, speakers declared, have increased from 50 to 200 per cent since 1915, with but a slight increase in the cost of manufacturing.

POSTAGE RAISE CRITICIZED.

Frank B. White of Chicago vigorously opposed a zone scheme of newspaper postage with a limitation of five cents a pound for the furthest zone, and the convention's action is indorsing the scheme probably will be reconsidered. Speakers also condemned the proposed 5 per cent tax on newspaper profits as an unjust addition to the regular income and corporation taxes.

GOVERNMENT SHOULD PAY FOR ADS.

Opposition to free advertising and publicity by newspapers of the country was voiced by speakers at the Tuesday session of the convention. S. G. Goldthwaite of Boone, Ia., president of the Iowa Press Association, recommended the appointment of a field secretary to conduct a campaign against free advertising.

He said editors should contribute freely of their space to the Government during the war, but predicted that a new arrangement would be entered into after the war.

"The Government has commandeered advertising space in newspapers for many years," he asserted. "Payment should be made for this space."

N. A. Huse of New York, vice-president of the American Press Association, took a similar stand.

A committee will be appointed to investigate sites in Texas, Florida and at Hot Springs, S. C., for the proposed home for retired editors and newspaper writers and will submit a report at the next annual meeting.

W. P. Kirkwood, of the department of journalism, University of Minnesota, outlined to the convention what schools of journalism already have done and what they will do in the future.

The speaker declared that to accomplish their objects schools of journalism must be taken in as an integral part of the profession and have the loyal support of newspaper producers.

A memorial service was conducted for the Benjamin B. Herbert, founder of the association, who died in St. Paul on July 11.

E. H. Tomlinson, president of the association, announced that at the first opportunity he would reply to statements made by Dr. Marion L. Burton, president of the University of Minnesota, at a dinner given the editors at the university farm Monday evening.

"I cannot let go unchallenged statements that the newspapers are not printing the truth about the war, but instead are telling people things they like to hear," Mr. Tomlinson said.

President E. H. Tomlinson of the Norristown (N. J.) Daily Record said it was fitting that rural newspapers, particularly, should now be preparing to help solve the country's problems after the war, and this meant to render service of the very highest type.

He urged that rural newspaper devote themselves to developing a closer community spirit—to welding together and giving force and power to community life—thereby doing a great service to the public, while substantially helping the publishers themselves. For instance, Mr. Tomlinson said:

"Antiquated merchandising methods are permitting too much trade to go to big towns and mail order houses that should be kept at home. We know this weakness exists. It is our concern. We must find and apply the remedy.

"That remedy, as has been discovered in other very similar cases, is special education and training to fit merchants and their clerks for modern methods of teaching modern problems.

"The lure of the mail order house catalogue, with its tempting prices and enticing pictures, but inadequate description and attending uncertainties in ordering can be successfully met when merchants and clerks have been taught the art of advertising and to make full use of their home papers; when they have learned how to conduct selling campaigns and how to display and demonstrate goods; how to win and hold good-will and how to give real service.

"With such education the mail order house will soon become a bogey of the past.

"The bringing about of improved conditions which will increase the volume of our advertising and the bettering of our business methods are but two forms of endeavor which can profitably claim our attention."

It was declared that the N.E.A. saved $25,000,000 for publishers as the result of the fight it made in Washington against the enormously high prices the small publishers were being compelled to pay for news print—and this without any regular fund to draw on.

It was the opinion of the meeting that the newspapers must be dealt with fairly by the Government. One editor said:

"The war is a burden to us financially. We furnish the Government what it most needs without cost to it, while for all else it has to pay big prices, yet we alone were picked out for a super-tax. Something is wrong somewhere that such a proposition could even be considered.

Closer cooperation with advertising agencies, through their newly formed American Association of Advertising Agencies, was urged "to iron out the wrinkles that bother us and pave the way for a greater volume of advertising" for the country newspapers.

The need of strengthening the N.E.A. for the benefit of all the rural press was called imperative.

It was pointed out that "to help bring about a better business era for newspapers, great and small, publishers need to study out and come to a clearer, fuller knowledge of the cost and proper charge for advertising space. As one speaker expressed it:

"We must come to a more definite conception of what is news and what is advertising.

"There exists not only too manifest a desire on the part of the unscrupulous to use the newspapers as a soft thing, but there is on the part of the public a dense ignorance on the subject from which we suffer.

"We can neither blame the public nor enlighten it until we arrive at a definite conclusion as to the dividing line which will be generally accepted and applied by publishers.

"We cannot be convincing, either, as to what rates are reasonable or what matter should be paid for as advertising, instead of being welcomed as news, until we agree as to a standard basis for both."

WAR BRINGING ON AD UPHEAVAL.

OLD LINES MAY BE CUT, BUT NEW BUSINESS IS ALREADY ON THE WAY.

The closer we get to the situation where the United States will be on a sure-enough war footing the more evident it is that war legislation of one kind or another is liable to play hob with advertising—newspaper advertising in particular.

With the Government's "first claim" on the output of all metal-producing plants threatening to shut off the supply of steel for corsets and talking machine needles, with the factories of big advertisers of pianos in process of being "taken over" for aeroplane manufacture, and with the manufacturers of popular toilet goods denied tin for containers, it is manifest that merely the material situation will alone turn newspaper advertising conditions topsyturvy and yet the shakeup will be as nothing compared to the shocks that will be sustained as a result of new legislation—particularly revenue legislation and food control legislation.

An investigation this week by THE FOURTH ESTATE justifies the prediction that newspaper advertising is in for a period of unsettled conditions. No prediction is made that in the toss-up there will be a shrinkage of the aggregate volume of advertising. On the contrary, newspaper space may be more in demand than ever before.

For example, the labor shortage which is going to set in in earnest this autumn may impel manufacturers to strain their energies to advertise all manner of time and labor-saving devices for offices, factories and home kitchens.

The point, then, is not that newspaper advertising will be less but that it will be different.

Furthermore, it looks as though advertising managers would have to reconcile themselves to less "regular" and more intermittent business.

Arthur Brisbane's Washington Times rounded up a whole page of advertisements the other day from junk dealers and buyers of used articles who were capitalizing the thrift campaign that has set the country by the ears. Three years ago such a special stunt would have been impossible, just as it would have been impracticable to drum up business such as the large-space display that the Corona Typewriter Company recently purchased in newspapers to advertise its lightweight writing machines for use on aeroplanes and in submarines.

Whether newspaper advertising men can be reconciled to accept such here-today-and-gone-tomorrow ads as recompense for the regular contracts of the automobile manufacturers and the tire makers who are temporarily out of the market because their plants have been diverted to war outfitting is another matter, but it looks very much like a case of making the best of a forced bargain.

LIQUOR ADS ON SUNSET TRAIL.

That liquor advertising as a source of newspaper revenue was "on the way out" has been apparent to many advertising managers for some years past and the fact reconciled some of them when their newspapers threw out whisky advertising on moral grounds. With beer and wine advertising, however, the situation has been somewhat different and many a sigh of relief went up when it was announced from Washington that the brewing and wine interests would not be put under the ban of war-time prohibition.

What the relieved advertising men overlooked, it is feared, is that salty taxes are to be imposed on the drink-

A Genuine Space Buyers' Manual

The New Special Representatives National Directory

THE FOURTH ESTATE will on July 28th publish a special section to comprise complete lists of the Special Daily Newspaper Representatives in New York, Chicago, Detroit, Boston, Philadelphia, St. Louis, San Francisco and other cities, and a complete list of newspapers of the country having representatives, with the names of those representatives against each, both East and West.

In 1914 THE FOURTH ESTATE published a similar list, but the one now in preparation will be much larger and vastly improved in method of presentation. It will be up to the minute and as complete and comprehensive as the large organization and exceptional facilities of THE FOURTH ESTATE can make it.

This Special Representatives National Directory will be truly national in its character and scope, and will be a genuine Space Buyer's Manual of daily usefulness to national advertisers, advertising agents and agencies, supplying information nowhere else obtainable in one publication.

Advertising will be accepted for this special edition at regular rates.

ables that remain. A stiff war tax on beer and wine has been in contemplation from the first and now that the elimination of whisky makes it necessary to raise more revenue from other sources it is proposed to give an extra twist to the beer and wine taxes.

Here then looms the big conundrum. Will the higher retail prices cause a slump in consumption that will incline producers to curtail their advertising or will the higher prices render it necessary to drive all the harder through advertising to maintain consumer demand?

Probably only an actual show-down months hence will answer these questions and there may be no universal answer. It is evident, however, that upon the direction in which the advertising cat jumps will be dependent future newspaper income from sources heretofore relied upon.

It is not merely a question, either, that raises doubt as to the future of beer advertising. Rather does it intrude in the case of a large proportion of the products most extensively advertised in the newspapers. Presumably no prosperous citizen will turn a hair in the purchase of an automobile because he has to pay an extra $10 or so to Uncle Sam, but what will be the effect of the new expense item upon the advertising and consumption of Wrigley's Gum and "Coca-Cola?"

INCREASED ADS LIKELY.

Advertising men who have been interviewed for THE FOURTH ESTATE seem inclined to predict that where a tax is such that it can be passed on to the consumer, as in the case of automobiles, advertisers will be impelled to advertise more strenuously to sell the public at the increased retail price.

What they are afraid of is the situation in the case of products where the tax upon each unit of manufacture will be so small that it will be almost impossible to pass it on. Under such circumstances a manufacturer with a new item of overhead to be absorbed may be tempted to curtail his advertising unless somebody is at hand to point out the folly of such retrenchment.

In some newspaper offices there is a suspicion that there may be more insistent demands for liberal reading notices as a result of the new conditions. A first symptom has appeared in the plea of certain theatrical managers that the regular theaters must have more generous support from the newspapers if, with a Federal tax tacked on to the admission, they are to meet the competition of "movies" that have no such tax. Ditto, the circus.

With eyes intent on the liquor situation, most newspaper men have overlooked the fact that there is pending at Washington an amendment to food control legislation that would put off the market a large proportion of the hundreds of patent medicines, etc., that are advertised more or less extensively in the newspapers that admit such ads. The amendment is one which proposed to prohibit the manufacture of patent medicines containing more than 11 per cent of alcohol.

Whatever unsettling of advertising conditions may result from the revenue legislation will presumably be restricted largely to national advertise-ing. Advertising experts are agreed, for instance, that there is nothing in the projects in contemplation to affect department store and chain grocery store advertising unless, mayhap, a tax on sugar, tea, coffee and cocoa would cause a slight ripple.

Very different though is the situation with respect to photo cameras, perfumes and cosmetics, sporting goods, cigarettes and tobacco and a number of other commodities that have been catalogued for taxation purposes as luxuries or near-luxuries.

CREATING NEW BUSINESS.

In all such lines there will come up not merely the question of whether the habitual advertiser will advertise more to hold his market but also the question of whether manufacturers who have heretofore held off from advertising may not be forced into the newspapers to get business enough to keep going.

For, say the experts, this war taxation is likely to place the average private brand in a less advantageous position with reference to trade-marked, advertised goods. In any event, newspapers, as advertising mediums, should hold the whip hand. A manufacturer compelled to make a quick shift in advertising policy will be impatient if he is compelled to wait three months for the appearance of his new copy.

MEETING of NEW ENGLAND CIRCULATORS.

NEW BEDFORD MEETING FRUITFUL OF MUCH VALUABLE DISCUSSION—STANDARD IS HOST

New Bedford, famous old "Down-East" whaling city, was the host this week to the New England Association of Circulation Managers, holding its regular business meeting and summer outing in the historic locale of America's early mariners.

Business, of course, was the main reason for the assemblage and several excellent papers were read by members of the New England Association, but the many pleasures afforded by New Bedford and its vicinity were by no means ignored by the circulation managers or their guests.

Joseph P. Barry, circulation manager of the Providence Journal and Evening Bulletin, was called upon for a discussion of "What effect does bulk (number of pages) have upon the average reader? What has been the effect on circulation of newspapers that have reduced their number of pages?" He said in part:

"Advertising helps us to get into the home and getting into the homes helps us to get the advertising, so it is apparent that if a publisher turns out a paper which can command the home circulation the advertising and ipso facto the bulk will come his way and in turn help him to get more home circulation.

"Making the deliveries of a bulky newspaper is by no means an easy job, particularly in these war days, when boys are getting as scarce as byphenated Americans. We frequently run as high as forty-six pages of the Bulletin and in order to complete our deliveries on time, we run half the paper in the form of a supplement.

"Starting by noon we get all the supplements delivered by 2.30 p. m., when we get the main section of the first edition. A separate delivery is then made to the newdealers of this section, so that it is necessary to make two deliveries whenever we have a supplement.

"During the past year the high cost of paper has compelled publishers to concentrate the news into the smallest possible space, and this has been accomplished without detracting in any way from the value of the newspapers. On the contrary this policy has tended to make the average paper more readable, and no matter to what low figure news print should sink in the future, it will never be handled so prodigally as in the old days—in fact, we might say the 'good old days'—when news print manufacturers stumbled over each other in their efforts to sell their product at 2 cents a pound.

"Many publishers have made sweeping cuts in the size of their Sunday issues, for which the long suffering public should be extremely grateful, as most Sunday newspapers were becoming so unreasonably large and unwieldy that it was necessary to employ grown men with trucks to deliver them from house to house.

"If good judgment is used in cutting the size of a paper by holding down the news there is no reason why the circulation should suffer in any way.

In reading his paper on "Is home-delivered circulation more desirable and valuable to an evening newspaper, or are street sales just as valuable to increase and hold the advertising patronage?" C. M. Schofield said:

"If the circulation of home-delivered papers is dropping off, the publisher ferrets out the reason and if the trouble is with the carrier service it can soon be remedied. With a street circulation, no track can be kept of the subscribers.

"A paper bought on the street, in some cases, means only one reader. If that paper was delivered to the home it would arrive very much earlier and all the members of the family would have a chance to read it.

"Maybe little Johnny is looking for a bicycle and happens to run across an ad 'For sale, a second-hand bicycle. Will sell cheap.'

"Mother also has time to read the department store advertising more thoroughly before the man of the house comes home. Mrs. Jones, who doesn't happen to take an evening paper, drops over to visit Mrs. Smith, who is a regular subscriber.

"Mrs. Smith has just finished reading the evening paper and says to Mrs. Jones:

"There is a great bargain in the paper tonight, six cakes of soap for 25 cents."

"The next morning Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Smith make ready to go downtown to take advantage of this wonderful bargain. The advertiser not only gets the benefit of the family's reading, but the neighbors' as well.

"An advertiser does not ask when he places his advertising, what the net paid circulation is on a certain day. He wants to know what the average is for the week, month and year. With a large street sale circulation, a paper cannot show as large net paid figures as a home delivered paper."

C. F. Hosley, circulation manager of the New Haven Register, was assigned to talk about "Would a consolidated delivery service in any city be practical and would it further help worth-while economy?" He said in part:

"There is no doubt that from an economical standpoint it would prove to be quite efficient. Undoubtedly an arrangement could be made whereby each newspaper could save between 25 per cent and 40 per cent of its delivery expense. However economical it may be, it is circulation we are striving for primarily. That being the case, then we must look at it from that standpoint.

"In the first place not one of our money, working their way through college, etc.

three local evening papers goes to press at the same time. The Leader starts first, as it has considerable circulation in distant towns where the Union and the Register do not circulate, and it finds it necessary to connect with earlier trains.

"Owing to mechanical difficulties, it is impossible for the remaining papers to start at the same time every day. This means that two papers must wait for the belated paper, which results in loss of sales to all.

"On the other hand, if a paper has a 'beat' and is anxious to get out earlier than usual, what is the result? It is held back until the others are ready.

Furthermore what is to prevent the until they can make over. The result is that they all have the story and nothing is gained by the wide-awake paper.

"Whereas, the paper with the 'beat' might have been on the stands say from 20 to 40 minutes before the competitors could make over and distribute.

"Time in delivery is also to be taken into consideration. As it is now, the papers for a certain route are given out and the delivery man starts directly to deliver. If he were working on a consolidation basis, he would have to call at each mailing room for his allotment.

"This means that anywhere from 10 to 30 minutes would be wasted in getting the balance of the papers, under favorable conditions. In brief, it slows up the service and the public is kept waiting."

H. M. Wheeler of the Hartford Times talked on "Establishing boy sales organizations in surrounding towns." He said:

"It is a matter of record that one of the most successful selling campaigns ever 'pulled off' was a 'boy campaign' conducted by a leading tea and coffee house. If boy sales organizations can sell tea and coffee and magazines, is it not reasonable to say that they can sell newspaper subscriptions or other salable commodity?"

"To my mind the juvenile salesmanship cannot be beaten, no matter whether it is in the city or the country or in surrounding towns and cities.

"To illustrate the economy of the method, let me cite the following:

"In 1913 I was employed to establish a boy sales organization to promote the circulation of a new daily in a city of 30,000 inhabitants. I joined the company two weeks before the first publication day. When the first issue came off the press, we had a bona fide list in the city and outside of 4,000 subscribers. Not one penny was spent for prizes, etc.

"I have found that boy sales organizations are practical in any cities or towns that are large enough to warrant three or more boys.

"In establishing boy organizations, the following are vital factors:

"First, an efficient organizer, a man who can bring out all of a boy's salesmanship qualities.

"Second, the right kind of boys. My experience has been that the very best boys are those who do not have to work, but carry newspapers because they are ambitious and want to become independent by earning their own spending.

"Third, the boy's profit. This is one of the most vital factors in any boy sales organization. If a boy feels that he is well paid he is very apt to hold his enthusiasm and work harder. One of the most successful managers of boy salesmen once remarked that when you cut the profit of your boys, you cut your own throat as far as circulation is concerned.

"Fourth, the product for sale. This is the most vital factor. The boy salesman can get the business, but to hold it it is up to the publishers to give the people the best possible paper at a reasonable price."

W. S. Mitchell of the Portland (Me.) Express, in discussing "What effect will the smaller city daily of the future have upon the circulation of the metropolitan daily?" said:

"Several phases of the future newspaper present themselves:

"1—Are the metropolitan dailies of the future to be big papers in the sense of bulk pages?

"2—If they are not bulky papers, what reading matter carried in the past will be eliminated in the future?

"3—Can the metropolitan sheet reduce

SEA FIGHT MIX-UP BEFORE SENATE.

ADMIRAL'S DISPATCHES AS EVIDENCE—CREEL BOARD UNDER FIRE.

The dispatches received from Rear Admiral Gleaves telling of two U-boat attacks on the American transport fleet and its convoying squadron, and also a statement of the number of persons employed by the Committee on Public Information with other data concerning the operations of the committee as the publicity department of the Government are to be considered by the Senate, according to a resolution introduced this week by Senator Penrose.

"I have a resolution," said Senator Penrose, "which I am led to introduce on account of the widespread criticism which has been made over the country concerning the performance of the Committee on Public Information."

"I desire here to refer to an editorial from the New York Times. I do not often interject quotations from a newspaper into a discussion in the Senate but this is so entirely to the point that I will refer to it."

Mr. Penrose then read an editorial entitled "Where was he?" in which attention was called to the discrepancy between the denial of a correspondent that there had been any submarine attack and the account of a sea fight by the Committee on Public Information.

"Knowing full well," said Mr. Penrose, "the inveterate tendency of the press to print war news with artistic embellishment and to take the slightest excuse of gunfire at a piece of wreckage or flotsam on the surface of the ocean as the destruction of a periscope. I am curious to know how the American correspondent lost his inborn enterprise and failed to report this battle, or whether the battle was an hallucination of the Secretary of the Navy and the chairman of the Committee of Public Information."

Mr. Penrose's resolution follows: Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is directed to send to the Senate copies of official dispatches, including the report of Admiral Gleaves relating to the alleged encounter of the American fleet with the submarines as described in a statement under the authority of George Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information, and he is further directed to furnish the Senate with the names of all persons employed by such Committee on Public Information and the salary received by them and the character of the duties performed by each, together with a full statement of the rules regulating press censorship and the reason for the frequent changes in the same, especially concerning cable messages.

Commenting on the conflict between the stories of eye-witnesses and those of the Committee on Public Information, Senator Reed of Missouri said: "Everybody knows what I think of Mr. Creel. I lived in the same town with him for years. I have been reluctant to say anything in criticism of him because it might be misunderstood as a personal affair.

"If I understand the situation, the man in charge of public information, an official of the Government without the sanction of law, put out a story that there had been a serious naval engagement because the route of the troopships was disclosed by spies in this country."

"This statement, coming from an official of this Government, has stirred up a spy hunt that has aroused the whole country at a time when it is under great tension, and has caused race feeling."

"The Congress of the United States refused to censor the press. Now we have an agent of the Government charged with coloring a report to suit his own fancy."

"If such word gets abroad, it will bring the news, and nobody in the country will believe reports of the operations of our navy and army even though they bear, as this report did, the stamp of official approval."

"It is a most unfortunate situation and one that should be dealt with immediately and in a drastic manner."

WHERE THE TALES DIFFER.

The account of the combat between American destroyers convoying Pershing's transports and U-boats, as detailed by eye-witnesses in the cable dispatch from Paris to the New York Times, differs somewhat from the statement about the encounter which was issued by Secretary Daniels, which was prepared by George Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information, being based on a comparatively brief report from Rear Admiral Gleaves.

Both stories agree that there were two attacks and that at least one submarine was sunk by American gunfire. The statement in the Creel story that "there was reason to believe that the accurate fire of our gunners sent others to the bottom" is not confirmed in the account cabled to the Times.

The stories also differ as to many minor details.

Another story, sent out by the Associated Press, was written by a correspondent with the fleet. He told of no action whatever and it was to this dispatch that Senator Penrose referred. It was recalled by the Associated Press at the request of the Committee on Public Information.

MANY CORRESPONDENTS WANT TO GO WITH PERSHING.

The knowledge that the United States Government had decided to accredit fourteen or fifteen newspaper men to the permanent headquarters behind the French front has led to a veritable flood of applications from would-be correspondents to be allowed to go with the troops.

It was said at the press department of the Paris headquarters that fully one hundred such requests had been received, including one from an actress, who pleaded to be allowed to sing to the soldiers.

A majority of the applications have come from persons without genuine newspaper connections and who have no intention or desire to do serious correspondence, even were they to receive permission to accompany the troops, for in most cases they have been actuated solely by novelty or the prominence to be acquired by the experience.

The first three correspondents accredited left yesterday, and will be followed in from ten to fourteen days by the others, when arrangements will have been completed for housing the men and for extending facilities for observing the troops in training.

The group includes several men who have acted as correspondents during the present war.

Major Robert R. McCormick of the Second Illinois Field Artillery has been called into the Federal service and detailed with Major General Pershing's expeditionary force in France. He is one of the proprietors and editors of the Chicago Tribune.

COLUMBUS PAPER MAY RESUME.

GILKEY APPOINTED RECEIVER FOR MONITOR, WHICH QUILTS AFTER A YEAR.

The Columbus (Ohio) Daily Monitor suspended publication on July 6 after an existence of four days less than one year, following the appointment of a receiver in the person of E. Howard Gilkey and the issuance of an injunction against Sam B. Anson, publisher, and other department heads to restrain them from further publication.

Application for a receiver was made in Common Pleas Court by the J. W. Kelch Company, advertising agency, which claims the Monitor owes it $1,400. The injunction was applied for by Mr. Gilkey, president of the Monitor Company and editor of the newspaper; Clarence Weber, secretary, and J. S. Ralston, comprising a majority of the directorate.

Mr. Weber, in the course of discussing the newspaper's affairs, said that the plant lost $20,000 in May, and had been losing since it started.

The trouble came to an acute point on July 5. After omitting the Fourth of July issue because of the holiday Mr. Ralston ordered that publication should be finally suspended Thursday.

Accordingly, the early "noon" edition did not appear on the streets Thursday. All day long efforts were made by employees to induce Mr. Ralston to permit the paper to continue, but he refused, and, late in the afternoon, started for New York.

A few minutes after he had left Columbus, Mr. Anson and other employees of the paper issued an edition, two hours later than usual, in which they fiercely attacked Robert F. Wolfe, owner of the Columbus State Journal, morning paper, and the Dispatch, evening.

Mr. Wolfe, it was charged in the Monitor's front page deft, would not brook the opposition of a growing rival and through his political connections, the Monitor says, brought pressure to bear upon Mr. Ralston by threatening to throw the Ralston Steel Car Works into financial difficulty unless the Monitor was stopped at once.

Dire vengeance was threatened by Mr. Ralston's enemies, the Monitor states, if single a wheel turned in its plant after July 4. Mr. Ralston, considering the car works, with their 1,600 employees, as of more importance than his newspaper, ordered the latter suspended.

Friday morning when Mr. Anson and other employees insisted that further publication should continue, Mr. Ralston, Mr. Gilkey and Mr. Weber appealed to the court for an injunction. The granting of this restraining order settled the fate of the paper.

The suspension of the paper throws about 125 persons out of employment. During the last few days several of the reporters have secured positions elsewhere.

Mr. Anson told THE FOURTH ESTATE that there were good prospects of securing new capital and continuing the Monitor, despite the edict against it. With the paper in a receivership through the strategy of Mr. Anson and his fellow employees, a new purchase will be sought and Mr. Anson believes that if publication is resumed within the next few days, popular sentiment will quickly carry the paper to success.

FOR ILLINOIS PUBLISHERS.

Hiram L. Williamson, superintendent of state printing, has launched a monthly magazine for Illinois newspaper men. It is called the Illinois Publisher and is issued at Springfield.

FORD FILES ANSWER IN SUIT FOR $1,000,000.

Henry Ford filed his answer on July 9 to the $1,000,000 suit for alleged libel brought against him in the Federal District Court in New York by the Vitagraph Company of America.

The suit is based on the allegation that on May 5, 1916, Mr. Ford caused to be published in 250 newspapers an article entitled "Humanity and Sanity," in which it was charged that the agitation for preparedness was due to the efforts of munition manufacturers, who were merely seeking profit.

In the same article the statement was made that a picture play called "The Battle Cry of Peace," produced by the plaintiff, was inspired by Hudson Maxim and others interested with him in the manufacture and sale of munitions.

Mr. Ford replied that the subject of the published article had been discussed in Congress and published broadcast throughout the country, and that, according to these discussions, the proposition for extravagant preparedness had the support of Hudson Maxim and other munition manufacturers.

Then he called attention to the book "Defenseless America," written by Mr. Maxim. The picture play, "The Battle Cry of Peace," he said, was based upon the statements made in Mr. Maxim's book, and the book and the play, according to Mr. Ford, served to advertise each other.

In describing the picture play, Mr. Ford said it did not represent the true conditions of the country at that time, and was presented at a time when the country had not been, and was not threatened with an attack or with war from any quarter.

Mr. Ford said that he considered it his duty as a citizen to publish the article referred to, that he believed the statements made in his article were true, and that he acted without malice or ill-will toward any one.

For these reasons he asks the court to dismiss the suit.

NEWS PRINT PAPER SUPPLY POSSIBILITIES.

Congress has passed the Espionage Act with its so called embargo provision and the President has duly signed it and issued a proclamation putting into force the necessary machinery for exercising such control. It calls into being the board to be known as the Exports Council.

The possible effect of this law on the supply of news print paper for newspaper publishers in this country remains yet to be determined.

The exports of news print paper from the United States for the year 1916 were over 76,000 tons.

The Federal Trade Commission in its recent report to the United States Senate on the news print paper industry states on page 125 that the minimum requirements of the papers reporting for 1917 were assured except for about 130,000 tons.

On page 126 of the report in speaking of free tonnage available during this year as probably somewhat less than 100,000 tons, it states that with respect to the commitments and free tonnage of manufacturers and the requirements of publishers, the supply during 1917 will probably be sufficient to meet the minimum requirements of customers, if they economize in every possible way.

If the Export Council decides to place an embargo on the shipments of news print paper out of the country, it would be equivalent to providing at least 75,000 tons of news print paper for the ensuing twelve months which would otherwise not be available for consumption in this country. This tonnage reserved for use in America would go very far toward relieving the present very serious situation.

HEAR YE! PESSIMISTS!

Here are some facts for business pessimists to argue around, if they can.

The country's commercial mortality during the first half of 1917 made the smallest numerical exhibit since 1911, while the liabilities were smaller than for any similar period in nearly a decade.

Despite the very material increase in new enterprises and other factors calculated to enhance the possibilities of financial embarrassment, failures have been relatively moderate, and a study of the Dun's statement discloses no evidence that the economic readjustments occasioned by this nation's participation in the war have caused serious disturbance to business.

The improvement which featured the returns during the first three months of this year was well maintained in the second quarter, and defaults in June were less numerous than in the same month of 1916 and 1915, with the smallest liabilities for the period, excepting those of last year, since 1912.

General conditions of business in the New York Federal Reserve district are excellent, and the volume of trade is undiminishing, says Pierre Jay, chairman of the board of directors of the Federal Reserve Bank, in his monthly report.

He points out that activity in retail lines, which declined following the declaration of war, is reviving, and that industries whose products are directly or indirectly essential to the prosecution of the war are working to the limit of their capacity.

The National City Bank, in its monthly bulletin, declares that while the war lasts the only safe policy for this country to pursue is to go on enlarging the vital industries, even if by so doing there is created a great surplus capacity after the war.

"It cannot be too often repeated," the bulletin says, "that in time of scarcity the emphasis is not upon prices but upon production, and policies should center upon the latter, affording inducement and stimulus, and avoiding the creation of risks and deterrents."

OPENING THE DOOR TO THE TRADE PRESS.

What a pleasure it is for representatives of a trade paper to be welcomed at a convention of the trade that their paper is working to help.

This is the feeling the representatives of THE FOURTH ESTATE have on returning from the annual meeting of the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association.

The Southern publishers have the right idea for their gatherings. They hold open sessions at which tradesmen are made to feel they are "of the bunch."

Most of their sessions are of this kind. Interesting papers and discussions are open to members and non-members who have a special interest in the proceedings.

When the Southerners want to talk over things of a private value they declare a short "executive session" at the close of the program, and everybody outside the membership willingly retires.

This openness of the S.N.P.A. is beneficial to it. It gives a trade paper representative a chance to see behind the scenes and to be able to learn of many things which secretiveness might devolve into wrong impressions.

The "open policy" also gives the trade paper man a chance to form a more intimate acquaintance with persons and subjects which he must deal with in his every day work.

He willingly respects the confidence of many things he hears while he is present at such meetings.

THE FOURTH ESTATE hopes the day will come when the A.N.P.A., the Association of National Advertisers and other important trade organizations will open their meeting doors and show the trade paper men that their work is appreciated and full confidence placed in them.

Nothing gives rise to harmful rumors as much as secretiveness.

May we look forward to more such welcomes as the S.N.P.A. gives the trade press.

THE NEW SPIRIT OF THE ADVERTISING AGENTS.

The Association of American Advertising Agents has made a fine start toward attaining that long desired "point of contact" with the newspapers in which they place so much of their advertising.

This week the Southern Association of Advertising Agents, which is the sectional division of the A.A.A., and the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association held their meetings at the same time in Asheville, N. C.

The agents decided that all their future meetings will be held at the same time and place as the Southern publishers.

The agents had a part in the publishers' meeting program, their representatives addressing the convention, explaining that the A.A.A. purposes to do to get into closer touch with the publishers and maintain cooperation that will do more than anything else to create business for the newspapers and keep it for them.

St. Elmo Massengale, president of the Southern division of the A.A.A., and Edwin F. Johnson, the secretary, made splendid addresses to the publishers, explaining many points of the advertising agency business that publishers and advertisers often misunderstand. Mr. Massengale's address was heartily endorsed by the newspaper men (it is presented in full on another page of THE FOURTH ESTATE) and they welcomed the new cooperative spirit shown; also asking the agents' association to outline in a series of recommendations how the Southern publishers can best cooperate with the agents.

This is the beginning of a welcome new spirit between the agents and publishers.

Let it be continued.

The work cannot be any better inaugurated than by following the example of the Southern agents in meeting with the publishers each year.

It is to be hoped that the other national sections will show the same spirit toward their sectional publishers.

And let the thing be finished off right by the A.A.A.A. holding its annual meeting at the same time and place as the American Newspaper Publishers Association and having a place on the program.

The Southern unrecognized agents appeared before the S.N.P.A. and assured the publishers of their sincerity of purpose. The publishers assured them that the S.N.P.A. will do everything in its power to support deserving agents and a committee was appointed to recommend to the A.N.P.A. for recognition any worthy agent not already enjoying this favor.

The new relations should be beneficial all around.

NOTE AND COMMENT.

That war offers no barrier to prosperity the man who knows advertising and goes about it in the right way is shown by the success of Alvin J. Meyer in a recent edition of the New Castle (Pa.) Herald. Local and national business, all of which was of high character, contributed to the fine showing of the edition, which was issued in celebration of that newspaper's sixty-fourth anniversary.

The Chicago Daily News is doing more than its bit in helping Uncle Sam. Through its farm labor recruiting station, the News has sent 11,213 workers into the rural districts. The station has been working only two months.

The Clover Leaf Weeklies are distributing to advertisers a pencil decorated in the national colors. They are being sent out by C. D. Bertolet, Western representative and general manager of advertising of the Clover Leaf Group.

A. G. Carter, vice-president and general manager of the Fort Worth (Tex.) Star-Telegram, possesses in a marked degree the quality of originality. If you follow his work you may be assured of a succession of interesting surprises. The latest is a demand draft which he offers to advertisers with which to draw on the Star-Telegram's clientele.

"Business as Usual. Avoid Hysteria and False Economy. Money Creates Money. Keep Business Going"—this epigrammatic advice, on a neatly printed card is being distributed broadcast over the country by the Lawrence (Kan.) Journal World.

The Chicago Staats-Zeitung is already making arrangements for a special edition to commemorate the seventieth anniversary of the paper. It will pass its seventieth milestone on October 5, 1917.

A Danish inventor is said to have discovered a process for making news print paper from sea weed. The process, it is reported, is only half as expensive as that of making paper from wood pulp.

Part of the service rendered by the Association of National Advertisers to members is the issuance of an excellent "News Digest Bulletin" which keeps them informed "up to the minute" on matters bearing on their advertising and manufacturing; likewise new ideas and suggestions by which they may benefit.

Cooperative service of the A.N.A. kind is worth its weight in gold to national advertisers.

While six successive monthly increases of advertising volume for a newspaper indicate its usefulness, it has the greater quality of reflecting the prosperity of a city in which such a record is made.

In Kansas City, the Star during the first six months of 1917 gained in advertising space 384,534 lines over the same period of last year—each month contributing its individual share to the gain.

Advertisers looking for a buying community would seem to do well by making quick use of Kansas City and such a popular paper as the Star, which has a circulation of 215,000 morning, 215,000 evening and 215,000 Sunday.

Denny Morrison, well-known Chicago newspaper man, is back on the copy desk of the American.

HOW DOES IT FEEL?

F. G. Hirsch, secretary of the Chicago Advertising Association, now knows how it seems to be "shadowed" day and night. Mr. Hirsch was enrolled on a jury in Municipal Court in the trial of an important case in which subterranean politics had a share.

As a member of the jury, the advertising man was followed home each evening by a detective to see that he was not intimidated by some of the opposing forces. The case lasted a week, which was six days longer for Mr. Hirsch if his own wishes had been consulted.

VACATION NOTES.

Franklin P. Adams, better known to newspaper makers and readers as "F. P. A." of the New York Tribune's "Conning Tower" column, is now eluding "funny" contributions. He is spending his vacation in a secluded spot and on his return will "do" Washington news temporarily for the Tribune, after which he will return to his customary labors on the "Conning Tower."

Austin O'Malley of the Chicago Tribune staff has decided that the weather man is arrayed against him. O'Malley picked the early part of July as a likely time for a vacation, intending to spend the period of rest disporting himself at one of the Lake Michigan beaches. The weather turned cool on the first day of his rest and bathing has been too frigid for enjoyment.

P. V. Troup, space buyer for Lord & Thomas, Chicago, has just returned from a busy vacation spent at Holland, Mich. Boating, golfing, fishing and plain resting were indulged in by Mr. Troup and he is back in his office turning out more work than ever before as the result of his brief period of recreation.

William A. Curley, editor-in-chief of the Chicago American, has gone with his family for a vacation stay in Southern California.

Hector Elwell, city editor of the Chicago American, is back from a vacation spent in Michigan.

George T. Maxwell, city editor of the Dover (Del.) State News, spent last week in Wilmington accompanied by his family.

Joseph H. Martin, editor of the Wilmington (Del.) Sunday Star, and Mrs. Martin have just returned from a month's motorboat trip on the Great Lakes.

Walter Kingsley, press representative of the Palace Theater, New York, is on his vacation at Atlantic City.

ANOTHER PARIS EDITION.

The Chicago Tribune has started publication of a small daily paper in Paris with American news for the benefit of United States troops at the front. The news print is sent from the United States, as a supply can be secured in France only with great difficulty.

Joseph B. Pierson of the Tribune home office staff is already in France, assembling his staff for the overseas edition. The Paris Tribune will be small in size, owing to the scarcity of news print in France, but will contain the "home news" for the boys at the front. The Tribune announces: "The work is not undertaken for profit. The paper will be sold at less than cost. It is an effort on the part of the Tribune to enhance the morale of the battlers from the States and make life a little more pleasant for the brave fellows who are doing their bit where it is tough doing, for the independence of the world."

U. P. CHANGE IN ILLINOIS.

T. C. Cullen has become assistant manager of the Springfield (Ill.) bureau of the United Press, succeeding W. F. Sullivan, when the latter went to the U. P. Chicago office. Mr. Cullen has joined the Navy since his new appointment and expects a call to the colors within a few days.

Milton Fishman, formerly of the International News Service Springfield staff, has succeeded Mr. Cullen as reporter and telephone sender in the U. P. organization.

EDITOR'S BULLETS KILL.

As the result of editorial criticism and threats of Judge James E. Fulton to settle the matter with pistols, J. E. Bell, editor of the Oneida (Tenn.) News, shot and killed Fulton.

STAFF CHANGES.

Freeman Henry Hubbard, formerly of the staff of the Philadelphia North American and Philadelphia Evening Bulletin, has become a copy holder for the Plimpton Printing Company, Norwood, Mass.

William Hermann Heath, state editor of the Manchester (N. H.) Union, has resigned to join the copy desk staff of the Worcester (Mass.) Post. Before leaving Manchester, he and Miss Sarah Frances Doyle of Lynn, Mass., were married.

J. Harold Fifield, police and city hall reporter for the Manchester (N. H.) Leader, has gone on the copy desk of the Albany (N. Y.) Knickerbocker Press.

Leonard Nichols, son of William T. Nichols, managing editor of the Manchester (N. H.) Union, is a new addition to the reporting staff of the Manchester Leader.

William Burbank, formerly of the Baltimore American and Washington Times, is now telegraph editor of the Manchester (N. H.) Union.

John Ambrose Meade, formerly a reporter for the Manchester Leader, is now a re-write man for the Boston American.

William C. Kranowitz, a 1917 graduate of the Pulitzer School of Journalism, Columbia University, has become a reporter on the Hartford (Conn.) Times, succeeding W. F. Homer now in the Coast Defense Reserve Service.

Tyler H. Bliss has become a Hartford Times reporter, succeeding Lew Allen, now at Plattsburg. Mr. Bliss was formerly with the Hartford Courant and Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

W. C. Bierck has become assistant sporting editor of the Hartford Times, succeeding John Randall, who is in France with the American Ambulance Field Service.

George E. Hamilton, formerly assistant to the city editor of the Hartford Times, has assumed a similar relation to the assistant managing editor, succeeding H. R. Hawley, now with the New York Sun.

George Smith, formerly Sunday editor of the Springfield (Mass.) Republican, has become assistant to the city editor of the Hartford Times.

C. R. Jones has joined the copy desk of the Milwaukee Sentinel.

Harold F. Wheeler has become head re-write man on the Boston Post, succeeding J. A. Tyson.

John Skene, formerly of the Waukegan (Ill.) Daily Sun, has become North shore reporter for the Chicago Examiner.

Cullen A. Cain, former managing editor of the Topeka (Kan.) State Journal, has become editor of the Bisbee (Ariz.) Daily Review.

W. G. Anderson, editor and owner of the Winfield (Kan.) Evening Press, is recovering from an operation for appendicitis.

Tom Daily has resigned his position on the Columbus State Journal to enter the sporting department of the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A. J. Molephini, heretofore with the New York Tribune and the Sun, goes with the financial advertising department of the New York American on July 15.

CHANGES IN WOOSTER, OHIO.

Frank J. Daubel and Lucian E. Kinn, both of Postoria, have purchased a controlling interest in the Wayne County Democrat Company, publisher of the Wooster (Ohio) News.

M. M. Vannest retires from the firm.

Former State Senator W. A. Weygandt will remain as editor and Mr. Daubel will be business manager.

WEDDING BELLS.

Charles D. Atkinson, business manager of the Atlanta Journal, and Miss Elizabeth Wade, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Wade of Cornelia, Ga., have been married. The ceremony took place in Cornelia. Mr. and Mrs. Atkinson returned this week from their honeymoon in Canada and are now "at home" at 705 Ponce De Leon avenue, Atlanta.

Governor James M. Cox of Ohio, proprietor of the Dayton News and Springfield News, and Miss Margaretta P. Blair have become engaged. The wedding will take place in the fall and owing to the war no honeymoon trip will be taken. Governor Cox is forty-seven years old and is now serving his second term as Ohio's chief executive. The couple will make their home on Governor Cox's estate, near Dayton, where he is building a new house, modeled after a French chateau.

C. Edgar Parsons, news editor of the Western division of the Associated Press at San Francisco and a director of the San Francisco Press Club, was married recently to Miss Lydia Hoas of Lakota, N. D.

C. S. Murphy, a Baltimore magazine editor, was married last December to Miss Marie Olivia Ruth, of Baltimore. The wedding took place in Philadelphia before Christmas last year, but the announcement of the marriage was made only last week. Now that the secret is out, the parties to the romance are on their honeymoon in Atlantic City and New York.

CHICAGO TRIBUNE CHANGES

Recent changes in the editorial staff of the Chicago Tribune include the following:

Harry Friend of the Herald staff has lately joined the reporting department.

Jay Williams, former city hall man for the Examiner, is now covering the same beat for the Tribune.

Kent Hunter of the Examiner has been transferred to the Tribune staff.

Miss Carolyn Wilson has again resumed her work as Paris correspondent of the Chicago Tribune. In addition to her regular work she will have a share in the editorial work of the Paris edition of the Tribune.

FULLER BACK IN WATERTOWN.

Royal K. Fuller, formerly a Watertown (N. Y.) newspaper man, more recently of New York and Albany, has been elected managing director of the Watertown Standard Company.

Mr. Fuller was on the staff of the New York Herald for more than ten years, the latter part of the time as political reporter and legislative correspondent.

In 1909 he made a trip to the Arctic for the Herald, meeting Rear Admiral Peary after his successful trip to the North Pole. He was assigned to accompany ex-President Taft in 1910 and 1911—and the latter year he was in Halifax awaiting the funeral ship which brought in the bodies of the Titanic victims. He also reported the 1912 national conventions.

BERRI LEFT OVER A MILLION.

According to an appraisal filed in the Surrogate's office in Brooklyn on July 6, William Berri, publisher of the Brooklyn Standard Union, who died on April 19, left a net estate of $1,394,767. The report shows that really valued at $306,500, all in Brooklyn, was held by Mr. Berri. His personal estate amounted to $570,000.

The bulk of the estate is left to Mr. Berri's only son, Herbert Berri, and two grandsons, William H., and John W. Berri. The state tax on the estate will amount to $39,000.

Against a background of the Stars and Stripes, the tri-colored flag of the city and half a hundred little girls dressed either as Red Cross nurses or in the costumes of the nations which have sent sturdy sons and daughters to build a home place in America, Miss Margaret Wilson, daughter of the President, presided at a reception under the auspices of the Evening World Americanization Forum in the auditorium of Washington Irving High School, New York.

The spirit of the reception was to arouse further interest in the utilization of public school buildings as community centers for the unification of neighborhoods in true Americanism and to point out in how many ways such centers would aid in the progress, the welfare and in the value of every individual.

The New York American will conduct an automobile insurance department in connection with its Sunday automobile section, in which questions from its readers relating to insurance matters will be answered by experts.

Employed boys of Buffalo were given an all-day picnic of sports and recreation on July 7 by the Buffalo Enquirer. Cups, medals and prizes for the different athletic meets were donated by the Enquirer.

The Windsor (Ont.) Evening Record is advertising a contest with free trips to the Thousand Islands as prizes for the eight young ladies who sell the greatest number of tickets to the Windsor Fair.

Charles Chandler, formerly assistant circulation manager of the Atlanta Georgian and Sunday American, has become circulation manager, succeeding Albert Ellis, now Dallas (Tex.) manager for the F. O. Stone Baking Company. Before going with the Georgian, Mr. Chandler was on the staff of the New York Morning Telegraph.

CENSOR'S BAN RAISED.

In consequence of vigorous representations in the German Reichstag, the preventive censorship, imposed a few days ago on the Frankfurter Zeitung, has been raised. The measure was the result of a financial article by Professor Weber of Heidelberg University on the financial and exchange situation.

OF EDISON CO.

A number of well-known national advertising men, advertising agents and business managers of New York newspapers on July 11 attended a performance of "Guy Wise," an original play by William Maxwell, vice-president and general manager of Thomas A. Edison, Inc. The play deals with a problem in salesmanship and the situations are handled skillfully, a paradoxical turn bringing out the effect with telling emphasis.

Edward C. Hoykin, sales promotion manager of Thos. A. Edison, Inc., staged the play. The leading part was taken by Ray McKee, supported by a company from the Edison Motion Picture Studios.

The play was preceded by a luncheon given by Mr. Maxwell to the advertising men during which the author outlined the purpose and history of the production.

Among those present were William Maxwell, Frank Presbrey, president of the Frank Presbrey Co., R. F. R. Huntsman, of the Brooklyn Standard Union, James Mackay, of H. E. Lesan Advertising Company, George M. Prentiss, advertising manager of the Standard Oil Cloth Company.

M. L. Wilson of Blackman-Ross Company, C. F. Southwick, of the Erickson Company, B. T. Butterworth, advertising manager of the New York Times, T. B. Spencer, advertising manager of the New York Tribune, Frank Seaman, president Frank Seaman Company, W. C. Calkins, jr. Tom Hall.

Charles Edison, John Lee Mahin, of the Federal Agency, Messrs. Prudden, Austin and Wilson of Van Patten, Inc., L. C. McChesney, H. Lane, Thomas J. Leonard, W. D. Wilmont, Charles A. Meyers, advertising manager New York Evening Mail, C. C. Leflingwell of George Batten Company, Mowbray White of the New York Herald, John Allen Murphy of Printer's Ink, J. M. Boyle, advertising manager of the New York Evening Telegram, Frank L. McLaughlin of the New York Sun, R. T. Snodgrass of N. W. Ayer & Son, R. T. Roe, of the New York World, H. S. Gilman & Nicoll, who recently established a Chicago office in the Tribune Building, are already enlarging their soliciting force in that city. D. E. Northam is an addition to the Western staff.

Mr. Northam's advertising career began in Chicago in 1903, when he was assistant to E. B. Merritt, at that time advertising manager of Armour & Co. Leaving Armour & Co., Mr. Northam became identified with Street & Smith Publishing Company and for six years was Western advertising manager for all of its publications.

THE ORGANIZATION OF A DAILY NEWSPAPER.

ARTICLE V.

PROTECTION OF EXECUTIVE OFFICER BY INSURANCE AND WHAT FORM GIVES MOST RETURN FOR INVESTMENT.

BY EDMUND WALKER.

Chicago Herald Building, Chicago.

In this series of short articles on newspaper work Mr. Walker has created a hypothetical company and takes it through all the stages of an organization's financial existence.

Starting with the period of incorporation, he showed the opening of the accounting books. He will take the paper through a period of prosperity and finally make a mistake in financing, necessitating compulsory liquidation.

In the course of the articles he will introduce various phases of accounting, such as methods of handling depreciation, insurance, amortization plans, building funds, profit-sharing systems, etc.

It is evident that we should at this juncture take insurance on the life of our managing director. If he should die just now, when our company is in the midst of complicated transactions, serious financial loss would ensue.

Calling in the insurance agent for advice, for he is supposed to be our agent and acting for our benefit, we will be told that the best plan of insurance is the whole life plan, the endowment plan, or perhaps the 20-pay life, which has become very popular in recent years.

To collect the investment and the insurance on an endowment, whole life, 20-pay life or any investment insurance policy is exactly as impossible as it is to live and die at one and the same time. In other words it is gambling without standing any chance of receiving a consequent profit.

To demonstrate let us take two individuals, both of the same age, same occupation, same health record, same location and in fact the same "insurability"—they are both twenty-five years old at the nearest birthday. Now before considering this matter further let us remember what can happen, and all that can happen to affect this contract of insurance:

1. They may live to or beyond their expectation of life.
2. They may die before their expectation of life date.
3. They may be always financially able to meet premiums.
4. They may become financially embarrassed.

Assuming, first, that they both live to their expectation of life, which is an additional thirty-nine years, making them each sixty-four years old, their position would be:

Jones, who purchased a 30-year endowment policy, has paid in premiums $768.90 and at the age of 65 he received from the insurance company a check for 1,000.00 For nine years he then used the $1,000 and obtained an average yield of 6% compounded.... 1,090.00

So that Jones has enjoyed protection for $1,000 for 30 years and at the end of the 39th year he has on hand $1,690 in stocks or perhaps cash.

Brown bought a yearly renewable term policy and this is his position: He has paid to the insurance company $391.36 When he was 65 years old he found that the premium paid by Jones was 6% per annum he now has 1,181.30 on hand to invest this amount for a further period of

9 years, that is to say until he reaches 64 years of age, and at 64 he has on hand..... 1,911.87 Compare this with Jones'..... 1,690.00 Brown wins by..... $221.87

They have both carried the full $1,000 insurance. Now let us take the next case—they both died young.

Say in the tenth year they both die—that would be when they were 35 years of age.

Jones would have paid in cash premiums on his endowment policy $365.50 Brown would have paid in cash on his yearly renewal term policy 95.84 Both estates would receive exactly 1,000.00 Brown would also have a separate estate of 100.00 without calculating any interest at all.

If you calculate interest, Brown would have a separate estate of $237.07, or a total of $1,237.07, against Jones' $1,000.

Now let us take case No. 3—they are always able to meet their premiums. In this case, of course, there will be no difficulties to contend with.

Case No. 4 presents the position where they both become financially unable to meet their premiums.

Say in the fifth year they both fail in business.

Jones can surrender his policy and he will receive..... $85.00 Brown can sell his bonds and obtain 103.16 Jones can obtain extended insurance for 12 years Brown can continue paying his premiums for 14 years

Obviously the only kind of insurance to buy is the yearly renewable term policy, where you get what you pay for and do not pay for something you have no chance of ever getting.

Perhaps I have been too technical in the above description, but you can reduce insurance to a simpler form. Assuming that you are forty years at your nearest birthday, you take out a ten-year endowment policy. You pay an annual premium of $92.28. The real cost of life insurance at that age is $11.37.

Therefore you wager $11.37 against $1,000 that you will die during the next ten years and at the same time you wager $80.91 to $1,000 that you will live.

All insurance is merely a community agreement. Supposing that 1,000 men aged 35 years wish to insure this year. We all know that during the year 8.95 will die, and if they all wish to carry $1,000 insurance, we will also know that we shall have a liability to meet at the end of the year of $8,950.

Therefore, if we all pay into a common fund an amount which at interest will produce $8,950 at the end of 12 months the desired result will have been obtained.

The yearly renewable term rate at this age is $10.30—the difference representing the cost of handling the business.

Now why should you pay in the 35th year a part of the premium which is not due until the 60th year, when you admit your lack of faith in ever living to that age by buying insurance?

The Yearly Renewable Term Policy is not profitable for the insurance companies. They cannot build large reserves on this business and their salesmen are instructed not to sell it unless forced to. The policy can be obtained from most of the largest insurance companies, among which I may mention the Mutual Life of New York, the Aetna Life, and others.

Our company will then buy a yearly renewable term policy on the life of our manager and although the premiums increase each year in ratio to the probability of death they do not increase as quickly as the interest on our savings in premiums.

CURTIS METHODS QUESTIONED.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ENTERS COMPLAINT OF MONOPOLY.

Formal complaint against the Curtis Publishing Company of Philadelphia was issued by the Federal Trade Commission on July 11, charging unfair business practices and stifling of competition and ordering its officers to appear in Washington on August 23 and show cause why they should not be directed to cease the practices.

The charge against the company in the formal complaint recites that it is making contracts for the sale of its periodicals "and is now fixing the price charged therefor on the condition, agreement or understanding that the purchasers thereof shall not use or deal in the publications or periodicals of a competitor or competitors, and that the effect of such sales and contracts for sales, or such conditions, agreements or understandings may be and is to substantially lessen competition and to tend to create a monopoly."

The complaint adds that the company has pursued this policy "for several months."

The action of the commission was based on allegations made by the Pictorial Review Company, which charges that the Curtis Company used the Saturday Evening Post, the Ladies Home Journal and the Country Gentleman to hamper the sale of the Pictorial Review Magazine.

A suit brought by the Pictorial Review Company in the New York courts recently for an injunction restraining the Curtis Company in its alleged unfair practices was dismissed by the court.

THE 1917 BLUE BOOKS ARE FINEST EVER.

The Automobile Blue Books for 1917 are just out with the latest edition ever published, marking their sixteenth year of service. The ten volumes cover 400,000 miles of roads in the United States and Canada.

Each year has witnessed an increase in the number of roads covered, an added volume (Volume C), giving 150 round trips within a radius of 100 miles of Chicago.

A redivision of the states among the several volumes enables the motorist contemplating a long tour to refer from one volume to another by the intervolume routes so arranged as to make one volume interlap the others to the next important terminal.

The total number of pages in the collective volumes exceeds 10,000 and there are more than 1,000 route maps. There is not a stretch of automobile roadway that is not included in one of these volumes, and it is possible for the motor tourist to penetrate any traversible territory in this country with their guidance.

The task of gathering information and furnishing reliable and up-to-date data on the 400,000 miles of roadways covered by the Automobile Blue Books is enormous. The Blue Books maintain thirteen scout cars that spend the better part of every year going over old routes, finding RICHES' NEW WORK.

Lloyd Riches, editor and publisher of the Stanfield (Ore.) Standard, who was recently appointed advertising manager of the Portland Weekly Oregonian, is one of the youngest newspaper publishers of the Northwest.

He commenced his newspaper career as "devil" on the Silverton (Ore.) Appeal. From school he went onto the staff of the Portland Journal and worked in several capacities in both the editorial and business departments. Mr. Riches began publishing his own paper January 1, 1915.

Upon taking up his duties with the Oregonian, Mr. Riches appointed Maurice Hyde, a graduate of the Oregon school of journalism, editor of his Stanfield paper.

I am a real specialist in reorganizing and rehabilitating newspaper properties. If your property is not developed to the highest possible point, you can probably employ me. I develop and perfect the Business, Advertising, Mechanical and Circulation Departments. Have been doing this sort of work successfully for many years. I have doubled the income of some papers and very largely increased that of others. It costs nothing to use my services and my system, as I am sure to produce a volume of new business sufficient to meet the expense several times over, not to mention the permanent benefits which will accrue. I really know the game and can put it over. Will be at liberty about August 1. Who wants me next? Write for particulars and an interview. Address "Specialist," care The Fourth Estate.

BOOKS USEFUL TO EDITORS AND ADVERTISERS.

"THE REPORTER'S MANUAL," by John Palmer Gavitt; Editor Publishing Company, publisher.

No reporter, veteran or "cub," can fail to get something out of this little pocket-size manual by the present managing editor of the New York Evening Post and he will get something out of it every time he reads it. It also contains valuable suggestions for the city editor.

"HANDBOOK OF TRADE-MARKS," written and published by Charles Dushkind.

While not a treatise or textbook on trade-marks, Mr. Dushkind's manual will be valuable to national advertisers and other business men as a guide in the selection, adoption, use and protection of trade-marks. He presents the general principles of the law of trade marks in simple fashion, with proper explanations, bringing home the cardinal rules and principles that are essential in the selection, adoption, use and protection of trade-marks.

"THE HANDBOOK OF JOURNALISM," by Nathaniel C. Fowler; Sully & Kleinteich, publishers.

Mr. Fowler is the author of several handy little volumes on various subjects and this book is as good as any he has turned out. It gives the beginner a clear idea, stripped of technicalities, of how a newspaper office works.

"A DESK-BOOK OF 25,000 WORDS FREQUENTLY MISPRONOUNCED," by Frank H. Vizetelly; Funk & Wagnall Company, publisher.

The orthography of English lends itself freely to mispronunciations and with the exception of expert lexicographers, few people pronounce every word in their vocabulary correctly or SITUATIONS WANTED.

I seek connection as assistant to the publisher on a large daily or publisher or business manager on a smaller paper. Have just concluded year as publisher of new daily and Sunday paper in Middle West city of 250,000, suddenly suspended recently when rival political faction forced backer to quit. While plant was not making money by long shot when suspended, the books, covering the 11 months' operation of the property, showed over $2,000 net daily (A.B.C. audit was shortly to be released) and over 20,000 Sunday. In excess of $50,000 in advertising contracts written. While $200,000 was put in property, analysis of situation will show that this was intelligently expended and that plant was operated economically. In addition to this and other business office experience, I have behind me an excellent record as an editorial executive covering a number of years. Am 33 and married. Some of biggest men in newspaper business will vouch for me. Address Box 827, care The Fourth Estate.

consistently. Mr. Vizetelly, who is managing editor of "Fund & Wagnall's New Standard Dictionary of the English Language" and related works, has covered common words, and has carefully pronounced, annotated and concisely defined them, indicating the preferences of the leading dictionaries from 1732 to 1916.

"HOW AND WHERE TO SELL SHORT STORIES," by W. L. Gordon; Atlas Publishing Company, publisher.

Newcomers in the writing profession will find this work a valuable guide and time-saver in disposing of their "brain-children" and experienced writers will find in it ideas for new sources of revenue.

"AUTOMOBILE DRIVING & REPAIRS," by Morris A. Hall and George W. Cravens; American Technical Society, publisher.

How the inexperienced driver can save repair expense and get the most out of his car by driving it correctly and keeping wearing parts in proper condition is told in simple intelligible terms by the authors, both of whom have had wide experience in the motor field.

"APPLIED MENTAL EFFICIENCY," by Tasso Vance Orr; the Efficiency Institute, publisher.

A text-book on mental efficiency, Mr. Orr's work points the way to increased mental power, to strengthened will, to wider vision and to success—provided its principles are properly applied.

"GASOLINE," by G. A. Burrell; Oil Statistical Society, publisher.

Mr. Burrell, who was formerly connected with the Federal Bureau of Mines, corrects some erroneous, though popular, ideas about the fluid which has become so important to the existence of nations. His book is of value to anybody who wants concise information about automobile fuels of the nature of gasoline and to the oil man who wants to know the history of his industry.

"SUCCEEDING WITH WHAT YOU HAVE," by Charles M. Schwab; the Century Company, publisher.

Mr. Schwab is eminently qualified by experience to tell how success is won in business and he says that hard work and "thinking beyond your job" are the biggest factors, rather than "genius" and "pull." The brochure is written in clear, terse business English and carries, or should carry, an inspiration to the reader whose success is still before him. That includes almost everybody.

"UNIFIED ACCOUNTING METHODS FOR INDUSTRIALS," by Clinton E. Woods; Ronald Press Company, publisher.

Mr. Woods has written this book after an experience of 20 years with concerns employing from half a dozen men to 20,000. He presents a unified method of accounting which gives an accurate instrument for measuring results. His method is fitted to every element in a business and is governed in turn by a set of controlling accounts and is said to be no more expensive to install and operate than most less complete systems in use today.

"AUTOMOBILE IGNITION, STARTING AND LIGHTING," by Charles B. Hayward; American Technical Society, Chicago, publisher.

The remarkable development in this particular field during the past five years has created an insistent demand for an up-to-date treatise not only to cover the very latest phases in this development, but what has taken place leading up to it. This book meets this demand fully with diagrams and descriptions useful and instructive alike to the technical engineer, the garage man and the owners of automobiles, more especially those who drive their own cars and this latter class includes nearly three-quarters of a million people. There is nothing that could happen to this part of your automobile equipment which you may not be able to race, understand and provide a remedy for, through a careful study of this book. In a word this book is timely and invaluable.

SOUTHEASTERN AGENTS GET S.N.P.A. TO AID THEIR RECOGNITION.

The Southeastern Advertising Agents Association met on July 9 at Grove Park Inn, Asheville, N. C., and formed a permanent organization, ratified by-laws and elected officers for the coming year.

The meeting was held in conjunction with that of the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association, at the invitation of the latter body and Dr. Dillard Jacobs of the Dillard Jacobs Advertising Agency, Atlanta, addressed the Monday afternoon session of the S. N. P. A.

Immediately after the address, the S. N. P. A. appointed a committee to pass upon the official recognition of Southern advertising agencies and to co-operate with them in furthering the mutual interests of advertiser and publisher.

Officers were elected as follows: Chairman, R. S. Freeman, Freeman Advertising Agency, Richmond; vice-chairman, Dillard Jacobs, Dillard Jacobs Advertising Agency, Atlanta; secretary-treasurer, William Alden, Southern Advertising Agency; executive board, R. S. Freeman, Dillard Jacobs, William Alden, C. N. Page and B. R. Montgomery.

The objects of the association, according to the by-laws, are to promote efficiency in all departments of general advertising agency work and to co-operate with publishers and their representatives in the development of business to mutual benefit. The ideals of the association are of a democratic nature.

The members say that they are co-operating to build up bigger and better advertising accounts throughout the South, their clientele now running into millions of dollars of advertising appropriations annually. The South is growing rapidly, they state, and new advertising accounts are being developed all the time.

EASTERN "SPECIAL" BOOK OUT.

The sixteenth edition of the Benjamin & Kentnor Company's directory of "special" Eastern representatives of leading daily newspapers has appeared, with data complete up to June, 1917. As usual, it presents its data in concise and convenient form, with the newspapers alphabetically arranged as to states and cities, together with the names and addresses of authorized special Eastern representatives. An alphabetically arranged list of representatives, with office addresses and names of papers represented is also given.

The name of the W. N. Van Sant Advertising Service, Baltimore, has been changed to Van Sant & Co.

COOPERATION

The Service Bulletin of the ST. PAUL DISPATCH and the ST. This Bulletin is mailed free each month to more than 1,000 retailers.

It is accomplishing the purpose, but it is not the only reason why these papers carry such a large amount of food advertising. The real reason lies in the fact that the St. Paul Dispatch and St. Paul Pioneer Press daily enter by carrier more than

NEWS OF THE AD AGENCIES.

The Eastern Advertising Corporation was chartered in Dover, Del., on July 3 to do a general advertising agency business. The capital is $750,000 and the incorporators are M. L. Rogers, L. A. Irwin and H. W. Davis of Wilmington.

M. Robert Herman, who has been in charge of the New York office of the Ernest J. Goulston Advertising Agency for the past two years, has resigned to join the staff of Albert Frank & Co., New York. While with the Goulston Agency, Mr. Herman handled the advertising of Robert Reis & Co., the American Belt Corporation and other accounts, which he will continue to place through Albert Frank & Co.

The J. Walter Thompson organization staff has undergone some changes caused by Charles E. Raymond going from Chicago to Washington in connection with the Government food administration work, with which the J. Walter Thompson Agency will be associated.

The Chicago interests of the company, until Mr. Raymond's return, will be in charge of J. W. Young and H. T. Stanton.

C. T. Miller has been transferred from the Chicago to the New York office.

Miss Augusta Nicoll, who has been in Chicago, has been brought back to New York and Miss Ruth Waldo takes her place in the West.

Arnold Rosenthal has retired from the firm of Rauh & Rosenthal, Pittsburgh.

The Russel M. Seeds Agency of Indianapolis has added R. P. Didriksen to its force. Mr. Didriksen has been with the J. P. Gordon Company of Columbus, Ohio, as advertising manager.

Edward G. Haislip, formerly with the American Hoy, has been appointed to the staff of Patton, Wierengo, Inc., Detroit.

St. Elmo Massengale, the Atlanta advertising agent, is enjoying a fishing trip in the North Carolina mountains.

G. F. Goldthwaite has joined the forces of the Canadian Advertising Agency, Montreal, after having been advertising manager of Almy's Montreal, and with the Gagner Agency.

TRADE AND CLASS PRESS.

A new engineering magazine has been launched by the Cleveland Engineering Society. It is called The Conqueror and the editor is A. J. Himes.

Charles Carroll Brown, former manager and editor of Municipal Engineering, published in Indianapolis, has sold his interest to S. C. Hadden, formerly of Novelty News. Mr. Hadden has resigned from the editorial management of Novelty News to assume charge of his new publication. It is announced that the publication offices will be moved to Chicago. Mr. Hadden is not new to the engineering publication field, having been connected with Engineering-Contracting, published on Chicago.

OLDS NEW AD MANAGER.

D. B. McCloy has been appointed advertising manager of the Olds Motor Company, Lansing, Mich. He was formerly with the Oakland and Buick Companies.

INTRODUCING AD FOLKS.

Charles Doris who is managing the Cohen-Chelsea Advertising Agency, New York, which was recently formed by the consolidation of the Chelsea Advertising Agency and the Cohen Advertising Agency, is a former newspaper man. He was on the staff of the New York American for sixteen years under the management of Samuel Hecht, resigning last November to purchase the Chelsea Advertising Agency.

That organization handled only want ads and Mr. Doris, desiring to broaden its field, merged it a short time ago with the Cohen Agency, which had been conducted by Morris Cohen for the past ten years. The agency is specializing in textile accounts.

The agency, which has its offices at 621 Broadway, is recognized by the Publishers Association of New York City and Mr. Doris states that it will apply for A.N.P.A. recognition in the near future.

John Seymour Winslow, recently appointed production manager of the advertising firm of W. H. H. Hull & Co., New York, is a graduate of the University of Wisconsin, and, after completing his work there, he joined the staff of the Chicago Tribune. A year later, in 1912, he left the Tribune to enter the service department of Lord & Thomas, Chicago, becoming a member of that agency's copy staff after two years.

In June, 1916, when the firm opened its Pacific Coast office at Los Angeles, Mr. Winslow was selected to go to that city to organize the service work of the branch. He remained office manager and copy staff member at Los Angeles until entering the New York agency field this year.

Mr. Winslow is a son of Chief Justice J. B. Winslow of the Wisconsin Supreme Court and a nephew of Horatio W. Seymour of the New York World.

W. E. Rhodes, the new vice-president of the People's Monthly Company, publisher of the People's Popular Monthly, has represented that magazine in Chicago for the past fifteen years.

Paul Renshaw, the newly-elected president of the Advertising Club of New Orleans, is a department store advertising manager who graduated into his present work from the reporting staff of a newspaper. He is now connected with the D. H. Holmes Company.

Mr. Renshaw is a graduate of the literary department of the University of Mississippi, where during his four years of study, he actively participated in athletics and, in his last year, gained distinction in college circles by being awarded a medal upon the occasion of an annual intercollegiate oratorical meet.

After college he entered newspaper work, having gotten a taste for it while editing the weekly paper at his university. For about five years he pursued this line of endeavor, doing editorial and reporting work on papers in various cities of the South, including Memphis, Little Rock and New Orleans.

He went into his present position of advertising manager of the D. H.

Mr. Wilson is a former mayor of Willoughby, Ohio, and retains an interest in "Wilson's Store of Willoughby," which is said to sell everything from "little wooden toothicks to heavy lumber wagons."

He has large mercantile and real estate interests in Cleveland and is a member of the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce and of the Willowick Country Club.

Irwin Spear, a new addition to the staff of Greig & Ward, Chicago, is a college graduate and after receiving his degree, started as a checker in the advertising department of the Royal Baking Powder Company, New York.

After a year, he became associated with the Fairchild trade publications, served for a time in that organization's Chicago office and then became editor of the N. C. R. News, the house-organ of the National Cash Register Company, at Dayton, Ohio.

He then returned to Chicago, as a member of the Mahin Advertising Company's staff, put in three years and then became a freelance advertising writer.

He joined the copy staff of the Dunlap-Ward Advertising Agency in 1916, remaining with it until the business was moved to Cleveland, after which he made his present connection.

AD FOLKS' NEWS.

"Sid" Wall, advertising manager of the E. T. Slattery Company, Boston, and a well known cotton-thread fisherman, recently pried out one of the natives, Tom Greenall of the Boston Evening Record (the only paper there that runs a fishing column) and took him down to Jamaica Bay, N. Y., for some black-fish and sea-bass. Tom enjoyed a couple of days of cotton-thread fishing so much that his wife had to send a fake telegram to get him started home.

Novices often spring little surprises and Greenall's was a good one. He had spent ten minutes negotiating with a 3½ pound blackfish and suddenly exclaimed: "Shucks, I could be catching a couple more instead of fussing with this brute, think I'll let him loose."

He was gently dissuaded and assisted in boating his fish.

Jack J. Finlay, who retired as president of the Junior Advertising League of the Chicago Association of Advertising on June 19, has presented a handsome silver loving cup to the committee serving under him that showed the best record for enthusiastic work during the administration. The educational committee won the trophy. An engrossed scroll of commendation has been presented to Mr. Finlay as an evidence of esteem.

F. Happy Day, former advertising manager of the Fort Worth (Tex.) Record and other Texas newspapers and for some time in business for himself as sales and advertising counsel in Houston, has been appointed sales and advertising manager of the Houston Title Guaranty Company.

The Philadelphia Club of Advertising Women celebrated the first birthday of their organization last week with a picnic at their own farm, "Ye Olde Mill," at Dorlan, Chester County. The picnic was headed by Anna M. Kelley, president, and Bertha P. Shafer, treasurer of the club.

Pierre V. R. Key has been appointed sales and advertising director of the H. H. Hoffman, Inc., motion picture enterprises. He formerly had long service with the New York World, the Chicago Examiner and the Boston National Grand Opera Company. Mr. Key is also serving the George Backer Film Corporation as manager of productions.

The first golf match between the New York Advertising Club and the Poor Richard Club of Philadelphia will be played in the latter city on July 24. The match will be played at the White Marsh Valley Country Club and will be an all-day affair. The second match will be played in New York at a date and on a course to be determined later.

Both clubs will be represented by teams of fifteen or twenty men.

The New York candidates will include Roy Barnhill, Keith Evans, F. J. Ross, Lee Maxwell, Charles P. Eddy, Don Parker, John Eggers, Walter Ostrander, Stacey Bender, C. S. Andrews, Joseph Appel, M. R. Baldwin, Robert Barnwell, B. J. Beardsley, W. S. Bird, William Bliss, H. K. Boice, Thomas Conklin, Carroll H. Dunning, A. W. Erickson, Frank Finney, George Fowler, E. K. Gordon, Walter Griffith, A. Will Izor, Walter Jenkins, Floyd Y. Keeler, H. K. McCann, Thaddeus Mellroy, J. C. McMichael, Frank W. Nye, H. R. Reed, Fred Rogan, G. B. Sharpe, F. H. Sisson, C. A. Speakman, Harry Tipper, Robert Tinsman, Walter Wheeler, Victor Whitlock, Charles W. Yates, Eliot Moore and Charles Presbrey.

The Poor Richard delegation will include J. C. Martin, C. H. Towden, E. H. Marshall, J. M. Frazer, Charles W. Beck and Joseph P. Totstromer.

C. E. Hathaway has been re-elected president of the Colorado Springs Ad Club.

Robert Davis, advertising manager of the Widney Company, Chicago, has resigned to enter the manufacturers' agency field. He has been succeeded by E. C. Bullock, formerly of the Multigraph Company.

The members of the Syracuse Ad Men's Club held a picnic on July 11.

J. H. Craig has resigned as advertising manager of the Central Shoe Company, Kansas City, to take charge of the Advertisers' Protective Bureau of the Kansas City Ad Club.

Allen M. Rogers, late with the Brown Shoe Company and the Warner Fence Company, is now in charge of the advertising of the Central Shoe Company.

D. J. T. Kennedy, the new advertising manager of the Mason Tire & Rubber Company, Kent, Ohio, served a newspaper apprenticeship before entering the advertising business. He portant part of the platform of the A.A.A.A. would be the promotion of education in advertising. Beginning in the fall members are going "to take their own medicine" and advertise—to teach what agents are.

AGENTS PLAY BIG PART IN S.N.P.A.

The A.A.A.A. is also going to issue a standard medium directory of its own, to include all the information an advertising agent wants to know.

THE A.B.C. TOO SLOW.

The advertising agents are not satisfied with the work of the Audit Bureau of Circulations. They find A.B.C. reports are too long delayed in issuance—in some cases from eight months to a year being required to prepare reports on papers. The A.A.A.A. is going to take the compiling of such reports into its own hands.

Members of the A.A.A.A. will be assessed from $200 to $1,000 a year in dues. Of the 312 recognized advertising agents, 137 are already allied with the A.A.A.A., Mr. Massengale stated.

THE "SPECIAL" PREFERRED.

Questioned as to whether agents preferred to do business with newspapers direct or with their special representatives, Mr. Massengale said agents preferred the "special" for economical reasons. The "special" represents a large number of papers—sometimes as many as 10 or 20—with which it is possible, through him, to do all their business in one settlement each month. The special representative is in most cases a very intelligent gent man able to discuss various conditions in a way that is valuable to the agent.

Statistics and some information, however, the agents prefer to have sent direct to them by the publisher or his advertising manager.

A resolution was adopted by the S.N.P.A. to have the Southern Advertising Agents Association draw up for submission to the publishers' recommendations on the best ways for members of the S.N.P.A. to co-operate with the advertising agents.

SOUTHEASTERN AGENTS.

Dillard Jacobs, of the advertising agency bearing his name and representing the Southeastern Advertising Agents Association, told the publishers that the question of "recognition" was too mixed up for the good of advertising. He said that new agents should be encouraged, and that too much time was spent by the new agent in getting "recognition" that might be better spent in promoting his clients' and the publishers' interests.

"When an agent applies to a publisher," said Dr. Jacobs, "the publisher asks: 'Have you the recognition of the publishers' association?' 'When he applies to the association, the body asks: 'Have you the publishers' recognition, and have your competitors recognized you?'"

Dr. Jacobs said that the Southeastern Agents Association has been organized and its doors are open to any agent who has the proper financial standing and handling three independent accounts of a general character. He urged the S. N. P. A. to take steps to eliminate unnecessary delay in granting recognition. He objected to having competitive agents pass on another's recognition rights.

The publishers agreed with Dr. Jacobs and decided to appoint a special standing committee on agency to co-operate with the committee of the A. N. P. A., and further the recognition of deserving Southern advertising agents. The committee will be named by the president of the association.

In the course of his talk Dr. Jacobs said: "Newspaper advertising is the biggest factor in the promotion business." He gave instances of its effect. One case he recited was that of an account that started with $120 and in eight years amounted up to $30,000 a year. This advertiser's goods are to be found in the grocery trade from Washington to New Orleans and from the Ohio River to the Gulf of Mexico. He used only newspapers.

Dr. Jacobs said the man never wrote a line of his copy, but left it entirely to the agent. He gave this as an illustration of how the advertising agent works for newspaper publishers' interests, as well as those of the advertiser and himself. He urged that worthy new agents should be encouraged to enter the business. The South today has only about 25 agencies, when it ought to have many more, said Dr. Jacobs.

The agents then retired and after a time returned with a memorandum of such suggestions which included among other things, that:

Publishers give all advertising agents the same rate; that copies of papers containing advertisements be promptly furnished for checking purposes; that bills be furnished monthly, and that after one year from date that only agents having A. N. P. A. recognition be considered as entitled to privileges accorded members of the Southern Advertising Agents Association.

The convention believed that the questions brought up were of too much importance to be hastily disposed of and a committee consisting of W. T. Anderson, Curtis P. Johnson and W. W. Holland, appointed to take up the question of the advertising agents' suggestions; and also the question of recommending for recognition to the A.N.P.A. those desiring to become recognized agents.

"SPREAD THE FACTS," SAYS LORD NORTHCLEFFE.

Lord Northcliffe was the guest on July 11 at a luncheon in the Biltmore Hotel of the New York Overseas Club, the parent organization of which he founded. It is an organization with 160,000 members of both sexes, all loyal to Great Britain, though many of them are scattered over the earth. In part he said:

"I ask the members to do all in their power to counteract the very insidious enemy propaganda which seeks to start causes of friction between the Allies and to bring about a peace which would really mean a German victory.

"The best way to fight enemy propaganda is to spread the knowledge of the facts of the war. It is easy to twist motives. It is easy to impute sinister intentions. It is fatally easy to dig up long-buried animosities.

"Spread the facts. Some of the facts of what Britain has done I have skeletonized already. There are plenty of other facts which I have not the time to detail. Give publicity to the facts in every way possible to you."

LONDON WRITER HERE.

One of Lord Northcliffe's most famous writers on the London Daily Mail, G. Ivy Saunders, has come to the United States, on instructions from Lord Northcliffe to join him here. She does not know what the character of her work will be.

powerful enough to not only meet the fortunes of war, but to actually extract from the turmoil certain advantages in the purchase of supplies.

THE FOURTH ESTATE is also informed that the trade commission has heard of large publishers whose needs are taken care of by contracts running in some instances until the end of 1919 and who can well afford to assume an "I should worry" attitude.

SHEET AND ROLL SUPPLY.

The trade commission has very little roll news for allotment or distribution, so little, indeed, that the expression of its price ideas, as conveyed via this distribution, makes almost no impression whatever on the general market.

In the case of sheet paper, however, the trade commission has about 500 tons per month to distribute. While this is not enough to satisfy demands—indeed, 1,500 tons per month would be necessary to meet the needs of all the publishers that apply to the trade body for paper—nevertheless it is sufficient to have an appreciable influence upon price conditions.

With signs of a disposition in Congress to put through the legislation now on the war program in order to adjourn, or at least take a long recess some time in August or early September, there will naturally be increased eagerness on the part of many publishers for some remedial move in the direction of the news print problem with as little delay as possible.

The War Revenue Bill, which Senator Simmons predicts can be passed within a month after it is taken up in the Senate, tackles the postal increase and publishers' tax proposals and it may be that when, in consequence, the interests of publishers are under discussion at the Capitol an opportune time may be afforded for inducing Congress to "take the news print bull by the horns."

CITY PARK NAMED AFTER WARDEN McLEAN.

The fine new recreation center at Haines and McMahon streets, Germantown, Philadelphia, has been named the "Warden McLean Recreation Center" by the board of recreation, in memory of the young officer killed at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia.

Mayor Smith and other members of the recreation board were unanimous in approving the suggestion that the new park, the most complete and up-to-date playground in the city, be called after the first Philadelphia officer to lose his life in the present war.

In making the announcement of the naming of the park, the board said: "Warden McLean typified the finest American manhood. Active in Young Men's Christian Association work, he was a director of the Germantown branch. Gentle and courteous, he believed in and revered the highest type of American womanhood.

"Thoroughly interested in all athletic activities, he was captain of the Bachelors' Barge Club. The development of the childhood of the city particularly appealed to him, and it is most appropriate that this playground, the last word in recreation architecture and usefulness, should be named as a lasting memorial to his memory, so that while he himself may have no posterity, his name may ever be kept

Lieutenant McLean was the son of William L. McLean, publisher of the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin. He was thrown against a tree by a fractious horse while on a march with a battery of field artillery from the officers' training camp near Fort Oglethorpe, and died on June 29, about five days later, of his injuries.

He was an instructor of the new men who aspired to commissions in the National Army and since his death the name of the officers' training camp near Fort Oglethorpe has been changed in his honor to "Camp Warden McLean."

WILL KEEP HARDEN QUIET.

It is reported from Copenhagen that Die Zukunft, Maximilian Harden's Berlin publication, has been suppressed for the remainder of the war. Herr Harden has been mobilized under the Auxiliary Civil Service law and will be employed as a military clerk. The Government planned to take this action some time ago, but lacked the courage, it is said.

Die Zukunft was first temporarily suppressed a few days ago because of its criticism of the Nord Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung's statement on the Grimm-Hoffmann affair. Harden ridiculed the newspaper's humanitarian pose and said the aims of Germany's enemies were among other things the creation of a situation which would remove the decision of peace or war from the will of one mortal and place it in the hands of the community.

ANOTHER HONEST AD VICTORY FOR NEW YORK TRIBUNE.

The second libel suit to come to trial based upon the articles written by Samuel Hopkins Adams in the New York Tribune's campaign for honest advertising resulted in financial failure for the plaintiff when a jury of the supreme court last week awarded a nominal verdict of 6 cents damages to Marie Louise Marrillatt.
She sued for $50,000.

Mme. Marie Louise, as she prefers to be called, entitling herself an "importeur," conducted, when the Adams article was published in May, 1916, two stores for the sales of gloves, lingerie and hosiery. After expert shoppers attached to the Tribune bureau of investigation investigated, Mr.
Adams wrote his "Mere Man's Warning to Experienced Women."

The article offered in evidence proceeded to narrate the experiences of the Tribune purchasers in one of Mme. Louise's establishments, where goods were described as French and Italian importations, although the evidence adduced established that they were of domestic origin.

Justice Pendleton ruled that the plaintiff was doing business illegally as "Marie Louise," no certificate of such a trade name being filed, and therefore that she could not recover any damages to her business. He left it to the jury to determine whether the article was correct or otherwise, and, if inaccurate, to what extent the plaintiff had been injured in her individual reputation.

that this enterprise will afford relief from the present high prices caused by the war.

The factory was constructed in 1915, but for various reasons has been idle for a considerable period.

SOCIALIST PAPERS STOPPED.

The Federal Government has barred the use of the mails to the American Socialist, a paper published in Chicago. The issue of June 30 was held up by the postal authorities in Chicago pending investigation by the Solicitor General of the Post Office Department at Washington.

Part of the complaint of the Federal authorities is said to be based on an advertisement of a leaflet entitled "The Price We Pay," which was carried in an earlier edition, as noted in THE FOURTH ESTATE last week. The paper is said to have come in conflict with provisions of the espionage law.

As a result of the holding up of the edition, a committee consisting of Clarence Darrow and Seymour Steadman of Chicago, Frank P. Walsh of Kansas City and Morris Hillquit of New York will go to Washington to protest against further suppression of the paper.

Socialist newspapers are also faring badly in the Savannah Post Office on account of their treasonable utterances. Tom Watson's Weekly Jeffersonian, the Appeal to Reason and the American Socialist have been held up by Postmaster Marion Lucas. Mr. Lucas is a newspaper man himself, having been managing editor of the Savannah Morning News before being appointed postmaster.

Representative Meyer London introduced in the House on July 10 a resolution demanding a thorough investigation into the acts of the Post Office Department in denying Socialist publications the use of the mails.

The resolution calls for the name of every publication excluded, and for any such instructions that may have been sent out to postmasters. "It has surely never been contemplated by Congress," Mr. London said, in discussing his resolution, "that every postmaster and every assistant district attorney should constitute himself a regulator of speech and a censor of the press."

"A country at war has a right and owes a duty to itself to keep from the enemy all information as to the movement or contemplated movements of its armies and navies. But the

TO TEST ANTI-CIGARETTE AD LAW IN KANSAS.

Steps to determine the constitutionality of the Kansas anti-cigarette advertising act passed by the last legislature were taken last week when a Kansas City newspaper filed an application for an injunction before Judge Pollock in the United States court restraining S. M. Brewster, attorney general, and others from arresting its carriers in Shawnee and Wyandotte Counties.

Kansas news dealers are working under difficulties in complying with the new law which forbids the advertisement of cigarettes in magazines or newspapers intended for Sunflower consumption. Although many of the magazines are issuing special Kansas editions, which are cigaretteless, others are instructing Kansas dealers to "censor" the Kansas quota.

This censorship is effected by penciling out all reference to cigarettes. Page advertisements of cigarettes are thus blackened freely so that the name and the picture of the "coffin-nail" will not appear. The effect is grotesque, since the picture of the smoker is allowed to remain, while the cigarette that he may smoke so nonchalantly in other states is represented in Kansas by a smudge of black.

WOMEN TAKING PLACES.

Publishers in Lawrence, Kan., are experiencing a shortage of labor. The bindery department of the University of Kansas journalism press is employing women exclusively for the first time. W. R. Simons, proprietor of the Lawrence Journal-World, is training women for linotype operators.

Heavy army and navy enlistments are given as the cause of the shortage.

NO DAMAGES AWARDED FOR WRONG INITIAL.

A jury in the district court at Hastings, Neb., a few days ago found for the defendant in the suit of C. P. Whitcomb against Adam Brede, editor of the Hastings Tribune. Mr. Whitcomb claimed $20,000 damages through the publication of one wrong initial, thereby making the article appear as referring to another man not connected with the case.

COLONEL HERBERT DEAD.

While attending the annual meeting of the National Editorial Association in Minneapolis, Colonel Benjamin B. Herbert of Chicago, founder of the organization, was suddenly seized with an attack of heart trouble and died within a few hours.

Colonel Herbert was one of the grand old men of American journalism and during his long career there was a no more active factor in efforts to improve the conditions of the country press of the United States.

When he was president of the Minnesota Press Association in 1885, Colonel Herbert conceived the idea of forming a national editorial association. At that time he was the editor of a Red Wing (Minn.) newspaper.

He invited various state bodies to send delegates to a meeting to be its average daily size and hope to get circulation that logically belongs to the smaller city daily?

"To the first question there seems at present to be but one answer, and that is that the future metropolitan papers must be smaller in bulk pages.

"To the second question, opinions will differ as to just what reading matter will be eliminated, but all will agree that matter of local interest in the city where the paper is published will be printed.

"This being true, it naturally follows that local news from the district where the smaller daily is published cannot be given so much space.

"This conclusion leads us to answer the third question by venturing the assertion that metropolitan papers without news of the locality in which they seek circulation cannot hope to compete with the smaller dailies published within that field."

Much interest attached to the talk of F. E. Johnson of the Taunton Gazette, on "Why the circulation manager should act in an advisory capacity to the managing editor in the selection of features."

A similar topic was handled by President J. A. McNeil, of the Bridgeport Post and Telegram, who discussed the relation of the editorial and circulation departments. His paper was read by Secretary Wheeler.

George H. Reynolds of the New Bedford Standard took up a topic of interest to the association as such, entitled "Would a central purchasing department for wrapping paper, string and other mail room supplies be of benefit of the members of the N. E. A. C. M. He brought out his point as follows:

"I believe it would result in considerable saving, particularly to newspapers which buy in small quantities. Whether it is feasible is another question. A group of newspaper publishers might have saved thousands of dollars had they accepted a certain offer made about three years ago.

"In some newspaper offices the purchase of supplies is not a part of the circulation manager's duties. Every circulation manager, however, should keep in close touch with the costs of his department.

"I obtained a rebate on paste material, sufficient to more than pay the cost of attending a N.E.A.C.M. meeting, at which I learned a lower price was paid elsewhere for the same material we were using. Only a fraction of a cent per pound was involved, but there was much satisfaction in effecting that saving and obtaining a lower price for future orders.

"It might be advisable, until a 'central purchasing department' was possible, to inaugurate a plan of compiling from N.E.A.C.M. members a monthly list of prices paid for various supplies.

"A statement of paper purchased, with date, quantity, weight, size, kind, cost per pound, etc., would enable other members to keep in touch with market conditions."

H. E. Duncan, of the Fitchburg News told the meeting how he would proceed in introducing a new edition to the public, as follows:

"This is an opportune subject, for we are now planning to inject an edition into Ayer, some fifteen miles east of Fitchburg and the site of the New England cantonment for the National Army. We realized that a city of 30,000 soldiers, 10,000 civilian employees, plus the population of Ayer before the war, say 6,000 souls, as well as 6,000 people in neighboring trade territory, would be the richest field we had ever entered.

"Our business manager, publisher and city editor paid visits to the camp and town and we decided to secure some men with newspaper experience, plus a little cash and 'pep' to speculate, to take over our Ayer edition.

"There are plenty willing to jump at that chance in a boom town. We secured a man who had worked for us writing subscriptions and who lived in Ayer. He took over the responsibility of handling the papers, getting the distribution, also the news and advertising, and posted a satisfactory bond. We retain all publishing and other rights.

"Next we sprang a daily paper upon the good folks of Ayer and vicinity. We sampled the territory for two days and on July 5 the Ayer manager reported $75 paid subscriptions in that town alone and that list has grown by leaps and bounds, with a street sale that is up to the 1,500 mark today. We now have routes established and also sell to wholesalers.

"The edition carries all national, some local and Ayer advertising. We carry it in fifteen suburban towns and as soon as Ayer proper has been worked the manager plans to invade those towns for still subscription work, no premiums or inducements, but a clean, good newspaper.

"As to the future, we anticipate no trouble in securing the canteen rights for our paper and will make it a real newspaper for army men as well as for civilians."

ged and equipped whaling ship of the kind that made New Bedford famous. More of the same kind were visited along the waterfront and beach on a trip which took the visitors to the city's new bathing pavilion.

Luncheon was served at the Tabitha Inn and the business sessions consumed the afternoon, with an hour's recess to inspect the Standard plant, the public library and the city's new post office.

The party visited Fairhaven and Fort Phoenix, a $2,000,000 group of buildings given the town by the late Henry H. Rogers of the Standard Oil Company, after which they adjourned to the Tabitha Inn for dinner.

The after-dinner speaking was participated in by everybody, members, ladies and guests. Vice-President Reynolds was toastmaster and Secretary-treasurer H. M. Wheeler spoke on "The Guiding Hand."

In the absence of A. E. MacKinnon, circulation director of the Philadelphia North American, who was scheduled to speak on the "Get Together Spirit," that topic was handled by Ernest Scholz of the Crowell Publishing Company.

J. M. Annenberger, chairman of the I.C.M.A. program committee and circulation manager of the Schenectady (N. Y.) Union-Star, spoke on "Why You Should Attend the I.C.M.A. Convention This Fall."

Thomas Downey, circulation manager of the Boston Globe for forty years, more or less, gave a collection of interesting reminiscences, rising to the toast of "The Dean of Circulation Managers."

James McKernan, circulation manager of the New York World and an I.C.M.A. director, was unable to attend and present the respects of New York to the diners. The toast "What Hot New York!" was answered by J. A. Savadel of THE FOURTH ESTATE and Edward Gans of the Editor and Publisher.

J. P. Barry, circulation manager of the Providence Bulletin, spoke on "What Cheer," followed by a free-for-all, catch-as-catch-can outbreak of speech making on the part of everybody present who had not previously spoken.

The second day was devoted almost exclusively to sightseeing. Starting with a tableau before the official camera at the dock, the party embarked for Cuttyhunk Island, where dinner was served at noon, with Benjamin H. Anthony, publisher of the New Bedford Standard, as host.

Business sessions were held on the boat both ways.

Oh, Yes, Women Have Habits

In Chicago, for instance, the fair sex have formed the habit of looking to the columns of The Daily News for news of department stores.

Every advertiser knows that department store advertising is a correct index of a newspaper's standing with the public.

Chicago department stores recognize this habit of the buying women of Chicago and last year used 3,060,318 agate lines of space in The Daily News, daily only, against 1,923,714 agate lines in its nearest competitor, seven days a week.

This proves many things. It proves first that the women in thousands upon thousands of families in Chicago have the time in the evening to read department store news and to make their shopping plans for the next day.

It proves these thousands upon thousands of women have complete faith in what they read in the advertising columns of The Daily News.

It proves that in this case a "habit" is a desirable thing. It gives Chicago's women the snappiest news of the world's biggest and best department stores in their favorite paper.

NEWS PRINT PROBLEMS MULTIPLY.

TRANSPORTATION IN WAR EMERGENCY—WHEN WILL CONGRESS CONSIDER PAPER—COSTS GOING UP.

While Congress dallies and delays on the news print situation, clouds of increasing size are appearing on the newspaper publishing horizon.

"What we are going to do this fall, I am sure I don't know," was the remark made to THE FOURTH ESTATE this week by one of the best posted experts in the country, who is in close touch with the whole situation, present and prospective, in the paper-making and publishing industries.

His misgivings were inspired mainly by the problems of transportation and of labor supply, which are daily growing more complicated.

At the same time, steadily mounting costs of paper production are injecting a factor into the situation that cannot be overlooked.

An official of the Federal Trade Commission admitted to THE FOURTH ESTATE on July 19 that if the Trade Commission were today fixing a paper price, it would have to be above the 2.50 plane previously approved, at least in the case of the output of some of the mills. Moreover, he frankly admitted that prices are bound to go even higher this autumn than the quotations now obtaining, although he would not venture a prediction as to how much of a rise may be expected.

That Congress wrangles over food control while the news print dilemma and other important issues are side-tracked is not, however, the fault of those Senators who are striving to gain relief for publishers.

For a time it looked as though authorization for the Government to take control of the news print supply along the lines recommended by the Trade Commission would "slip through" as an amendment to the food bill, but, sad to relate, the prospect is not now so good as it was.

So many different interests, scenting the scheme of the publishing interests, sought to follow suit and tack on amendments calling upon Uncle Sam to exercise price control in their respective industries that many Congressmen became perplexed or disgusted and have taken the position that Government control under the pending bill must be restricted to food and fuel.

Senators who regard the hooking up of the news print proposition with the general bill covering foodstuffs and the necessities of life as the only chance of getting action at this session of Congress have told the Washington correspondent of THE FOURTH ESTATE that they will strive, right up to the last (that is through the medium of an amendment offered on the floor or any other means) to get a decision on news print along with the decision on fuel and foodstuffs.

If the news print proposition has to stand on its own bottom there is yet time for Congressional help at this session because the most optimistic prophets have moved forward the date of probable adjournment from September 1 to October 1.

If the War Revenue Bill, which can scarcely reach a vote before the last of August, contains, as is now threatened, provisions for the special taxation of publishers, via a levy on profits, a tax on advertising or a raise in postage rates, this circumstance in itself is bound to be an influence in favor of action on news print.

If Congress proposes to take extra toll from publishers it is in honor bound to protect publishers from being shaken down on the cost of paper, lest, indeed, there be nothing left for the Government to tax.

ASSOCIATION ENDORSEMENTS WELCOME

For all that, the Congressional situation is thus up in the air, there is unmistakable evidence at the Federal Trade Commission of the satisfaction that is felt in that quarter by reason of the recent endorsement by various editorial, press and newspaper associations of the Trade Commission's recommendation for Government regulation of news print prices and distribution.

At the Trade Commission there is a disposition to regard as in the same category as "spy hysteria" the alarm in the newspaper field for fear the Trade Commission scheme for news print control conceals a dream of press censorship.

Individually and collectively, the commissioners declare most emphatically that there is not the slightest foundation for any such suspicion. From their point of view, newspaper publishers will do better to entrust the safeguarding of their interests to a non-partisan Government board than to leave themselves to the tender mercies of the "Paper Trust," which, as these officials see it, is the only alternative.

Unmindful of the storm which may be approaching with the autumn, the news print market continues softer than in months gone by and most of the mills have been able to accumulate a little stock.

Water conditions at most of the plants have been ideal and fuel and raw material conditions have not yet interfered with production. For all that, the stocks that the mills have been enabled to get ahead are figuratively a drop in the bucket against annual consumption.

THE FUTURE GLOOMY.

Every day, moreover, brings fresh evidence that few paper mills will be enabled to operate to capacity this autumn and winter and some of them may be just about as useful as sources of supply as are the Harmsworth mills in New Foundland.

As one straw to indicate which way the wind is blowing take the circumstance that advises reached President Dodge of the International Paper Company the other day to the effect that the Canadian Government has found it necessary to commandeering the steamer that has been conveying Canadian pulp via the lake route to the Niagara mills of the International. It is said that no other vessel suitable for this service is available and unless some solution can speedily be found it would appear as though the plant might have to shut down.

NEWS PROTECTED BY COURT.

MATTER CAN'T BE USED BY ANOTHER UNTIL VALUE TO GATHERER IS GONE.

The order following the granting of an injunction sought by the Associated Press to prevent the International News Service from obtaining its dispatches, bulletins and proofs was entered on July 16 in the United States District Court, New York.

Although the injunction was granted and sustained by the Circuit Court of Appeals several weeks ago, the order was not entered because of the efforts of counsel for the International News Service to obtain a stay.

The International News Service is enjoined not only from purchasing news from any employee of newspapers served by the Associated Press, but from selling Associated Press dispatches which have been published in early editions of such papers.

The order restrains the International Service from the following practices which it was accused of having been guilty of:

(A) From inducing, procuring, or permitting any telegraph editors or other employees or agents of the complainant or any of its members or of any newspaper or newspapers owned or represented by them or any of them, or any such members, to communicate to defendant or to permit defendant to take or appropriate, for consideration or otherwise, any news received from or gathered for complainant, and from purchasing, receiving, selling, transmitting, or using any news so obtained.

(B) From inducing or procuring, directly or indirectly, any of complainant's members or any of the newspapers represented by them, to violate any of the agreements fixed by the charter and by-laws of the complainant.

(C) From copying, obtaining, taking, selling, transmitting, or otherwise gainfully using or from causing to be copied, obtained, taken, sold, transmitted, or otherwise gainfully used the complainant's news, either bodily or in substance, from bulletins issued by the complainant, or any of its members, or from editions of newspapers, published by any of complainant's members, until its commercial value as news to the complainant and all of its members has passed away.

The Associated Press is also subject to Paragraph C.

The court found it had not been guilty of any of the offenses enumerated in that paragraph, but the plaintiff declared its willingness to submit to the restrictions set forth.

Service of the court's order was upon Fred J. Wilson, general manager of the International News Service, and upon Melville E. Stone, general manager of the Associated Press.

The International News Service made the following statement on the case:

"On proof that the Associated Press and the International News Service each used news gathered by the other, which news appeared in newspapers and on bulletin boards, Augustus N. Hand, judge of the United States District Court for the Southern district of New York, on July 16 enjoined both the International News Service and the Associated Press from rewriting the other's news until such time as 'its commercial value as news' had passed away.

"The injunction issued by Judge Hand was upon instructions of the Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States for the Second Circuit. It is taken to be one of the most sweeping decisions ever handed down in any case involving news matter, and opens a vista which is considered to be of the greatest interest to the newspaper world.

"The contention of the International News Service, in the case of which this injunction is a feature, has been that all proprietary right in news facts ceased when the news fact was abandoned to the public by publication in the columns of a newspaper or upon a bulletin board.

"This contention will be, the International News Service claims, the only bar to a monopoly of news, and it asserts that such a monopoly is what is sought by the Associated Press.

"Trial of the case on its merits as between the Associated Press and the International News Service will be heard in the fall, probably in October, and either then or subsequent to such hearing the whole matter will be taken to the United States Supreme Court for final adjudication.

"The I.N.S. submitted proofs to the court that it had paid the London Times upwards of $105,000 and to the London Daily Telegraph $111,000, for the sole rights to their war news in the United States.

"It also paid more than $200,000 for cable tolls on this news.

"The expenditure of more than $400,000 was partly nullified by the Associated Press, which regularly took such news from the columns of the London Times and Daily Telegraph, notwithstanding the protests of those papers."

The International News Service appealed the case to the United States Supreme Court on the ground of the dissenting opinion of Judge Ward of the Circuit Court, who expressed the belief that the I. N. S. had the right to use A. P. news as soon as it was published by an A. P. newspaper or made public on a bulletin board.

NEWSPAPER IN OHIO WINS IMPORTANT SUIT FROM A LAWYER.

Constitutionality of the Newspaper Act, passed several years ago by the Ohio legislature to permit newspapers to publish, without answering to damages, the contents of all public records, was established in a decision handed down in Columbus on July 18 by the Circuit Court of Appeals in the case of Samuel Heimlick against the Dispatch Printing Company of that city.

Heimlick, a Cleveland lawyer, sued the Dispatch for $10,000 for publishing the fact that he had been arrested on a charge of perjury in connection with referendum petitions on the Warrens Tax Law.

A verdict was returned in favor of the Dispatch.

CHICAGO HERALD OPENS NEW YORK OFFICE.

The Chicago Herald has decided to follow the example of the Chicago Tribune and maintain its own Eastern advertising office. It has taken a suite in the Times Building and placed M. A. Bergfeld in charge.

Until last March, Mr. Bergfeld had been for four years Eastern representative of the Chicago American, and for seven years previous he was with the Chicago Tribune.

Heretofore the Herald has been represented in the East by Cone, Lorenzen & Woodman. The Herald also has an exclusive representative in the West in Leo J. Abrams, in the Herald Building.

The Roseau (Minn.) Times and the Roseau Region have been merged and the new name will be the Times-Region.

NO MORE NEWS CAN GO TO THE ENEMY.

GOVERNMENT TO PASS ON ALL MESSAGES LEAVING COUNTRY—HOME CENSORSHIP PLANS ARE DROPPED.

The Government has decided to abandon any attempt to censor the American press, but it put into effect on July 18 a rigid cable and radio censorship between the United States and the outside world.

American newspapers have been given a vote of confidence by the leaders of the Administration and will be permitted to publish whatever they wish about the preparations for war and information from the American troops abroad.

The American press will be admonished not to print troop movements, names and clearances of ships and to refrain from mentioning specific units sent to the front and such other actual military information as might give aid to the enemy.

Official announcement of the Government plan will be made within a few days. The cable and radio censorship, it is declared, will be made so rigid that absolutely no information of value to the enemy can get out of the United States.

This is in the form of an extension of the President's order of April 28, under which the Navy Department was put in control of censorship of all cables and the War Department in control of wire censorship into Mexico.

The outgoing censorship will be under the supervision of the Navy Department, with George Creel, chairman of the committee on public information, aiding in an advisory capacity.

According to the best information the tightening up will take the form of a rigid censorship of all cables, with especial effect on the northern European neutrals, particularly Holland and Sweden.

The censorship, it is stated, while supposed to have been on all cables not leading to Great Britain or France, where they would be censored by America's allies, has really been confined principally to cables to South America, whence powerful wireless apparatus could send the information to Spain and thence to Berlin.

Incoming messages will not be censored, and the dispatches of correspondents in Europe will be received by newspapers precisely as transmitted after passing the censorship on the other side of the Atlantic.

Outgoing messages will be concentrated at New York, San Francisco, Key West, Galveston, Panama and Porto Rico.

Every message will be scrutinized, and those which appear in any way suspicious will be transposed in such fashion as to make their obvious meaning clear, but destroy the efficacy of any code dependent upon the position of the words of the original.

Censorship of the mails was under consideration, but, in view of the effective censorship in France and England, letters will be sent from the United States uncensored.

The chance of communicating with one of the Central Powers surreptitiously in this manner by way of South America and Spain or Switzerland is regarded as so remote and the method so circuitous as virtually to obviate the necessity of mail censorship here.

INCOMING AND HOME NEWS NOT AFFECTED.

Newspaper dispatches will be affected by the new censorship only in so far as correspondents of foreign publications attempt to send misleading messages.

Regulations under which the newspapers have refrained from reporting troop movements were partly suspended on July 16 so as to permit the papers to print almost unrestricted news about the mobilization of the National Guard for war service.

This statement was issued by the War Department:

"The only restriction that the War Department places upon the news of the mobilization of the National Guard is that of secrecy concerning train routes and train schedules."

Publication of the exact routes and times of departure, it is pointed out, might invite attempts to interfere with the trains.

The instructions to Commander Todd, chief radio officer, it is understood, will cover two classes of messages.

The first are the code messages whereby apparently innocent aliens in this country have been disclosing military movements and facts relating to preparedness.

THE HERALD'S FINDINGS.

The second class covers newspaper reports sent abroad.

The New York Herald last week announced that it had obtained exclusive information showing how the Prussians were using the uncensored cables for transmission of military secrets to headquarters. They accomplished that through press dispatches addressed to insignificant newspapers in Switzerland, spending thousands of dollars in tolls where never a cent had been spent before. The messages, in straight reading code, of course, went through without a change.

Several weeks ago the Administration's attention was called to the fact that much information which should not properly be sent to Germany was printed in its daily papers within twenty-four hours of the time that the events occurred in this country.

It was declared that Germany maintained a clearing house at Basle, Switzerland, where French and other papers were received, right from the presses and carefully culled for every item that might be twisted to cheer the German populace and soldiery.

These reports were wireless immediately from the Swiss town to Berlin and other German cities, where they were set up under Washington and New York date lines.

While the information itself was of the nature that is being printed in this country daily the contorted reproductions were believed to have an extremely bad effect upon the position of this country in the war.

The details of the manner whereby Commander Todd's assistants will check up on the senders of apparently personal and commercial messages have not been divulged.

It is known, however, that the secret service will be used largely to ascertain the character and connection of every person, unknown to the censors, who submits messages for transmission over the cable lines.

Just at present it is believed that the worst portion of the traffic in fake messages is being carried on between this country and Spain, where the messages are received and relayed by wireless to Berlin.

Director Creel expects to put into force in the new arrangement a "follow-up" system whereby suspicious messages may be traced to their destination. American agents abroad will be asked to investigate the persons who continually receive cable messages.

LEWIS BLAMES MEXICO.

Senator James Hamilton Lewis of Illinois said:

"The Administration heads have information that much of the knowledge which Germany got of the movements of American troops and of our conduct of the war was caught on the wireless stations of Mexico and transmitted to Germany."

"We have reason to believe that the ships carrying American soldiers were betrayed to Germany through Mexico, and that the dispatches sent from the ships to this Government were caught on the wireless that was set at a Mexican port, and that because of such information they were pursued by submarines and their landing announced in Europe days before our navy was ready."

"The representatives of Carranza here say that this information did not go through the Carranza element, that some of these wireless stations are in control of those who are opposing Carranza and are opposed to the United States, and from these could have come the information. Those who are accused by the Carranza people retaliate and say that some of Carranza's forces have been betraying the United States from the beginning and have never been sincere, and profess devotion that they may be used by the enemies of the United States as sources of information."

"This Government is now investigating the whole situation, and when it has the truth the public will have it, and the United States will take such action as shall be made necessary by the disclosures."

WHITECHAPEL REUNION.

The survivors of the famous Whitechapel Club held an unusual reunion on the dunes near Miller Station, Ind., July 22, the occasion being the twenty-fifth anniversary of the cremation by the Whitechapel Club of the remains of Maurice Allen Collins, who committed suicide July 8, 1892, and bequeathed his body to the club with the request that it be cremated according to ancient Grecian funeral rites.

The club, which was composed of newspaper men, many of whom have since won renown, carried out the request under weird circumstances. A funeral pyre, after the fashion of the one on which the suicide's body was cremated, was lit at the anniversary celebration and an unusual program was carried out.

Among the original members of the Whitechapel Club were Finley Peter Dunne, Brand Whitlock, Drury Underwood, John T. McCutcheon, George Ade, John C. Eastman, Opie Read, Leigh Reilly, Colin C. H. Fyffe, Tom Thompson, Wallace Rice, F. U. Adams, Horace Taylor and many others who are well known in newspaperdom today.

The American Press Association has been granted final right to dispose of its "boiler-plate" business to the Western Newspaper Union. The United States Court of Appeals at Chicago has ruled that such a sale is not a violation of the Sherman anti-trust law. The appellate decision was handed down after an argument on behalf of the plaintiff by Charles E. Hughes.

O'MALLEY GOING ABROAD.

Austin J. O'Malley, assistant day city editor of the Chicago Tribune, whose vacation notice was printed in THE FOURTH ESTATE last week, has lengthened his vacation itinerary to include a trip to Berlin. He has joined the navy as chief yeoman and expects to see service soon. His work on the Tribune is being assumed by "Ted" Read.

COVERING THE GROUND.

Newspapers of Kansas City, St. Louis, Omaha and Denver are represented in a press automobile tour from Kansas City to Denver and return. The tourists started July 17. The tour is for the purpose of giving the news editors first hand information regarding the territory covered.

The Evening EXPRESS and Morning TRIBUNE are the first Los Angeles newspapers to announce Flat Rates for National Advertising.

EVENING EXPRESS, $.09 per line
MORNING TRIBUNE, $.09 per line Combination Express and Tribune) $.15 per line

The EXPRESS is the oldest newspaper in Los Angeles and the only evening newspaper with an Associated Press franchise. For many years, including this year, the Evening Express has carried and it regularly, year in and year out, carries considerably more Department and Dry Goods Store advertising than the two other evening newspapers combined.

More Advertising than any other Los Angeles Evening Paper

The TRIBUNE is the only 1-cent morning newspaper in Los Angeles. Its circulation is largely confined to Los Angeles and the suburbs. Regularly the Tribune carries in its Daily edition several times as much Department and Dry Goods Store advertising as the two other daily morning newspapers combined.

The circulation of the Evening Express exceeds 60,000

The circulation of the Morning Tribune exceeds 55,000

The combined circulation exceeds 115,000, with less than 6% duplication, and at the flat rate offers to National Advertisers the lowest rate per line, per thousand circulation, of any Los Angeles newspaper.

BRITAIN'S PAPER COMMISSION

REORGANIZED AND GIVEN NEW AUTHORITY—WHAT IT IS DOING.

The proposal of the United States Federal Trade Commission that the Government take control of the manufacturing and distribution of news print paper for the period of the war has given rise to an especial interest in this country in what the British Royal Commission is doing to help England's newspapers.

The latest information on this subject is gleaned from the Circulation Manager and Advertiser, of London, which tells of a new order becoming effective on June 4 forming a new commission and giving it new authority, as follows:

The new order issued on June 4, 1917, states that it has been deemed expedient that the terms of reference of the Royal Commission on Paper should be extended, and that a new commission should issue for this purpose. The Royal Warrant of February 15 is revoked and every matter and thing therein contained.

The new commission consists of: Sir Henry Birchenough (chairman), Sir Albert Spicer, Sir Walter Richard Nugent, Sir Frederick Macmillan, Sir Rowland Bailey, George Brown, Walter Howard Hazell, James Jeremiah, Ernest Parke, Albert Reed, Lewis Evans.

The commission has power to arrange for the importation of the quantity or the proportion of paper and cardboard (including strawboard, pasteboard, mill-board, and wood pulpboard) and manufactures of paper and cardboard, as also materials for the manufacture of paper (including wood pulp, esparto grass, and linen and cotton rags), which may have been directed by the board of trade, and also to regulate in accordance with orders made under the Defense of the Realm Regulations the distribution and use of paper and cardboard, manufactures of paper and cardboard, and materials for the manufacture of paper, whether imported from abroad or produced in the United Kingdom.

For the better effecting the purposes of the commission any three or more of the members have full power to call before them such persons as they shall judge likely to afford them any information upon the subject, and also to call for, have access to and examine all such books, documents, registers, and records as may afford them the fullest information on the subject, and to inquire of and concerning the premises by all other lawful ways and means whatsoever.

They are authorized and empowered to visit and personally inspect such places as they may deem expedient so to inspect for the more effectual carrying out of the purposes aforesaid.

The order of February 15, 1910, referred to was:

"As from and after the first day of March, 1916, subject as hereinafter provided, the importation into the United Kingdom of the following goods is hereby prohibited, viz.:

"All materials for the manufacture of paper, including wood pulp, esparto grass, and linen and cotton rags.

"Paper and cardboard (including strawboard, pasteboard, millboard and wood pulpboard) and manufactures of paper and cardboard.

"All periodical publications exceeding 16 pages in length, imported otherwise than in single copies through the post.

"This proclamation shall not apply to any goods of the descriptions specified which are imported under license given by or on behalf of the board of trade, and subject to the provisions and conditions of such license."

CHANGES IN INTEREST.

HUNTER, KAN.—The Herald, which has been printed at Tipton by C. W. Wells, has been purchased by Fred Kaplicky, who is now publishing the paper from its own office in this city.

ENSIH, KAN.—George H. Brown, until recently foreman of the Stafford Courier, has taken charge of the Gray County Record, published here.

CASSVILLE, MO.—Means Ray, who has been connected with the insurance department of the state, has re-entered the newspaper business with his father on the Cassville Democrat.

CHETOPA, KAN.—M. A. Chealey, for twenty years editor and publisher of the Chetopa Clipper, has sold that paper to R. J. Conderman.

ST. ANSGAR, IA.—Miles K. Culver has disposed of the St. Ansgar Enterprise to his son, Rushe Culver.

CENTERVILLE, IA.—Farmers here have formed a company and purchased the local newspaper plant, now called the Farmers' Advocate.

SOUTH SHORE, S. D.—John D. Burt and the publisher of the Grant County Tribune have taken over the South Shore Republican. Mr. Burt will be the editor.

MORE NEWS PRINT BEING MADE.

SHIPMENTS HAVE DECREASED AND STORAGE STOCKS
SHOW SMALL GAIN.

In his monthly statement of production and shipments for the month of June, Secretary G. F. Steele of the News Print Manufacturers Association says:

"Because of the fact, as stated last month, that various mills have ceased the manufacture of news print paper during the past year, the number of mills reporting to this association are five less in number than they were during the same month a year ago, and production of news print paper has fallen from 5,390 tons in June, 1916, to 5,250 tons in June, 1917, but the production as compared with maximum or ideal production has increased from 95.4 per cent in June, 1916, to 98.9 per cent in June, 1917.

"Shipments have decreased slightly. The shipments in June, 1916, amounted to 99.2 per cent of maximum production, while in June, 1917, shipments amounted to 97.7 per cent of maximum production.

"Stocks have increased during the month from 42,885 tons at the end of May to 45,321 tons at the end of June, or a total increase of 2,436 tons, or less than one-half day's production.

"There has been more or less trouble on account of shut-downs caused by labor troubles and accidents in mills, and it is feared that labor disturbances may cause decreased production during the next few months."

BUSINESS TROUBLES.

The printing plant in which the Snyder (Tex.) Record and later the West Texas News and Real Estate News have been printed is in the hands of the sheriff by virtue of a sequestration writ sued out by a creditor of the concern.

ROSEWATER IS OUT OF EARLY NEWSPAPERS.

Charles C. Rosewater, formerly business manager and one of the owners of the Omaha Bee, who in February last sold his interest in the Bee and went to Los Angeles as manager of the Express and Tribune, is out and has brought suit against Edwin T. Earl, proprietor of the papers, for breach of contract.

In reply to a telegraphic inquiry just before going to press, Mr. Earl wired that Mr. Rosewater had been discharged with a number of other and the suit will be vigorously contested.

LABOR PAPER FOR SOUTH.

Papers of incorporation have been filed in the probate court by the Ca Publishing Company, a new paper to be published in Birmingham, Ala., in the interest of organized labor.

The concern has a capital stock of $2,000. The stockholders are well known members of local labor organizations. The officers are E. J. Cheek, president; W. H. Winn, vice president; W. H. McCutcheon, secretary, and John E. Bonar, treasurer.

It is understood that Mr. Winn will be editor.

BOTH PATTERSONS GOING.

The Chicago Tribune is sending both its editors, Major R. R. McCormick and Lieutenant J. M. Patterson, to war. Major McCormick has already gone to France to be General Pershing's correspondent. His wife went with him. Lieutenant Patterson has just gone into camp with his battery. Both were in a vice on the border last year.

NEW FINANCIAL PAPER.

A new monthly called Finance Facts will be started in New York during August by Schuyler Renwick Schaff, who has been a writer of financial publications, including Magazine of Wall Street, the Financial World, Moody's Magazine. Publication offices will be at 510 Wall street, and the price of the paper will be twenty-five cents.

SIGNIFICANCE OF THE CURTIS CASE.

GOSSIP ARISES OVER TRADE BOARD'S ORDER ON METHOD OF CIRCULATION.

What is the real significance of the move by the Federal Trade Commission against the Curtis Publishing Company?

This has been the subject of no end of speculation in newspaper and magazine circles and it looks as though such conjecture would continue at least until August 23, on which date the Curtis Company must show cause why an "order" should not be issued stipulating the discontinuance of certain business practices.

As the first proceeding of the kind in our history, this case is bound to attract exceptional attention.

By and large, however, the keen curiosity that is being manifested in this proceeding against the Philadelphia concern is due in greatest measure to the circumstance that it is the ethics of certain methods of circulation building that are called in question.

Hence all newspaper publishers and circulation managers are keen for the official pronouncement that this case is likely to bring as to what is permissible and what is not permissible in street sales methods and agencies.

It is really a newspaper stunt, too, that is used by the Curtis Publishing Company and has now been the means of begetting criticism as a form of unfair competition.

The country, at large, hailed it as an innovation when the publishers of the Saturday Evening Post sprung their scheme of circulating via an army of small boys who handled the Post exclusively and canvassed office buildings and residence districts with a thoroughness unknown to the average city newsboys.

Experienced newspaper men quickly realized, however, that the Post circulation stunt was but an elaboration of a plan which, in one form or another, had already been employed by such publications as Pennsylvania Grit, Utica Saturday Globe, Illustrated Buffalo Express, Chicago Blade and other illustrated newspapers circulating in a considerable area.

If the Curtis Company has credit for developing this circulation system far beyond the conception of the pioneer users it pays the penalty of being forced to defend the plan because of that feature which obligates the distributors and, indirectly, the carrier boys or street sales agents not to handle rival publications and which restriction is looked upon by the Trade Commission as having "the intent, purpose and effect of stifling and suppressing competition."

Gossip in newspaper circles regarding the "complaint" against the Curtis Company seems to be concerning itself most intensely with the question whether the action of the Federal Trade Commission was inspired by the publishers of the Pictorial Review and whether there is any connection between the move at Washington and a recent interesting court proceeding in New York.

THE NEW YORK CASE.

In the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York the Pictorial Review Company, as complainant, some time since sought to obtain an injunction which would restrain the Curtis Publishing Company from making contracts with distributors or district agents preventing them from marketing the Pictorial Review through street boys and canvassing agents in the same manner that the Curtis publications are marketed.

Judge Augustus N. Hand, sitting in the New York Court, refused the plea of the Pictorial Review Company and thus allowed the Curtis interest to score a first victory in a controversy which promises to prove long drawn and develop into a test case.

Judge Hand in his opinion intimates that there is nothing whatever to prevent a rival publication from dealing with the wholesale news dealers and distributors that handle Curtis publications but what he inferentially denounced is the practice that he apparently construes as an attempt on the part of a competitor to avail himself of the special organization of Curtis boys built up at considerable expenditure of money, time and labor.

In short Judge Hand by his decision, seemed to establish the important precedent that once a publisher has built up his own special, exclusive, circulating organization, no other publisher may without his consent break into such close corporation or share the services of the great body of sales agents and solicitors who have taken up the work as a result of the inducements held out by the first comer in the field.

What has pricked the curiosity, then, of publishers is, what connection if any exists between the case in the New York Court and the complaint filed by the Federal Trade Commission?

Is the thrust at Washington a sequel to the failure of the Pictorial Review to secure from Judge Hand sanction for its plan of circulation?

THE FOURTH ESTATE has the best of authority for stating that there is little connection between the two developments that have come to the attention of newspaper makers almost simultaneously.

In accordance with an invariable rule the Federal Trade Commission will give no information as to the identity of the person or persons who have brought an issue to its attention and consequently there is

PROTEST BAN BY P.O. DEPARTMENT

POSTMASTERS DECLARED NOT CAPABLE OF JUDGING MERITS OF PAPERS.

The Government's action in barring from the mails about fifteen newspapers held to come under the ban of the Espionage Bill was strenuously objected to by prominent New Yorkers headed by Amos Pinchot at a "denunciation" luncheon held on July 13.

Several of the speakers made it clear that they did not hold pacifist views and thought there ought to be some regulation of the mails, but they agreed that the present policy of the Post Office Department was wrong.

A motion was passed authorizing the appointment of a committee to go to Washington to take the matter up with the Postmaster General and the President.

Another motion was passed authorizing the appointment of a committee to cooperate with the Civil Liberties Committee in arranging a mass meeting of protest against the suppression of periodicals by the Post Office Department.

Among the speakers were Collector of the Port Malone, Commissioner of Immigration Howe, Max Eastman of the Masses, Abraham Cahan of the Daily Forward, Charles Erben of the Call.

Dr. Howe said that the policy by which the Post Office Department had excluded some fifteen periodicals from the mails was not in harmony with the country's motives in the war.

Collector Malone said he would not criticize a Government department. He condemned, however, a policy which permitted postmasters to pass upon the merits of magazines submitted to the mails.

"I don't think there is a postmaster in the country," said Mr. Malone, "competent to decide what magazine shall go through the mails, and I do not think that the suppression without sufficient reason of any periodical is a contribution to the country's welfare."

Mr. Malone advised those dissatisfied to meet and form their protest, and then to take it to the Postmaster General, and, if they did not obtain satisfaction, to the President himself.

Ann Herendeen, one of the editors of the issue of Four Lights, which was barred from the mails, said that the Woman's Peace Party, which publishes the magazine, had been in correspondence with Mr. Creel, who said that he deplored the action of the Post Office Department.

Among the papers barred from the mails are the Socialist News, Cleveland, O.; the American Socialist, Chicago; People's Press of Philadelphia; the St. Louis Labor, the Michigan Socialist, Detroit; the Rebel, Hallettsville, Tex.; the Masses Magazine, New York; the International Socialist Review, Chicago; the Social Revolution, St. Louis; the Appeal to Reason, Girard, Kan.; and Watson's Jeffersonian of Georgia.

CREEL DENIES FOUR LIGHTS.

George Creel, chairman of the Committee of Public Information, denied afterwards having been enlisted in the fight against the Post Office Department; to prevent the suppression of treasonable publications.

"It is true that Mrs. Lane, managing editor of the magazine, wrote me," said Mr. Creel, "asking my assistance in behalf of Four Lights, which is an outgrowth of the Survey. I did go to see Mr. Lamar, attorney general for the Post Office Department, in regard to the publication, and found that it was clearly obnoxious to the espionage law."

"I am as firmly the friend of a free press as any man, and would fight for a free press. But publications which are trying to break down the Government are clearly treasonable, and I believe in enforcing the law against them."

"I replied to Mrs. Lane saying I could not for one moment undertake to defend a publication that was violating the law, and that she must not expect to receive any help from me in contesting the action of the Post Office Department."

THE REBEL ASKS TERMS

T. A. Hickey, editor of the Hallettsville (Tex.) Rebel, a Socialist publication, has gone to Washington to confer with Government authorities regarding a probable permission to republish the Rebel, which has been held up in the mails because of its anti-Government attitude.

THE MASSES BRINGS SUIT

United States District Judge Learned Hand in New York adjourned the hearing on the application of the Masses for an injunction to restrain the Post Office authorities from denying the use of the mails to the publication until 10:30 o'clock this morning.

Counsel for the publication, argued against the postponement, saying the delay injured the magazine at the rate of $100 a day, which was particularly damaging because the magazine had only a small capital behind it. He also urged that the Post Office authorities be compelled to specify the alleged objectionable features of the magazine, instead of characterizing the whole issue, which was denied the mails as obnoxious to Section 3 of the Espionage act.

The representative of the postmaster said he needed the delay to study previous issues of the Masses to prove that its attitude in the past showed that the publication of matter tending to obstruct recruiting had been deliberate.

The Masses is still being circulated and sold on a few newsstands, although barred from the mails. The number of copies held from the mails is about 2,200.

In the August number of the Masses—the one barred from the mails—is a poetical "tribute" to Emma Goldman and Alexander Berkman, recently convicted and sent to prison for advising young men to disobey the registration laws. It also contained a double page cartoon showing the naked figures of two men, labelled "Youth" and "Labor," and the nude figure of a woman labelled "Democracy," lashed to a cannon, while another woman and a child are crying to high heaven for protection. Under that picture is the single word "Conscription."

In the magazine there are articles tending to give the impression that young men who have refused to register on the claim that they were conscientious objectors must be looked upon as heroes. Then there are tirades against conscription, against all war, and demands that the conscription laws be repealed and that the United States Government act in accordance with the Workmen's and Soldiers' Council of Russia in its determination of peace terms.

CREEL CRITICISED BY SERVICE PAPER.

Under the caption "The Doctored Naval Narrative" the Army and Navy Register a Washington service paper, devoted its leading editorial last week to George Creel's description of the encounter between American troop ships under convoy and German submarines.

"It was about as fatuous a performance of 'elaboration' as it has been apologetically cited, as could well be imagined," says the editorial. "It is unpardonable upon any ground that is acceptable to the newspapers which were inclined to circulate it and then the readers of these newspapers who were thus deceived."

"The special rendition of this incident has elicited the defence that it was justified on the theory that the message fattened with embellishment in place of the lean truth would in some mysterious manner 'stimulate' interest in the war and at the same time 'gratify' the American public."

On the same principles of reasoning and incentive it would be proper and profitable to describe General Pershing and his staff as penetrating to Berlin and subjugating the enemy.

"That indeed would be gratifying and stimulating in increased proportion to the surpassing flight of fancy."

"As for the stimulation of public sentiment by the unreal so long as it is sensational there might very well be a question of that result in the present instance."

COMFORT FOR SOLDIERS.

Plans have been perfected by the management of the Philadelphia Press and the Evening Telegraph to open two soldiers' and sailors' clubs on the other side of the Atlantic for the comfort and happiness of the American boys who are either headed for or are in the European trenches, or are aboard American battleships which have sailed abroad. One of these clubs is to be situated in East London, 13-14 Pall Mall, the other at 44 des Petites Ecuries, Paris.

Arrangements have been also completed to form a strong committee of patriotic Philadelphia women who will see to it that large supplies of jam, chocolate and cigarettes are sent to these clubs to be distributed later in the trenches. The Press Evening Telegraph Demonstration Bureau, at 1024 Chestnut street, is to be the clearing house for the jam, chocolate and cigarettes.

NO PRINGLE REPORT.

Reports that the Pringle News Print Paper Commission had presented a report of its Canadian investigations is denied by Commissioner R. A. Pringle. To THE FOURTH ESTATE, he said:

"I have not made my report; and it is not likely that I will be able to make it for a month or two. In the meantime I have a staff of accountants engaged at the different mills endeavoring to get at the actual cost of news print, sulphur, etc."

LIKES COUNTRY LIFE.

Fred T. Wilshire, former advertising manager of the Springfield (Ill.) News Record, prefers the rural newspaper to the more strenuous activities of the city field. He is now running the South Sangamon Messenger at Chatham, Ill., and the Courier at Loami, Ill.

SOLDIERS OBJECTED

Several policemen were stationed around the New Orleans Item building for a day recently following the appearance at the newspaper office of about 150 Louisiana National Guardsmen from Camp Nicholls. The soldiers stated that they intended to make a peaceful demonstration and ask the Item to retract statements made in articles several days ago regarding alleged conditions in and near Camp Nicholls.

Officers at the camp learned of the soldiers' intended visit after they left camp and when the guardsmen arrived at the Item building they were confronted by their officers and a squad of soldiers with fixed bayonets and machine guns. The protesting guardsmen were placed technically under arrest, and marched peacefully back to camp. No indication of intended violence was reported.

NO OHIO SUMMER MEETING.

The annual mid-summer meeting of the Associated Ohio Dailies, which for years has been held at Cedar Point, is a thing of the past, according to Secretary Louis H. Brush.

Because of unsettled conditions due to the war, the newspaper men making up the membership voted to abandon the summer meetings and to make the midwinter meeting, usually held in Columbus, the feature of the organization.

The next meeting will be held the last Tuesday and Wednesday in January, 1918.

NEW CHICAGO PRESS PAPER.

The Scoop, former organ of the Chicago Press Club and more latterly conducted by a company under the editorship of DeLysle Ferree Cass, is to be replaced by a new publication called the Dead-Line. The new publication will contain news and views by and for newspaper men in active editorial pursuits.

Mr. Cass will be managing editor of the Dead-Line which will have offices at 189 West Madison street, Chicago, with correspondents through the United States and Canada. The Scoop, it is announced, will be discontinued.

"JOE" WARD JOINS PERSHING.

The readers of the Kansas City Post will have their representative with the American expeditionary forces in France. Josiah M. Ward, editor, globe trotter, author, is already on his way to the battle front as the special war correspondent of the Post.

Mr. Ward once was managing editor of the Kansas City Post and was for many years editor of the Denver Post.

MEETING IN WYOMING.

The annual meeting of the Wyoming State Editorial Association will be held in Cheyenne on July 21, 22 and 23.

ARTICLE V.

WHEN CORNING GLASS CO. SAW LAWS AHEAD ON AUTO HEADLIGHTS, IT ACTED AND ADVERTISED.

BY W. LIVINGSTON LARNED.

Selling automobile accessories is not without peculiarly aggravating trade difficulties.

The average garage handling accessories is not alert. It doesn't seem to care very much whether it sells them or not. When otherwise engaged than selling gasoline and oil and washing cars; it would really prefer to tilt a chair back and "take things easy."

Conditions around garages and large repair shops are undergoing a change just now.

Uncle Sam is dangling bait under the nose of the expert mechanic.

"Voluntarily enlist now," says the Navy, for instance, "and we'll give you an officership on a submarine chaser, wait for conscription and you'll get around forty a month as a common seaman. Come while the fat jobs are open—the Navy pays you handsomely to serve your nation's cause."

Result—a gradually stripping clean of the young, vigorous men—they are leaving the garages in droves. Indifferent mechanics and unexperienced help are filling their places. This internal confusion has militated against the heavy sale of accessories. There has been a lack of "push" behind the line.

When an automobile owner sees a certain article in a window (or hears of it) some such conversation as this takes place:

"Is that a Noise-o Horn?"

"Yep."

"How are they?"

"Oh! all right. I guess—I ain't heard anything different—they're all about the same—them horns."

"Would you recommend them?"

"Well—here's the horn I'd buy if I was gettin' one." (Business of designating an inferior article, on which there is far greater profit.)

In short, what we are endeavoring to present is the disheartening fact that the automobile business has attracted an alarming number of career pirates, who care nothing for tomorrow's good will and trade, so long as they sell today.

It must not be inferred that all are of this calibre. It must not be inferred that an overwhelming majority are careless in their business dealings. But the bad fellows "hurt" the good ones, and, with war conditions prevailing, the canker is more annoying.

REACHING THE AUTO OWNER.

The manufacturer of accessories, then, is face to face with this problem.

"I can't rely upon the dealer to sell the article. I must not depend upon the garage shop or the repair station, or the service station, or the automobile sundries depot, to put over my proposition for me."

"National advertising in standard magazines will not hold my goods in line from month to month of itself—I must so impress the automobilist first as an impractical novelty, was lax in salesmanship."

There is no question but what is direct with the worth of my line that he will go for it; demand it, insist upon receiving it and accept no substitute."

And that's where the daily newspaper comes in.

A quick, sure impression made, with a purchase to follow before that agreeable impression has been eradicated.

The Corning Glass Company, manufacturer of "Conaphore," a patented and highly desirable automobile headlight, had been through somewhat this same experience before. The firm puts out glass cooking utensils—an innovation on the highly concentrated campaigns in newspapers everywhere were the determining factor. It was a campaign of small town education.

Prejudice and doubt were beaten down by intensive "show how" copy.

Every dealer handling "Pyro" could have as many illustrated advertisements as he desired. The goods were shown—and most alluringly. Any number of sound reasons were advanced why "Pyro" was the logical cooking-ware.

Following on the heels of the "Pyro" newspaper advertising is the educational copy for "Conaphore" headlights.

These headlights are scientifically "O.K." There is nothing "hit-or-miss" about them. Yellow in color, and expert in design, they answer every motoring need for a headlight that will not blind the other chap.

For three years the urgent need of a curb on headlights has been known to students of the automobile.

Thousands upon thousands of thoughtless motorists have not been particularly considerate "on the road." They have turned terrific streams of light into the eyes of the advancing traffic—and laughed at reprimand.

"Look out for yourself" has been the motto.

THE FIELD PREPARED.

Investigation went to show that a liberal number of the serious accidents at night were caused by "eye glare."

The man at the wheel was blinded by an oncoming machine with uncensored headlights.

Murmurings began to be heard along "Automobile Row."

"There'll be legislation," it was whispered.

And this was the opportune time for "Conaphore."

They cut down glare without decreasing light.

They minimized that intense white flash in the eyes.

They held the shaft of road light down to a level with the radiator—the radiance fell on the road—not on the tops of trees and cars.

The usual "dealer ad" is two columns in width.

"Conaphore" newspaper advertisements were made three and four columns—an unprecedented allowance for a campaign of this magnitude.

But two things had been definitely settled upon before the publicity was launched:

There was to be room enough for "Conaphore" argument.

There was to be room enough for illustration of what "Conaphore" did on the road.

You need space when you picture headlights.

Various art departments discovered this when they began the series of illustrations.

But "every picture told a story."

The reader was presented with an actual visualization of how the "Conaphore" worked. The beams of radiance were shown—the principle of the invention put in diagram form—and mixed in with it all were sure-fire flashes of human appeal.

A startled and unhappy motorist, almost "life-size," frowned at you from four-column space. He held his hand across his eyes in a desperate attempt to shut off the blinding glare of an approaching car. It was perfectly obvious that he could not see to guide his own machine. He was confused and frightened.

The text beneath this design put the problem up to the thoughtless man that he was doing a great injustice to his fellow-motorist when he used the wrong type of headlight. Was it quite fair—quite reasonable—quite on the level to blind a "road pal?"

In fact, perhaps the most significant feature of "Conaphore" advertising is its quiet, well-mannered "appeal to reason." There's no straining for effect—it's simply one man saying to another:

"Here—let's be reasonable about this thing. You know as well as I do that night driving is made many times more dangerous and difficult because of the wrong type of headlight. Suppose we get together. It's as much for your sake as it is for mine. We'll beat the law-makers to it and be rational and reasonable without waiting for legislation. Here is a headlight that holds the radiance down to the road, where it belongs—keeps it out of the other fellow's eyes. It's a mighty good light to adopt."

The great difficulty with much of the headlight advertising in the past has been an inclination to treat the subject technically and to go into long dissertation of a schoolroom character on how results are achieved. Many of the lights are worked out on scientific principles and the transference of the how and the wherefore of glass manufacture become pretty complicated.

Unfortunately, the average man will not take the trouble to digest text matter of this character. He seems to have neither the time nor the inclination. It makes what is known as "hard reading."

"Conaphore" copy for newspaper advertising is exceedingly readable. It possesses all the flavor and interest of real "news."

And the nearer newspaper advertising approaches "news" the more apt it is to be read—the more sure of success.

A LIQUOR AD SOLUTION.

Because liquor advertising contracts are deemed of more importance than out-of-state subscriptions the Redding (Cal.) newspapers have cancelled subscriptions in Washington and Oregon.

The choice becomes necessary because liquor advertising is forbidden in Washington and Oregon. It seems likely that the step taken by the Redding papers will be followed by others operating under similar conditions.

AN ENTHUSIAST ON DISTRIBUTION.

PSYCHOLOGY OF A WOMAN WHO SUCCESSFULLY SELLS ADVERTISING SPACE.

By AYLETT LAPSLEY.

Miss Jane Carroll is an optimist and couldn't be anything else. She says herself that she couldn't help being happy if she tried, and very likely this is one of the qualities which help her in selling Women's Wear distributive power; for she considers it not as advertising space, but as an opportunity for her customer to create friendships and take his share of the profits in this great problem of "distribution."

To Miss Carroll assembling, designing, manufacturing, arousing an interest in a commodity, and speeding it halfway round the earth, is just full of "human interest. To her all this process lives. It is a continued story, more real, more vital, more thrilling, and involving more human lives than the latest "best seller."

"Think what a privilege it is to talk with the men who have built or who control these businesses, many of which are of international scope. These men have worked, studied, planned and succeeded. Many of them have traveled in various parts of the world as part of their work and have a vast fund of information. To meet these men is an education in itself." This is the way she feels about her work, though she does like a game of tennis before breakfast.

The League of Advertising Women of New York City was signally fortunate in being represented recently by Miss Carroll, the first and only delegate at the Fourth National Foreign Trade Convention at Pittsburgh; also at the Fifth Convention of the United States Chamber of Commerce, at which Miss Carroll was the only woman delegate.

And if you ask her about opportunity, she answers: "As to opportunity, the sky is the limit; as to achievement, it's up to my ambition and brains."

Alvin J. Meyer, a former New York Tribune man, is now making a name for himself as a producer of special editions for newspapers. Mr. Meyer operates from New York and Pittsburgh and has had nine years' experience in his specialized work.

For the Tribune he handled a special numbers and pages and on leaving that paper three and a half years ago started out for himself. He scored successes on such papers as the Madison (Wis.) State Journal, Lansing (Mich.) State Journal, Zanesville (Ohio) Signal, Muskegon (Mich.) Times, Steubenville (Ohio)

ALVIN J. MEYER.

Gazette, Martin's Ferry (Ohio) Times, Marietta (Ohio) Register-Leader and the North Adams (Mass.) Herald.

For the latter publication Mr. Meyer issued a "Greater North Adams and Northern Berkshire Edition" on July 9 to the extent of forty-four pages, which is believed to be one of the biggest special editions ever issued by a paper in a town the size of North Adams. Mr. Meyer directs his editions personally, specializing on anniversary, industrial and feature numbers.

Herbert W. Smith has been appointed to the post of instructor in advertising in the journalism faculty of the University of Missouri School of Journalism. He is doing similar duty in the current summer session. Mr.

HERBERT W. SMITH

Smith came into advertising via commercial art. He graduated from the University of Missouri journalism school in 1911 and acquired his experience with the St. Louis Star, the St. Louis Times, the Barnes-Crosby Company, Blumenstock Brothers Advertising Agency and the Hatcher & Young Agency.

Marion T. Rose, of the present senior class at the University, becomes assistant in the School of Journalism, succeeding Mr. Smith in charge of the courses in illustrative art.

During the nine years since the School of Journalism of the University of Missouri, has been in existence it has conferred the degree of Bachelor of Journalism upon 116 men and 28 women.

Of this number 90 per cent are engaged in journalism. About one-half of metropolitan newspapers and a half in rural journalism.

The graduates are in 23 states and five foreign countries, as follows: Alabama, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Maryland, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Mississippi, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Ohio, Pennsylvania, South Dakota, Texas, Utah, Virginia, Wisconsin, Canada, China, France, Hawaii, Japan.

The summer courses in journalism at the University of Missouri show an increase in enrollment over that of the summer session of 1916. This increased enrollment is despite the fact that in many summer schools the enrollment for the session is less than last year.

The journalism courses given at Missouri in the summer are: History and principles of journalism; comparative journalism; the country newspaper; the news, reporting, copy reading; the writing of advertising; advertising management; and rural newspaper management.

The officers of the Union College Press Club for the ensuing year are: President, Theodore De C. Palmer; vice-president, William Barnett; treasurer, Ed. M. Cameron; secretary, William Greeley. J. M. H. Potter is chairman of the general news committee of the club. Union College is in Schenectady, N. Y.

Students of the Washington University journalism department are getting out a thrice-a-week newspaper for the summer, publication being started last week. Students in the regular winter session have for years had the University of Washington Daily, but this is only the third time summer school students have undertaken to publish a paper.

News stories for the publication are selected from the work of the class in reporting, while the editorials are gleaned from the productions of the class in editorial writing.

Professor Eric W. Allen of the University of Oregon, who heads the journalism department for the summer, acts as editor.

The University Journal, edited by summer school students at the Washington State University, will carry a department this year which will give the news of the Presidio and of the ambulance corps. Arrangements have already been made with journalism students in these two branches of Government service to correspond with the Journal and with daily reporters in other branches.

Professor Eric W. Allen, director of the school of journalism at Oregon, who has charge of the summer session work in the department, will act as editor of the paper. He will choose his staff from among the summer school students in the department.

The staff consists of Harold Hotelling, formerly of the Puyallup Herald, editor-in-chief, and Rev. Oscar Fedder, a Seattle Lutheran minister, managing editor. A. R. Terpening, superintendent of schools at Kirtland, is chief editorial writer.

With the resignation of Dr. Herman G. Brauer, chief of the bureau of municipal research of the University of Washington, the bureau's magazine, Washington Municipalities, will no longer be published by the university. The publication of the paper will be continued by the League of Washington Municipalities and will probably be edited by Howard A. Hanson of Seattle, ex-president of the league.

A correspondence course in journalism is to be instituted by the Indiana University department of journalism. The course will be taught by Professor J. W. Piercy, head of the department, and Miss Mary B. Orvis of the extension division.

R. R. Jamison, of the class of 1918, has been elected editor-in-chief of the Purdue Exponent, the official daily paper of Purdue University at Lafayette Ind. Other members of the staff chosen include: Managing editor, K. T. Nessler; business manager, H. S. Vaile; sporting editor, R. J. Krieger, and night editors, W. G. Albershardt, N. T. Crane and R. S. Ernst.

Joseph A. Wright, assistant professor of journalism at Indiana University, is undergoing training at the Officers Reserve Corps camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison, near Indianapolis. Professor J. W. Piercy, head of the department, has taken over Mr. Wright's classes and also the direction of the Daily Student the official publication of the university.

The Spectrum, the weekly collegiate publication of the Agricultural College at Fargo, N. D., has been abandoned because the six young men on the staff have gone to war.

Courses in newspaper reporting and in special feature writing, were opened by the department of journalism at the University of Wisconsin this summer, beginning June 25, and extending six weeks to August 3.

The training is intended for young newspaper workers who desire more preparation for their profession but are unable to take a regular university course. Both young men and young women are provided for in this instruction.

The work in reporting will include regular news assignments for Madison daily papers. Articles written in connection with the course in special feature writing may be submitted to Sunday newspapers and magazines for publication.

An advanced course in short story writing for those who have had some experience in writing fiction for publication will also be given.

The instruction in journalism this summer will be in charge of Professor J. Wainwright Evans, formerly of the University of Wisconsin and now of the University of Kansas, and Phil C. Bing, instructor in journalism at the university, who has just been elected assistant professor of journalism at the University of Minnesota.

A shortage of men in the department of journalism furnished a logical excuse for a special co-ed edition of the University Summer Session Kansan, which was issued as the final number of the summer.

Even the advertisements were collected by a woman. The staff elected was as follows: Dorothy Cole, St. Louis, editor; Dorothy Spencer, Emporia, associate editor; Adeline DeMare, Lawrence; Mary Robert, Lawrence, news editors; Gail Hall, McPherson, business manager.

NORTHERN NEW YORKERS TO MEET AND MAKE MERRY.

The newspaper men of Northern New York will hold their semi-annual meeting and summer outing at Westminster Park on the St. Lawrence River July 20 and 21.

Members of the Northern New York Press Association and their families will assemble at Alexandria Bay on July 20 and from there they will take the ferry to Westminster, where a business meeting will be held.

Following dinner at the Hotel Westminster, the party will go to Alexandria Bay to attend the evening performance of the Community Chautauqua, which closes a five days' entertainment course that evening.

Saturday morning the ladies of the party will enjoy a motor boat trip among the islands while the newspaper men will hold a business session from 9 to 12 o'clock, when addresses upon topics of interest to the craft will be given and discussions follow. Courtland Smith, manager of the American Press Association, of New York, will be the principal speaker.

At 1 o'clock a shore dinner will be served a short distance from the hotel.

At 3 o'clock the entire party will take a trip among the islands, returning to Alexandria Bay in time to connect with the evening trains at Clayton for all points.

"Front Office Tips for Publishers" is the subject of an address to be given by C. M. Redfield, publisher of the Malone Evening Telegram and a past president of the association.

G. F. Darrow of the Ogdensburg Advance will talk on "Creating More Business for the Job Department." The necessity of collecting subscription accounts in advance, one of the problems now facing publishers, will be discussed by B. G. Seaman, publisher of the Pulaski Democrat.

The news print situation will be discussed, as also will the subject of "Newspaper Space as a War Commodity."

PRICES GO UP IN DES MOINES.

PUBLISHERS IN MANY CITIES ARE SATISFIED WITH INCREASES.

All three afternoon newspapers in Des Moines, the Tribune, Capital and News, will increase their mail and subscription price $1 per year beginning August 1.

Owing to the enormous increase in the cost of print paper and all other material and expenses that enter into the making of a newspaper, the Bloomington (Ill.) papers have found it necessary to advance subscription rates in Bloomington and Normal to twelve and one-half cents a week.

A slight revision of mail subscription rates has also been necessary. In making the increase announcement the Bulletin said:

"It must not be thought that in a slight change of price as noted above the Daily Bulletin is shifting its loss by reason of advanced cost of material upon subscribers. Indeed it is hardly dividing the loss, for the amount acquired by this small advance in subscription rate will far from cover the increase in cost of newspaper output.

"Hoping for a return to normal conditions the Bloomington papers have held off, although other papers had advanced prices some months ago, some to fifteen cents per week, as the Des Moines and Danville papers.

"The thrift of a town is gauged abroad by the character of its newspapers. And that consideration, if not sheer business sense, withholds us from the course of such false economy as reducing the size of the newspaper and cutting down the working force, a backward step which would find no favor we think with either our readers or business people."

The results are announced by James F. O'Donnell, manager of the Bulletin, as follows:

"We were agreeably surprised to find that we have had little or no 'stops'."

The publisher of a large Upper New York State daily reports perfect satisfaction with his increases in price. An initial loss of 18 per cent has been reduced to 4 per cent, three months being required to get back to a normal basis. Advertising has increased and agents and advertisers have approved the change.

How local conditions may affect a publisher's decision to increase his circulation rates is set forth by the manager of a Michigan newspaper, who did not wish to be quoted, as follows:

"We are satisfied with the higher price so far as it goes. While we have been unable under competition in the local field to advance our subscription rates as far as we would like to, we have had full cooperation locally so far as advertising is concerned. There has been little or no protest anywhere over the increase in the advertising rate and as far as we can see, no loss of business.

"Our circulation has not been materially affected, because the increase in circulation rates has only occurred on the mail and deliveries in the small towns. There has been some falling off, but not to a serious amount.

"As to local subscription rates, our city is practically the only Michigan city we know of where a rate increase could not be effected. We wanted to advance from 10 to 12 cents a week and are still making the effort, but our competitor, who claims a much larger circulation, evidently has no confidence in his position and hesitates to make the advance with us."

"We have found a splendid spirit prevailing among the advertisers and advertising agents that we have so far dealt with and we have no complaints to offer."

Conditions in a fair-sized Missouri city are outlined by a publisher as follows:

"We are satisfied with the results of raising our price, having lost only 5 per cent of our circulation. The percentage of loss was immediate, a steady basis being reached after 30 days.

"Advertising has increased in the meantime and advertisers and agencies seem to be satisfied."

Hoyt F. Boylan, advertising manager of the Pittsburg (Kan.) Daily Headlight, says:

"We are just raising our rate, so we are not in a position to give you an answer at this early date. Locally, we have had no trouble, as merchants realized that white paper and increased cost of production would force a raise in rates on a newspaper in order to continue publication."

A Massachusetts publisher, who raised his price over a year ago, says he is well satisfied with the results. He says:

"The first week after going to 2 cents we lost 25 per cent of our circulation, but we have recovered all but about 10 per cent. It took about 3 months to get on a steady basis again and since then the circulation has been gradually climbing.

"Our advertising increased the first year, but we would not say it was the result of going to 2 cents. At least, it did not diminish as a result of the raise. Of course, there is not a doubt that a paper that can raise its price from 1 cent to 2 cents and retain 75 per cent of its circulation at the start has a clientele of subscribers that is valuable to the advertiser.

"Most advertisers have agreed with us on that basis, but there have been some advertising agencies which have asked for a rebate on their advertising because of lost circulation.

"We do not believe that it is to the best advantage of the publisher who intends to raise his rates to shout too much about it, but rather to go about it in a businesslike way. He should create the impression that the raise is no more than to be expected."

W. R. Ashford, business manager of the Cedar Rapids (Ia.) Republican and Evening Times, is not so certain that an increase in the price of a newspaper is universally practicable. He says:

"Previous to the increase in the price of print paper, we were charging 50 cents a month or $5 a year for the Republican and 25 cents a month or $3 a year for the Evening Times. On September 1, 1916, we increased the price of the evening paper to 10 cents a month or $5 a year, delivered by carrier.

"We lost possibly 25 per cent of our city circulation with the increased price, and the building-up process is very slow. It is our honest belief that many of the poorer class of people must have a 25-cent-a-month paper if they are to have a daily newspaper."

"We later increased the price of the Times by mail from $3 to $4 a year and the Republican from $2 to $4 a year. Competitors, however, would not join us in increasing the price, and, being threatened with a serious loss in circulation, we returned to the $3 price on the Republican, but continued the Times at $4 a year. This means that the morning paper will gradually replace the evening paper outside of Cedar Rapids."

"There has been no appreciable difference in the attitude of local advertisers. They have not made a single complaint because of loss of circulation. We increased the local rate last February from 20 to 25 cents an inch, with no loss in space.

"National advertisers, through the agencies, have taken a different attitude. The agency demands circulation, and in case of the circulation falling below the guaranteed figure at the time the contract was made, demands either a rebate or additional advertising to make up the difference. They refuse to recognize changed conditions."

"Every newspaper must meet its competition in any advance in price, either subscription or advertising, if it expects to be successful in that increase and expects to go through it without some loss."

"Under existing conditions, no newspaper can be issued and sent out either by carrier or mail, for less than $5 a year, with profit to the publisher. Advertising rates, to be profitable, must not be less than 20 per cent higher for the same circulation than previous to the increased price of materials."

Recently THE FOURTH ESTATE sent out to publishers who have raised prices, the following question:

A—Are you satisfied with the higher price results?
B—By what percentage has your circulation been affected, either gain or loss?

C—What percentage of loss in circulation was the first result?
D—About how long did it require for the circulation to reach a steady basis again?

E—Has advertising increased or diminished as a result?
F—What has been the attitude of advertisers and advertising agents?

Besides the many answers already printed in THE Fourth Estate, the following were received.

Kansas City Post:

A—Yes.
B—About 7,000 more readers than when increase went into effect.
C—About 5,000 loss.
D—Very few months.
E—Advertising gain of 25 per cent.
F—No appreciable difference in attitude.

Sioux City (Ia.) Tribune:

A—Yes.
B—Only 2 per cent loss, with probable gain at end of year, all subscribers on cash in advance basis.
C—About 4 per cent.
D—Still gaining.
E—No effect on advertising.

Tampa (Fla.) Times:

A—Yes.
B—Circulation now highest in our history.
C—Less than 300 initial loss.
D—Less than 2 months.

Saskatoon (Sask.) Daily Star:

A—Yes.
B—Apparently no effect on circulation.
C—No falling off in advertising, despite increase of 1 cent a line all around.

Texas Four States Press:

A—Yes.
B—Now greater than before the increase.
C—About 1 1/2 per cent.
D—Within 2 months.
E—No change in advertising.
F—Local advertisers appear to approve of the increase, figuring that the "buck" was passed to the subscriber rather than to the advertiser.

Victoria (B. C.) Times:

A—Yes.
B—Slight increase.
C—No reduction in advertising, though rates have been increased.
F—Advertisers and agents favorable.

Norfolk (Neb.) Daily News:

A—Yes.
B—Normal gain.
C—About 5 per cent.
D—One month.
E—Increased.
F—No noticeable change.

Denver Times & Rocky Mountain News:

A—Yes.
B—Gain of 7 per cent on News; 16 per cent on Times.
C—Less than 10 per cent on either paper.
D—Within 60 days.

Little Rock (Ark.) Gazette:

A—Yes.
B—Subscription larger than before raise.
C—Very few losses.
E—Advertising not decreased.
F—Advertisers advised increase.

Fort Smith (Ark.) Southwest American:

A—Yes.
B—About 10 per cent gain.
C—A few lost, not more than 150 all told.
D—Less than 60 days.
E—Advertising increasing steadily.
F—Encouraging.

Texas (Tex.) Texarkanian:

A—Yes.
B—About 10 per cent gain.
C—About 15 per cent loss for 2 months.
D—About 8 months.

E—About normal in volume, but increased rate yields higher income.
F—Agents take it as justified.

Rushville (Ind.) Daily Republican:

A—Yes.
B—Not affected.
C—No loss.
E—Increased.
F—Agents reconciled and accept changes.

"LIBERTY BOND" STARK.

It happened that while the country was engaged with the Liberty Loan issue the Cincinnati Health Department was carrying on its "Better Babies" Show, and Jack Stark, a Cincinnati newspaper man, upon entering his son, Jack, Jr., 20 months old in the contest, announced that he was as "solid as a Liberty Bond is sound—and that is some solid."

The new phrase took with the public immediately and the many persons who know the youngster no longer call him Jack, but "Liberty Bond." In the contest he was given a 97 per cent mark.

"WILD BILL" WILL FLY

William T. Mettinn, police reporter on the Cincinnati Commercial Tribune, has sailed for France to become a member of the Lafayette Escadrille.

"Wild Bill," as he is known to his associates, was formerly an aviator before becoming a reporter, and when war was declared on Germany undertook to enter the flying corps of the United States Army, failing to be accepted.

PRINTERS AID RECRUITING.

Typographical Union No. 6 of New York, together with the "Big Six" band, enlisted a meeting of the Midday Minute Men on July 17. President Leon H. Rouse was rousing applauded as he declared it was time for New York to know where union labor stands "in this great struggle."

Again he was cheered as he asserted that printers always have played an important part in the fight for human liberty, citing such members of the trade as Benjamin Franklin and Horace Greeley.

POST EDITION REPRINTED.

The "Port of New York" Supplement, which the New York Evening Post issued on June 20, has been reprinted in miniature facsimile form, containing 116 pages, about 8 by 4 inches, four columns wide. The rotogravure cover illustration and more than 50 other pictures are reproduced. The facsimile is printed on lightweight super paper. A special edition is bound in cloth covers.

PAPER FOR MASONS.

James Thacker, a Cincinnati newspaper man and manager of the City News Bureau, who is an enthusiastic Mason, is now editing and publishing the Hamilton County Mason. The first number made its appearance recently and is exciting much favorable comment from his brother Masons.

MORE EXPENSES FOR PUBLISHERS.

WAGE INCREASES GRANTED TO TYPO UNIONS IN MANY CITIES.

In Detroit the newspaper publishers and the I. T. U. have agreed to, a wage increase of 10 per cent taking effect immediately, and at the end of two years another advance of 5 per cent will be effective.

Auxiliary typesetting machine offices are also parties to the contract. The pay of proofreaders and bankmen has been placed on the same basis as that for other journeymen, and a flat scale now prevails in all composing rooms. A bonus system, which has been in vogue on typesetting machines, is continued. Proofreaders and bankmen, by the new adjustment, had their wages raised $7 and $8 per week.

In Goldsboro, N. C., to the minimum wage is now $15 per week, an increase of $3 over the wage paid under unorganized conditions. A reduction of one hour a day is made in one of the offices.

The newspaper scale at Newark, N. J., has been settled by mutual agreement after arbitration proceedings failed to compose the differences. Back pay dates from the first of last January, and the scale was placed at $30 per week for day work and $33 nights, to be in effect after the first of last June.

A new wage scale in Titusville, Fla., follows: Morning papers—Foremen, $22.50; machine operators, $21; handmen, $18. Book and job offices—Foremen, $18; machine operators, $18.50; handmen, $16.50.

An increase for Kansas City (Mo.) mailers amounts to $1.20 per week, divided over a three-year term.

A wage increase of $2 per week in the newspaper branch and $1.50 for the book and job printers of Sandusky, Ohio, has been put into effect.

An increase of $1 per week for foremen and hand compositors and $1.50 per week for machinist-operators has been agreed to in Bartlesville, Okla.

In Fort Dodge, Iowa, a new wage agreement, operative for one year is in effect; the increase being $2 per week all around.

Toronto mailers have been given an increase of $2 a week.

An increase ranging from $2 to $5 per week, graduated over a period of two years, has been granted to compositors by publishers in Freeport, Ill.

In Huron, S. D., a year's contract has been signed by which hand compositors receive an increase of $1 per week and floormen $2.

Printers in Berlin, N. H., have received a wage increase of $2 per week, the contract covering an indefinite period.

NEW A.N.P.A. MEMBERS.

The Flint (Mich.) Daily Journal and the Lynn (Mass.) Telegram have been elected to active membership in the American Newspaper Publishers Association.

The Ridgway (Pa.) Daily Record has been transferred from the associate to the active class.

The Cumberland (Md.) Evening Times has been transferred from the associate to the active class of membership in the A.N.P.A.

The Champaign (Ill.) Daily News has been elected to associate membership.

BARS "OBJECTIONABLE" ADS.

The Oakland (Cal.) Tribune has taken the position of refusing space to advertising that can in any way be objectionable to its readers in the home. In one or two instances the Tribune is under contract for advertising which it is legally bound to carry out, but which will not be renewed.

EDITOR GETS PAGE AD AS BIRTHDAY PRESENT.

More than 15,000 children, parents and friends attended the birthday party of Governor Arthur Capper, proprietor of the Capper Publications, of Topeka Kan., at Garfield Park—the largest attendance that has yet marked one of the nine consecutive anniversary celebrations which Topeka children have learned to "red letter" along with Christmas and the Fourth of July.

A group of Topeka business men took a page ad in the Topeka Capital on July 14 to express their sentiment toward Governor Capper. In part they said:

"We, the undersigned, take this method of extending to you our wishes, your fifty-second birthday anniversary. May your coming years be as rich in opportunities, as fruitful in results, as have been these fifty-two."

ATHLETIC AUTHORITY HAS THE CABINET TRAINING.

Walter Camp, noted writer on sports and football authority, is in charge of the Senior Service Corps of Washington, in which members of the President's Cabinet and many of their assistants are undergoing a course in physical training. The work of Mr. Camp recently was highly praised by Representative John O. Tilson in the House in an address that led many of the Government men to place themselves under his care.

TURNER KEPT BUSY.

PAPER SERIOUS IN ILLINOIS.

STATE PRESS ASSOCIATION FAVORS TRADE BOARD'S CONTROL PLAN.

Military censorship, resolutions commending President Wilson's administration and a heated discussion of the news print situation were a few of the topics occupying the attention of the Illinois Press Association, which held its annual meeting at the Hotel Sherman, Chicago, on July 11-13.

The news print situation still remains serious with members of the association. The price the members now pay ranges from $2.50 to $8 per hundred pounds and the supply is uncertain even at the higher figures. The association passed a resolution urging legislation that will enable the Federal Trade Commission to fix the price of news print.

N. A. Huse, vice-president of the American Press Association, discussed the plan of virtual commandeering of advertising space for popularizing Liberty Bonds, Red Cross work and similar patriotic purposes. He said that such a use of advertising space served to cheapen the business side of the newspaper.

Officers were elected by the association as follows: President, H. V. Bailey, Princeton; first vice-president, S. P. Preston, Gillespie; second vice-president, L. R. Murray, Mazon; third vice-president, J. R. Crowley, Freeport; secretary, H. I. Williams, Springfield; treasurer, H. R. Marshall, Yorkville.

TRAINING NAVY MEN.

Martin A. Delaney, physical director of the Chicago Athletic Club and a special writer for the Chicago American in a department called "Keeping Fit," has been selected to direct the work of physical training at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station at Chicago.

ELKHART CHANGES.

M. M. Frink, assistant city editor, has been made city editor of the Elkhart (Ind.) Truth, succeeding Thomas H. Keene, who becomes editorial manager.

C. C. Conklin, for a number of years circulation manager, has resigned to enter the army. His duties will be taken over by C. B. Danforth, former office manager.

MORE SPACE FOR SMALL ADS.

The classified advertising department of the Chicago Tribune is branching out. A space as large as the present classified office has been taken over and will be added to the department. The remodeling is now taking place and the department will soon have occupancy of its enlarged quarters.

THE ORGANIZATION OF A DAILY NEWSPAPER.

ARTICLE VI.

THE USE OF THE CASH BOOK—ELEVEN DEPARTMENTS OF A NEWSPAPER—WITH THE EXPENSES OF EACH.

BY EDMUND WALKER.

Chicago Herald Building, Chicago.

In this series of short articles on newspaper work Mr. Walker has created a hypothetical company and takes it through all the stages of an organization's financial existence.

Starting with the period of incorporation, he showed the opening of the accounting books. He will take the paper through a period of prosperity and finally make a mistake in financing, necessitating compulsory liquidation.

In the course of the articles he will introduce various phases of accounting, such as methods of handling depreciation, insurance, amortization plans, building funds, profit-sharing systems, etc.

The Cash Book, already described and installed in our parent company, can also be used for the new company we have just taken over, but it will be necessary to compile a suitable Invoice Synoptic, as this was not prepared for our hypothetical company.

The inflexible rule of modern accounting is that no entry be made in any ledger unless recorded first in some book of original entry and "posted" from there to the ledger.

The journal classifies all the different business transactions into debits and credits. In years gone by the custom was to post each item separately, but today this is unnecessary as far as the expense accounts are concerned by the use of a columnar journal one entry is now made where formerly perhaps twenty or thirty were necessary.

Our first thought in compiling this book will be to divide our expenses into departments, and that necessitates the dividing of the entire business into departments.

There are eleven departments to all newspapers. These are:

- Administration,
- Accounting,
- Business office,
- Collection,
- Advertising,
- Circulation and mailing,
- Editorial,
- Press,
- Stereo,
- Hand composition,
- Machine composition.

Our Invoice Synoptic must therefore have eleven distinct groups of columns, each group being devoted to one particular department. As it would be impossible to have a separate column for every account there must be one General Column in each department; but immediately following this column will be a space with horizontal rulings only, so that the name of the account to which this item must be posted may be inscribed.

Reading from left to right the Invoice Synoptic will have the following headings:

- Date,
- Specification,
- Invoice Number,
- Creditors' Ledger (debit, folio, credit),
- Debtors' Ledger (A-M, debit, folio, credit), (N-Z, debit, folio, credit),
- Administration Expense,
- Details—Account, Department Expense,
- Details, Business Office Expense,
- Details, and so on, for each department.

Where there will be a sufficient number of items each month to justify a special column in any departmental group the same can be inserted.

At the close of the month each of these columns will be analyzed and the details of the analysis posted to the General Ledger. The total of the analysis will of course agree with the total of the column analyzed.

What is the routine of the invoice?

As soon as goods are to be ordered, an order form is filled up and signed by the department manager.

The order form is then mailed to the company handling the goods required.

The goods having been delivered, the order form is checked with the invoice and the extensions and additions of the invoice having been agreed the invoice is presented to the party ordering the goods to ascertain if the goods were received in proper condition.

Assuming that no claim is to be made, the invoice is filed "numerically" and entered in the Invoice Synoptic.

Assuming that this invoice was for repair work to a Linotype or an Intertype machine, the entry would be made by crediting the creditor in the Creditors' Ledger and debiting composing room machine department and recording next to the debit item the nature of the charge—in this case "Repairs."

During the month there might be twenty different items for repairs in this department and instead of posting each one individually the grand total would be debited to composing room machine repair account in the General Ledger.

During the month certain fixed charges have to be taken care of, for example, Insurance.

On January 1 insurance was taken out for one year on the entire plant, equipment, and furniture. Each department will have to be debited each month with the expired amount. You will debit each department with its pro rata amount, the calculation being based on the capital investment in each department.

The total of these departmental debits will be credited in one amount in the General Ledger Column and posted to the credit of the Insurance account. The balance on this insurance account at the end of any month will represent the then unexpired value of the insurance policies.

Once invoices are placed on the file in numerical order, you will be careful never to take them off that file, no matter what the excuse.

Payments will be made on the creditors' statements after they have been checked with the ledger record. When entering a credit in the creditors' ledger the item should be recorded in this manner:

January 1, By Invoice No. 172, Folio 55, $405.60.

When entering the check paying for this item the record should appear:

January 15, To Check No. 18779, Folio 42, $405.60.

This allows reference to be made at any time direct from the ledger account to either the original check or the original invoice without turning to the Synoptics at all.

Assuming that the work is done correctly, the total debits in the Invoice Synoptic will equal the total credits.

At the end of the month all columns will be ruled off and posted to the General Ledger just as the Cash Journal was handled.

As the total debits agree with the total credits it follows of necessity that the General Ledger, if correctly posted, will also balance.

I shall be glad to send a sample printed sheet of the Invoice Journal described in this article on request.

Of course, it is understood that the Debtors' and Creditors' Ledgers may be divided up as many times as your business may demand, each section having a Synoptic Account in the general ledger with which it will articulate each and every month.

Next week we will take up the question of introducing an efficient Profit Sharing System into the business.

PAPER FOR ALMSHOUSE.

A news bulletin will hereafter be issued by the Westchester County (N. Y.) Almshouse every succeeding month, beginning in July.

The bulletin will summarize the activities of the almshouse, the new penitentiary, child welfare and the psychiatric departments.

This will supplement the annual report of Commissioner Macy. John R. Shillady, director of department of prevention, will be editor.

OUT OF BUSINESS.

Advancing costs of publication have caused the Covington (Okla.) Record to put up the shutters. The suspended publication was edited by Nat K. Fisk.

THE AD CLUBS' OPPORTUNITY.

EDITOR THE FOURTH ESTATE.

SIR: When war was declared between England and Germany I was located in Canada and my work kept me there during the greater part of the first year of the war. This period enabled me to fully realize the great depth of the love held by the Canadians for their mother country.

The spirit of patriotism was manifested not only from the viewpoint of enlistment but from every viewpoint of business energy calculated to be a help, not only to the "call of the country," but the daily requirements, the living necessities, of those dependent upon the enlisted soldiers.

Newspapers, merchants, manufacturers, bankers and advertising men throughout the entire Dominion gave not only their personal financial aid but their energy to the establishing of the spirit of patriotism that cannot fail. The work was impressive—it left an indelible mental picture.

I believe the work of stimulating "patriotic spirit" can be very materially helped along by the advertising clubs of the United States. Promotion work of large proportions has been successfully carried on by our many advertising clubs, and they are, I am sure, fully equal to the task of successfully promoting this much more imposing and important task, the spirit of patriotism that, in its universal magnitude, is capable of meeting every emergency.

Newspapers, merchants, manufacturers and bankers can all be formed into harmonious concerted working action, each can fill a part, the combined results of which will insure a perfect systematic working organization.

Every advertiser local or national, can afford to devote a small amount of his regular space to help stamp indelibly upon the minds of the people of the United States the great responsibility resting upon them, the great necessity of standing fast together.

No organization is so well adapted to render the promotion work necessary to the universal standardizing of mutual welfare as the advertising clubs of the United States. They represent progress, energy and an intelligent and convincing method of operation most essential to the full development of big undertakings—the full developing of every detail attached to the carrying out of the great demands of war emergencies.

BOOKS USEFUL TO EDITORS AND ADVERTISERS.

"THE DICTIONARY OF GRAMMAR," by James A. Hennessy; Funk & Wagnalls Company, publisher.

This is a vest-pocket hand book with rules, diagrams and helpful hints, aiming to present the essentials of English grammar in a concise, readable form for the use of busy people.

"WIT AND HUMOR FOR PUBLIC SPEAKERS" by Will H. Brown; the Standard Press, publisher.

For the ready and convenient use of all speakers, as well as for those who love good, wholesome humor, has this collection of more than a thousand stories, covering a wide range of subjects, been prepared. In addition to an index of the themes under which the many incidents are grouped, there is a cross reference index as nearly every story is applicable to more than one subject. This volume is just as fresh, original and useful as "Illustrative Incidents for Public Speakers," written by the same author.

"SURNAME," by Ernest Weekly; E. P. Dutton & Co., publishers.

The index contains some 6,000 existing surnames, including a certain proportion of French and German names and a sprinkling from other countries. In the body of the book appear probably almost an equal number of names which are presumably extinct, though as a matter of fact, it is never safe to assume this even in the case of the most fantastic name. This volume is an offshoot of the "Dictionary of English Surnames" by the same author, but it differs in several ways from the former book.

"MOSES IN PARAGRAPHS," by Bert Moses; published by the author.

This is not a religious work, as first glance at its title might indicate. Instead it is to be blamed on Bert Moses, advertising manager of the Omega Chemical Company, New York, whose pithy writings are familiar to practically every newspaper and advertising person. The book is composed entirely of paragraphic comments on life, business and their problems, the philosophy serving to throw a cheerful light on many things that people are worrying their heads about. Every newspaper and advertising worker particularly should have this book.

"THE AMERICAN YEAR BOOK," by Francis G. Wickware; D. Appleton & Co., publishers.

This annual publication, now in its seventh edition, follows the lines of the 1915 issue, with the organization of departments changed only slightly and the scope as defined in the first issue. It is intended for the needs of writers and searchers of every kind.

"MONEY CHANGING," by Hartley Withers; E. P. Dutton & Co., publishers.

This is a book on foreign exchange, based on the experience of the president of the Institute of Bankers and others. It is divided into chapters such as: Money at home and abroad; rates of exchange; trade and services; international payments; commercial bills; finance bills; discount and exchange; bullion and exchange, etc.

"SELLING LATIN-AMERICAN" by W. E. Aughinbaugh; Small, Maynard & Co., publishers. A careful reading of this book is not a difficult matter—for unlike most books on commerce, it is full of

NEXT WEEK!

THE FOURTH ESTATE will on July 28th publish a special section to comprise complete lists of the Special Daily Newspaper Representatives in New York, Chicago, Detroit, Boston, Philadelphia, St. Louis, San Francisco and other cities, and a complete list of newspapers of the country having representatives, with the names of those representatives against each, both East and West. It will be up to the minute and as complete and comprehensive as the large organization and exceptional facilities of THE FOURTH ESTATE can make it.

This New Special Representatives National Directory will be thoroughly national in its character and in its scope, and will be a genuine Space Buyer's Manual of daily usefulness to national advertisers, advertising agents and agencies, supplying information nowhere else obtainable in one publication.

lively interest—and it will be profitable to every business man interested in the subject of Latin-America. It will valuable to those who are equipped or willing to prepare themselves to cope with conditions as they really are, and just as valuable to those who are not for it may save them from costly mistakes in experimentation in foreign fields. The book tells what to sell and how to sell it.

"VIA PACIS" by Harold F. McCormick; A. C. McClurg Company, publisher.

The author outlines a plan of how he believes peace can be automatically prepared while the war is going on. The suggestion is to have the belligerents enunciate and place their peace terms in precise and concrete form in the hands of selected neutral countries, to be changed periodically in accordance with the varying fortunes of the war, the resulting benefit being that each side could know at a given moment precisely what the other was demanding and could examine his own assets, chances and hopes accordingly. In other words there would be obtained the quotation of the "cash value" of ultimate peace terms. It is contended that this would result in: Minimum duration of the war with maximum useful effort, thus avoiding all the superfluous loss of human life and economic waste.

"EAT AND GROW FAT," by R. Johnson; the Sherwood Company, publisher.

This book is designed to be a handy and efficient guide to the most approved methods of restoring flesh, including menus potent and palatable.

"OPERATIVE OWNERSHIP," by James J. Finn; Langdon & Co., publishers.

The author's idea is to enforce a just division between capital and labor of the wealth which they jointly produce. He purposes to enable industrial tool-users to become, wholly or partly, tool-owners, thereby effecting a more general diffusion of wealth among the people.

"THE VEGETARIAN," by Harry Leslie Stroupe; published by the author.

The desire of the author is to help people secure good health by living according to nature's laws, and help to preserve the higher standard of health, strength and energy. "The whole secret of good health, the author says," is to not make a graveyard out of your stomach (partaking of flesh); learn to control your appetite by leaving the table with a pleasant rather than a distressed feeling.

"HOW TO GET AHEAD" by Albert W. Atwood; Bobbs-Merrill Company, publisher.

The object of this book is to help young men and women of moderate earning capacity to save and invest money—incidentally showing the advantages of thrift. The book tells how in various ways.

"THE DRAGON AND THE JUGGERNAUT OF SPECULATION," by James Hamilton Howe; the Dragon Publishing Company, publisher.

The lessons of this work are exemplified by the author in gambling in prices of our food products. The book is written especially for the education and protection of young men and women about to enter the business or the professional world, and as a warning to produce growers and provision packers. Tricks of the manipulator are exposed and it is explained how speculators are also buncoed and fleeced.

"PRINCIPLES OF MONEY AND BANKING," by Harold G. Moulton; University of Chicago Press, publisher.

In this volume there are assembled several hundred short, carefully condensed and edited selections bearing on the problems in hand. Not only by means of careful arrangement of the material selected, but by the explanatory introductions, the author has linked together the various sections and has supplied the necessary thread of continuity to the subject as a whole. This method has the advantage of combining in one volume the virtues of the usual text and the collateral book of reading, thus giving a vitality to the subject-matter not afforded by the ordinary text and a richness of content that cannot be attained by any single writer.

"THE BOOKLOVER AND HIS BOOKS," by H. L. Koopman; Boston Book Company, publisher.

The author is the librarian of Brown University and gives an intimate and practical presentation of his subject—under such chapters as: Fitness in book design; print as an interpreter of meaning; favorite book book sizes; value of reading; books of today and tomorrow; book criticism; as a librarian would have books; the book beautiful, etc.

"LIFE SINGS A SONG," by Samuel Hoffenstein; Wilmarth Publishing Company, publisher.

This is a collection of some of the best poetry that has been written or published in recent years.

"CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED NATIONS OF THE EARTH," by Edgar D. Brinkerhoff; Pamphlet Publishing Company, publisher.

This "Constitution has been regarded by some people as a mere copy of the Constitution of the United States of America; others have criticized it for its deviations from the American model; and still others have seen in the document an attempt to mould the entire world into one nation. In the hope of inducing a more careful reading the author has prepared this preface.

"IN CANADA'S WONDERFUL NORTHLAND," by W. Teas Curran and H. A. Calkins; G. P. Putnam's Sons, publishers.

This is a story of eight months of travel by canoe, motorboat, and dog team on the northern rivers and along the New Quebec coast of Hudson Bay. It has sixty maps and illustrations.

LOUIS WILEY ON CENSORSHIP.

THE NEWSPAPERS CAN BE TRUSTED TO WATCH INTERESTS OF NATION.

Before the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce on July 19, Louis Wiley, business manager of the New York Times, gave an excellent address on censorship. He declared that recent events justify the assumption that the Government has decided to abandon any attempt to censor the American press, but will put into effect immediately a rigid censorship of cables, wireless messages, and telegrams as the most effective way to prevent information from reaching the enemy. Such a censorship should prevent the enemy from reaping much advantage from his elaborate spy system.

"Newspapers are engines of publicity," declared Mr. Wiley. "Their widespread circulation gives them so prominent a public position that almost invariably when there is trouble somebody makes targets of them."

"In times of public excitement the newspapers stand high above everything else as disseminators of information to an anxious people."

"So many poorly informed officials and narrow-minded persons overlook or belittle the peril in the quiet, underground channels through which designing persons pass along important information."

"Established means of communication, ordinarily regarded as private, are always used by an enemy for the transmission of secret messages—the mails, not only to countries across the sea, but to those south of the United States; the telegraph, the wireless, cables—are a surer and quicker means of communication than the newspapers."

"Serious results are sure to follow any effort to suspend the constitutional guarantee of a free press and of free speech. The liberty of the press within existing laws governing treason is the nation's greatest asset, and never so much as at a time like this, when it stands as the one great security of the people."

"Soon after the declaration of war a voluntary censorship on the part of the newspapers was suggested by the Government. This suggestion has been wholeheartedly accepted and observed by the newspapers of the United States. No loyal newspaper has or will print that which will give aid to the enemy."

"With every newspaper office teeming with news the publication of which would greatly increase circulation, editors have refrained from giving out the least detail which might have been useful to the enemy."

"Newspapers of the United States in an intimate and yet broad sense, represent the people. As far as the people are patriotic, the newspapers will be found patriotic."

"The greater the peril the more care will be exercised in the publication of news and stricter will be the voluntary censorship."

So long as the standard of education and intelligence in the United States remains on its present high plane so long will an official censorship be unnecessary and uncalled for.

"There are laws on the statute books against treason. Newspapers have been suspended under these laws, and any newspaper today that willfully publishes information of military value to the enemy can and should be prosecuted."

"If statesmen would but consider that 'truth crushed to earth will rise again' and confound them, that an enraged populace, deprived of knowledge which is their right, will demand satisfaction, aye and take it, from those who have blinded them and hoodwinked them, they would hesitate before committing themselves to a policy unworthy of the Dark Ages—of ages before the dawn of liberty shed its radiance on humanity."

Regarding German printed papers, Mr. Wiley said:

"If there is disloyalty, the laws against treason, should be promptly invoked. Perhaps parallel columns in the English language should be required by law, especially in time of war."

BARBOUR IN BANKING.

P. T. Barbour, formerly with the New York Tribune and the Chicago Tribune, has been appointed manager of the new New York office of Olin Finney & Co., Inc., Philadelphia, handling the Finney System of Automobile Banking.

ARCHITECTURE SOLD.

The publishers of Scribner's Magazine have purchased Architecture, which they will continue.

WEDDING BELLS.

Glenn S. Williamson, mechanical superintendent of the New York World, and Miss Pauline Charlotte Rothel, have just announced their marriage, which took place on May 17.

Cecil Chesterton, editor of the New Witness, a London (England) weekly, and Alice M. Jones, a novelist and journalist, were recently married in London. Mr. Chesterton is now in the British army. His wife's pen name is "John K. Prothero."

Robert W. Veitsch, business manager of the Pottsville (Pa.) Journal, and Viola Wilson Carnes of Mount Carmel have been married.

Einer Graff, a reporter on the Chicago Herald, and Miss Louise Lindner of Chicago were married on July 10. Mr. Graff was sent to interview Colonel E. H. R. Green, son of the late Hetty Green, regarding rumors of the capitalist's marriage and was able to secure the story by confessing to Colonel Green that he, too, was about to be married.

Carl F. Reidmiller, foreman of the engraving department of the Dayton (Ohio) Journal, was married recently to Miss Minnie A. Dean of Dayton.

Albert Berlin, formerly of the Bonner Springs (Kan.) Chieftain and now managing editor of a paper at Melstone, Mont., and Miss Ada May Clayton were married recently.

Russell Phelps, of the Omaha Bee editorial staff, and Miss Mae Morrison of Council Bluffs were recently married.

STOCK SALE IN LINCOLN.

The stock of the late Amos H. Mendenhall in the Lincoln (Neb.) State Journal has been purchased by the other three owners of the paper—C. D. Traphagen, J. C. Seacrest and the Estate of C. H. Gere.

OWNER TAKES CHARGE.

Lee Maynard, formerly of Sioux City, has purchased an interest in the LeMars (Ia.) Globe-Post and will have active charge of the business and editorial departments.

AN ILLINOIS DEAL.

Paul A. Atz has sold the Elizabeth (Ill.) News to Louis E. Egle and Frank I. Foster of Titonka, Ia.

BRUCE HALDEMAN WINS CASE.

COURT ENJOINS RELATIVES AND EDITOR WATTERSON FROM OUSTING HIM.

An injunction was granted in Louisville on July 14 in the Chancery Court to Bruce Haldeman, president of the Louisville Courier-Journal and Louisville Times Companies, restraining W. B. Haldeman, Isabel Haldeman and Bennett H. Young, directors of the corporation, from taking steps to remove him from his post as business manager of the two papers.

Henry Watterson, editor, who appealed in the case as an intervening petitioner on the side of the defendants, denied acquiescence in an agreement entered into by members of the Haldeman family vesting management of the two papers in Bruce Haldeman as president and business manager, and assigning to W. B. Haldeman the place as vice-president or as director.

Colonel Watterson contended the agreement prejudiced his interests as holder of seventy-five shares in the corporation. The court denied his claim and said doubt existed that he had not acquiesced in the agreement, adding its conviction that Colonel Watterson in the pressure of business had forgotten all about it.

The legality of the agreement was upheld.

The defendants announced that they would ask the Court of Appeals to dissolve the injunction.

TENNESSEE'S RESOURCES.

A special number devoted to "Middle Tennessee and Its Resources," just issued by the Nashville Tennessean and American, sets forth the many advantages of the territory and its many industries.

Writing to THE FOURTH ESTATE, J. H. Allison, manager of the newspaper, says: "The Creator has been lavish in the advantages He has bestowed upon us, and you can be sure with the extraordinary demand for raw materials and agricultural products we are prospering now as never before."

NEW KANSAS MANAGER.

THE A.N.P.A. STANDS FOR NO EXTRA NEWSPAPER TAX.

Some publishers have the mistaken idea that in passing resolutions favoring the zone rates on second class mail or otherwise compromising the war tax on newspapers, they are working in harmony with the American Newspaper Publishers Association.

This is an error that needs immediate correction.

The A.N.P.A. is unalterably opposed to the levying of any tax on newspapers that is not placed on all other industries, as is shown by the resolution it passed at its recent meeting in Washington. It follows:

"The American Newspaper Publishers Association in meeting June 21 earnestly and emphatically protests against a special discriminating war tax in any form levied upon the newspaper business.

"The business is not a war industry. It is at this time bearing a very onerous and special burden of expense due entirely to the war and it is making no profits directly or indirectly out of war.

"On the contrary the government itself is relying upon the newspapers as shown in the organization of publicity in connection with the recent National Registration Law, the Liberty Loan and the Red Cross Fund for that cordial and unreserved cooperation without which the issue of the war loan and the national military registration could not have been successfully achieved.

"Such cooperation with the government the newspaper reader always cheerfully and promptly and at their own expense, and they expect and desire in addition to bear their just share of taxation.

"The newspapers recognize the need of special war taxes and they will pay any rate of taxes that Congress finds it necessary to impose upon all other legitimate and necessary businesses.

"As for the postal rates, they have been based for generations upon a public policy that the diffusion of knowledge and information in newspapers and periodicals is necessary to the unity and welfare of the nation and, therefore, ought to be encouraged by moderate postage rates. If this policy is now after more than half a century to be reversed it should be done only after full consideration and investigation; it should be done only in the public interest and not in the guise of a war tax upon a business which is neither a war profiteer, a luxury or one properly subject to punitive taxation."

The misunderstanding is undoubtedly due to the publicity that has been given to expressions of opinions by certain prominent individual members of the A.N.P.A.

Unfortunately THE FOURTH ESTATE aided this wrong impression in saying last week that the action of the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association, asking for zone rates on second class, was in accordance with the stand of the A.N.P.A.

The A.N.P.A. still stands by its resolution. This should be clearly understood by associations desiring to work in harmony with that organization.

CHICAGO DAILY NEWS FARM LABOR RECRUITING.

An illustration of what one newspaper can do to help the nation in a great crisis is revealed in a report of the Chicago Daily News Farm Labor Recruiting Station.

Last April, when the price of foods was soaring and a cry was sent up for greater production, the Daily News established its farm labor recruiting station to send men in the cities back to the soil.

From April 23 to June 30, inclusive, 11,213 persons, men, women and children, found places on farms through the Daily News. So far as can be learned this mark has never been reached in any similar emergency activity in the history of the country.

A great majority of the 11,213 persons enlisted are men of farm experience, most of them past the age for the military draft. Most of them were reared on farms and know the work thoroughly. They had been drawn to the city by its attractions of various kinds, but now with the double desire to get back to the farms and to serve their country, they are of double value in the national crisis.

According to the best information at least 90 per cent of the applicants have been placed in positions in thirty-three different states, and letters received from employers on both large and small farms indicate that they are giving almost universal satisfaction.

Hundreds have been sent to Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin and Michigan farms. Other hundreds have been sent to the Dakotas, Nebraska, Montana and Wyoming. Hundreds of boys have been sent out to work in the truck garden districts of Michigan. Many women have been given places in the country.

But the thing that experts rate above all is the large number of men with families, eager to get a start on a farm, who have been placed in good paying positions, on large farms, with opportunities of supporting their families and still getting ahead. About 1,000 such families have been placed, with scarcely a single complaint from employer or worker.

People numbering 2,612 have been referred to positions in Illinois, 961 in Michigan, 594 in Minnesota, 553 in North Dakota, and 376 in Montana.

Men have been sent to positions from New York to California.

The system used in cooperating with farm papers, state defense councils, United States agencies, state employment bureaus and private concerns in finding positions for men has resulted in such a flood of offers of good jobs that the office can scarcely begin to fill them. Aside from 42,000 harvest positions open, hundreds of permanent jobs are awaiting men to come and fill them.

Recruits for the agricultural army are still coming in at the rate of over 100 a day.

The men are of high grade and their farm labor will show results next winter in the fight against food shortage.

RIGHTS TO PEN NAMES.

The suit over the pen name "Girard" won by Herman L. Collins from the Philadelphia Ledger, is one involving important principles in similar relations between many other writers and publishers of newspapers. The litigation was caused by the Ledger continuing to run the "Girard" column, founded by the plaintiff, after he had left the paper.

The findings of Judge Barratt are worth while studying. "The articles," explains Judge Barratt, were signed; as unsigned editorials are the views of the newspaper and not those of an individual, and this was to be an individual column.

"The articles so written by the plaintiff and signed 'Girard' were favorably received by the public, and plaintiff maintained and increased interest in them. It became known to the public and many readers that these articles were contributed by the plaintiff and the name 'Girard' was associated in the public mind with articles written by the plaintiff.

"The proofs show the existence of two 'Girards.' 'Girard' of the Evening Telegraph and 'Girard' of the Public Ledger, and plaintiff's allegation is that he is the genuine 'Girard,' and that his pseudonym should be protected."

As a rule, the object of a pseudonym is to conceal the identity of the writer but here the defendant made no secret of the identity of the plaintiff as 'Girard' as it not only introduced him as Mr. 'Girard,' but advertised him widely under the signature of Cyrus H. K. Curtis, the owner of the Public Ledger, as one of the best men and brains of defendant's newspaper, including William C. Bullitt and Lincoln Colcord, but the portrait of plaintiff is the top one, and opposite it Mr. Curtis says:

"Girard' of the Public Ledger's editorial page. His 'Topics of the Town' is the most distinctive 'column' of its kind in American journalism today."

"Plaintiff's portrait also appears in another publication offered in evidence, and underneath it is the inscription:

"This is Herman L. Collins of the Public Ledger, better known, perhaps, as 'Girard'."

"So plaintiff's contention that the name 'Girard' meant Herman L. Collins as a contributor and editor to newspapers and other publications seemed fully sustained by the proofs, which show the name was identified with the person of Collins by defendant.

"The important question here is, was the name 'Girard' a personal pseudonym of the author and his property, or was it simply the name for a column or department of defendant's newspaper?

"If it was his pseudonym, plaintiff is entitled to relief; if it was not, but 'Girard' was the name of the department—a thing and not a person—this application must be denied.

"Upon the facts found by the court is plaintiff under the law entitled to an injunction?

"The general rule is well stated in the Mark Twain case, as follows: 'Undoubtedly an author has the right to restrain the publication of any of his literary work which he never has published or given to the public—so, too, an author of acquired reputation and perhaps a person who has not obtained any standing before the public as a writer, may restrain another from the publication of literary matter purporting to have been written by him, but which in fact, was never so written.'"

Writers and newspapers should carefully consider this point of law on entering contracts covering similar cases.

Providing for it may save them needless loss in time, expense and money in litigation.

NOTE AND COMMENT.

Manufacturers of cakes and crackers could double their business all over the country if instead of advertising a single brand they pointed out merits of the wares from the standpoints that appeal most to the consumer—"convenience, economy, food value."

So thinks J. E. Schumaker of Philadelphia. He advised cooperative advertising at the convention of the Biscuit and Cracker Manufacturers' Association in Chicago.

Newspaper interviewers frequently send letters of request to the person to be interviewed asking for an appointment and indicating the character of the information they are seeking.

In replying to such a request, Lord Northcliffe said: "I am very sorry, but I must ask you to excuse me from acceding to your request. I am like the little boy at the school treat, who, when the squire's wife came around and asked him if he would like some strawberry jam, promptly replied, 'No, thank you, Marm. I works at a place where they make it.'"

Charles F. Miller of the Hamilton Watch Company, Lancaster, Pa., says:

"I am glad to say that our business is very satisfactory, and we are oversold on our daily product; but inasmuch as our advertising has always been in the nature of business insurance for the future we plan to keep it up."

F. L. Hillman, advertising manager for the Jones Store, Kansas City, in a recent address before the classes in advertising and journalism at the University of Kansas said:

"The daily newspaper is the only safe medium. I do not say that because my company is a heavy user of the daily press, but because about 85 per cent of the money spent by successful retail stores is put into the daily papers."

Following the action of the New York State Allied Printing Trades Council in adopting resolutions vigorously opposing any form of war taxation on the public press that might tend to curtail its effectiveness, it has been clearly indicated in the last few days that other printing organizations with union affiliations are contemplating similar action. The New York resolution was presented at the Syracuse convention of that body, which was held last week. The resolution approved just taxation, which would leave the press free in its war attitude.

Newspaper usefulness is not ended nowadays with mere reading. Copies of newspapers are being used by Kansas City war relief workers as material for bed pads for war hospitals. Copies of the New York Sun, Times, Post and Tribune are said to be the right size and bulk for this work and are being extensively used.

The Cleveland Plain Dealer lays claim to record ability for holding its subscribers. Its claim is based upon the fact that Mrs. John Christy of Akron has been a steady subscriber for the Plain Dealer for sixty-seven years. More than that, she has kept a file of the paper throughout the years.

Pete H. McKechnie, editor of the Pawnee Rock (Kan.) Herald, waxes ironic following receipt of a complaint against the matter appearing in the Herald. Says Mr. McKechnie:

"If this newspaper should some day print the contents of its waste basket there would probably be a riot. There would certainly be trouble in many homes, arrests in many directions, shotguns in another and trouble all around. But the patron never sees the waste basket, he only glances at the beautifully printed page and complains if one letter is upside down, grows if one name happens to be wrong and kicks because his communication signed 'Taxpayer' has been condensed into respectable English."

"He knows his share in the waste basket, but if he could look at the contributions to that receptacle he would be thankful for the existence of a man with intelligence and courage enough not to print all he knows and to temper that which he does print."

The Los Angeles Examiner claims the classified record for the week because one of its advertisements—two lines in the classified columns—sold a million objects. The million objects were the inhabitants of eleven hives of bees, which were transferred as a result of the advertising.

The Zanesville (Ohio) Times-Recorder also lays claim to want-ad honors on the strength of a single day's results. On that day the Times-Recorder, through its classified columns, located a pet cat, sold a baby carriage and disposed of a Ford car.

The smallest newspaper printed, from the standpoint of circulation, is a new one—the Daily Idea Exchange, which circulates among the managers of the twelve Federal land banks. Herbert Quick is the managing editor and the paper is intended to make possible an interchange of banking ideas among the managers.

VACATION NOTES.

Lincoln McMillan, assistant managing editor of the Chicago Herald, is touring the West on his vacation. Harry Lytle of the Herald reporting staff is also on vacation.

William N. Callender, Eastern national advertising manager of the New York Evening Journal, is spending his vacation at Westport, N. Y.

Robert B. McClean, business manager of the New York Evening Post, is at Fayetteville, Pa., until the first of August.

J. P. Madison, a special news correspondent at Richmond, is spending his vacation at Charlie Hope, Va., his native town. Incidentally he is recovering from a severely sprained ankle, sustained when he took a tumble from a bicycle in avoiding a collision with an automobile.

PURELY PERSONAL.

Henry J. Allen, editor of the Wichita (Kan.) Beacon, has declared he will be a candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor of Kansas in 1918.

Ben T. Baker, editor of the Smith Center (Kan.) Journal, is recovering from an operation.

George E. M. Stengle, a member of the news staff of the Wilmington (Del.) Morning News, fell from a ladder at his home in Wilmington, a few days ago, and injured himself badly. He is now able to be about again.

John Mahoney is the hustling publicity representative of the Red Cross propaganda in Boston.

T. Percy Harrison of Boston is still at Machias with the Naval Reserve and has been promoted to a lieutenancy.

Dr. Isaac M. Agard, president of Tillotson College at Austin, Tex., and editor of the Tillotson Tidings, is passing his vacation at his summer home at Amherst, Mass.

Walter R. Agard, formerly editor-in-chief of the Amherst (Mass.) College Monthly and for the past year instructor in Greek at that institution, is engaged in the building of ships at Camden, Me. Later he plans a post graduate course in English at the University of Chicago.

Eugene Clerkin, sporting editor of the New Britain (Conn.) Herald, was official starter and otherwise in charge of a program of sports recently held in that city.

Victor Hutcheson of the Portsmouth (Va.) Star was recently elected high constable by the Portsmouth city council. He will continue his connection with the Star.

Major and Mrs. Edward J. Gallagher of Concord, N. H., have returned home from a two weeks' visit with Mrs. Gallagher's parents in Logansport, Ind. The Major is editor and publisher of the Concord Patriot. During his absence the Patriot's editorial page was in charge of George H. Sargent of the Boston Transcript.

Ewing Herbert, editor of the St. Joseph (Mo.) Stockyards Journal, is being mentioned as a nominee for the Republican nomination for mayor of St. Joseph.

Herbert Morton Sloops of the Chicago Tribune art staff has supplied the illustrations for "The Cruise of the Dry Dock," a book written by T. S. Stribling of Illinois and published by Reilly & Britton.

Miss Marguerite Drennen of Martins Ferry, Ohio, leaves for France soon to write of the war. She has been a student at the Pulitzer School of Journalism, Columbia University.

Frank E. Wiley, editor of the Suffern (N. Y.) Independent, has been elected president of the Hudson Valley Volunteer Firemen's Association.

BOOM FOR HEMENWAY.

Because of his record as one of the few Democratic Senators in the last state legislative session, admirers have inaugurated a boom to bring higher political honors to Managing Editor C. C. Hemenway of the Hartford (Conn.) Post at the next election. It is reported the launching of the boom is to be made soon.

WILL WRITE HUMOR SOLELY.

George Bingham, known as "Dunk Batts," of Hogwallow fame, has disposed of his interest in the Mayfield (Ky.) Twice-a-Week Times to his partner, E. A. Johnston, and will devote his time to writing "Hogwallow" syndicated matter besides being a regular contributor to Judge.

Miss Ione Fales, formerly with the Lewiston (Me.) Evening Journal, is now with the Springfield (Mass.) Union. Miss Fales specialty is side-lights and she will continue this work to a large extent with the Union.

L. Emmett Baldwin, formerly with Queen's Work, a monthly, has succeeded William H. Maas in the advertising department of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. Mr. Maas has become advertising manager of the new Patience Worth Magazine, St. Louis.

W. R. Sinclair, formerly of St. Louis, is now night editor of the Houston (Tex.) Post. W. E. Green, assistant telegraph editor in charge of state news, is now Houston correspondent for the Galveston News.

Culver Sherrill, who recently left the Bakersfield Californian to become editor of the National Recruiter, has been succeeded by Frederick Tredway of Bakersfield, who has had four years' experience on the Californian editorial staff. Mr. Tredway took up his duties on returning from the University of California, where he has studied for two years.

Erle Heath, reporter for the Bakersfield Californian, has just enlisted in the Navy and his place is taken by Willis Grandy, a lively local boy, who is just beginning newspaper work.

M. D. Myers, former head of the New Britain (Conn.) Herald's proof desk, has been added to the city staff to fill the vacancy due to the enlistment of Irving E. Ellis in the coast patrol.

Winder Harris, telegraph and city editor of the Newport News (Va.) Times Herald for the past three years, is now city editor of the Norfolk Virginian Pilot.

Charles McDevitt of Kinston, N. C., has joined the staff of the Norfolk (Va.) Virginian Pilot.

Douglas Gordon, former dramatic critic of the Times-Dispatch Richmond, has been made editorial writer of the Norfolk (Va.) Ledger-Dispatch.

J. B. Sproule has succeeded W. A. Glass as an advertising solicitor on the Anaconda (Mont.) Standard.

H. Sherman Mitchell is with the Anchorage (Alaska) Daily Times for the summer. He expects to return to the University of Washington in the fall and resume his senior year studies.

Clarence James Briant, formerly with the Metro Pictures Corporation, has become motion picture editor of the New Orleans Item, succeeding Gaston J. Dureau, who has become booking manager of the Saenger Amusement Company New Orleans.

Curtis M. Bell, who has been Associated Press telegrapher in the office of the Council Bluffs (Ia.) Nonpareil, has resigned.

Harvey Evans, a reporter for the Joplin (Mo.) News Herald, has resigned.

Frank Smay, who has been connected editorially with the Bolivar (Mo.) Herald, has resigned.

Miss Mildred N. Bennett is now doing news and features for the Pittsfield (Mass.) News, having given up her position on the Showhegan (Me.) Independent-Reporter. She was formerly on the Portland (Me.) Argus and the Telegraph.

Archie Van Horn, former associate editor of the Cavalryman, a military publication issued along the Texas border last summer, is a new member of the Chicago Tribune reporting staff. W. H. Anderson is also a late addition to the Tribune list of reporters.

BUELL OF LUNA PARK

The current season, his second as publicity director at Luna Park, Coney Island, N. Y., finds Frank T. Buell—young, capable and very well liked—rendering exceptional service.

Mr. Buell has confined his publicity and advertising efforts to the theatrical and amusement field almost exclusively.

Born in Hornell, N. Y., he received some little newspaper experience while serving as a "cub" on various newspapers "upstate." However, ambition soon pointed New Yorkward and thither Mr. Buell journeyed. He became associated with the Henry W. Savage forces in a minor capacity, gradually pushing his way into the ranks of recognized press agents.

His next association was with the Werba & Luescher enterprises; piloting "The Spring Maid" Company, of which Mitai Hajos was the "star," on a Western Coast tour to a height of success from a financial standpoint seldom attained by a musical production in that particular territory.

The following season, Werba & Luescher, appreciating Mr. Buell's efforts, contracted for a coast tour of "The Rose Maid" and he was immediately re-engaged and again succeeded in paving the way for the registration of another "hit" in the Western cities. Again his managers took notice and he was appointed manager of Christie MacDonald's "Sweethearts" Company, in which capacity he served for two seasons.

The dissolution of the Werba & Luescher partnership found Buell associated with the Perry J. Kelly attractions as general manager, which position he has just resigned. For the coming season Mr. Buell has contracted to serve again under the Henry W. Savage banner.

Ernest Wolden, a reporter on a Cleveland (Ohio) German daily, was arrested July 7 as an alien enemy. The arrest followed instructions from the Department of Justice at Washington.

HANDLING BULKY NEWSPAPERS.

PRINTING IN SECTIONS SO 2, 3 OR 4 OF A FAMILY CAN READ AT ONE TIME.

By JOSEPH F. BARRY,
Circulation Manager, Providence
Journal and the Evening Bulletin.

The Providence Evening Bulletin is one of the largest, if not the largest, daily newspapers in North America. We averaged twenty-six pages per issue for the year 1916. Of course, this bulk is caused by the very large volume of advertising carried by the Bulletin.

The wonderful news value of advertising has come to be fully appreciated in recent years. But its greatest value in my opinion is in getting the paper into the homes. If you select a list of papers which carry the largest volume of advertising you will find that they are real home newspapers.

In the average household I have found that the man reads the news, while his wife and daughters read the ads.

If the wife sees any ad which she thinks will interest her lord and master she points it out to him. In this way the paper is read thoroughly.

As we print our papers in sections it is possible for two, three or four members of the family to read it at the same time. This has helped considerably in making the Providence Journal and the Evening Bulletin the extraordinary advertising media which they are today.

The public likes good value for its money and I find that it likes a bulky paper. It has an air of prosperity about it which is irresistible.

About a year ago we requested all our independent carriers to turn in to us lists showing names and addresses of the customers whom they supplied at their homes. To date we have on file over 50,000 names and addresses of readers. These lists are very valuable to us as they enable us to canvass those sections where we are weak.

As our wholesale rates to carriers are less than those to dealers and as lists of readers have to be on file with us in order to get the benefit of the carriers' rate, we do not experience any great difficulty in getting in the lists.

Advertising helps us to get into the home and getting into the homes helps us to get advertising, so it is apparent that if a publisher turns out a paper which can command the home circulation, the advertising and "so facto" the bulk will come his way and in turn help him to get more home circulation.

Making the deliveries of a bulky newspaper is by no means an easy job, particularly in these war days when boys are getting as scarce as hyphenated-Americans.

We frequently run as high as 40 pages of the Bulletin and in order to complete our deliveries on time we run half the paper in the form of a supplement, starting at noon we get all the supplements delivered by 2:30 p. m., when we get the main section of the first edition. A separate delivery is then made to the news-dealers of this section, so it is necessary to make two deliveries whenever we have a supplement.

During the past year the high cost of paper has compelled publishers to concentrate the news into the smallest possible space, and this has been accomplished without detracting in any way from the value of the newspapers. On the contrary this policy has tended to make the average paper more readable. No matter to what low figure news print should sink in the future it will never be handled so prodigally as in the old days—in fact we might say the "good" old days—when news print manufacturers stumbled over each other in their efforts to sell their products at 2 cents a pound.

Many publishers have made sweeping cuts in the size of their Sunday issues, for which the long-suffering public should be extremely grateful, as most Sunday papers were becoming so unreasonably large and unwieldy that it was necessary to employ grown men with trucks to deliver them from house to house.

If good judgment is used in cutting the size of a paper by boiling down the news, there is no reason why the circulation should suffer in any way.

NEWS NOTES OF CIRCULATORS.

The Pittsburg Press recently gave a theater party to the Boy Scouts of Pittsburg. The attraction was the motion picture "The Little Boy Scout."

The Joplin (Mo.) News Herald is holding a subscription contest with four automobiles as the chief prizes.

James Hamilton, a seventeen-year-old carrier for the Omaha Bee, has successfully passed the entrance examinations to Annapolis Naval Academy and will report for the beginning of his studies soon.

The Central Point (Ore.) Herald is conducting an unusual campaign for new subscribers. It is running two inch advertising copy in some of the Chicago dailies urging Chicagoans to subscribe on the ground that the West will be the only remaining ground of adventure after the war ends and that the Herald is making special plans to picture the romantic life of the West in the future.

A party of lady prize winners in the Memphis News-Scimitar's "Travel Club" will arrive in New York City on July 30, where they will be the guests of the Winter Garden, Palace Theater, Luna Park, Steeplechase Park and Palisades Park. The party will be in charge of Joseph Lackey, circulation manager of the News-Scimitar. Other points to be visited on the tour will be Chicago, Buffalo, Niagara Falls, Washington and Norfolk.

MORE WEEKLY PAPERS WILL GO TO $1.50.

The weekly papers of the Bay of Quinte District, Ontario, will sell at $1.50 a year beginning September 1. Their publishers so voted at the annual meeting just held in Belleville.

The Bay of Quinte Press Association elected the following officers: Honorary president, Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell; president, A. E. Calnan, Picton Gazette; vice-president, C. G. Young, Trenton Courier; secretary-treasurer, O. Herity, Belleville Daily Ontario; executive committee, E. J. Pollard, Napanee Express; O. M. Alger, Tweed News; E. S. Bennett, Stirling Leader.

A. R. Alloway, assistant manager of the Canadian Press Association, made an address on increasing the price of weekly newspapers that led to the passage of a resolution to take the step.

The next meeting will be in Picton. In the absence of President Pollard, Vice-President Calnan presided at the meeting.

THE NEWHALLS ARE GOING.

Robert Newhall, sporting editor of the Cincinnati Commercial Tribune, has enlisted in the American Ambulance section and expects to sail for France the first of August. Mrs. Newhall, eager to be by his side at the front, is leaving for St. Louis to take a short course in Red Cross nursing, when she will also be sent to do Red Cross duties at the front.

PRINTING DRAFT LISTS.

PAPERS IN SEVERAL CITIES PRINT COMPLETE ROLLS OF REGISTRATION.

The Atlanta Journal has pulled off one of the most ambitious newspaper stunts since the war began—that of printing the names and serial numbers of the 25,000 men registered in the city of Atlanta proper and the county of Fulton outside the city of Atlanta.

Bearing in mind the request of the government that these names be given the widest possible publicity, and realizing the keen interest every registered man felt in finding out his serial number, the Journal secured the complete lists of names as soon as they were finished by the seven exemption boards in the city and county.

The names were printed in three installments, one or two division lists not being ready when the Journal sprang the first list.

On Wednesday of the week 3,000 names were printed in the regular news columns of the paper; on Thursday 19,000 names were printed in a 14-page supplement to the regular edition; and on Friday the final installment of 3,000 names was carried in the news section.

The serial number of each man and his full name and address, as given on the lists, were paragraphed separately.

Although a big battery of Linotype machines, operated day and night for two days and nights, was required to set the names, the Journal carried its average quota of news and advertising on all three days. The popularity of the feature was evidenced by the fact that the supply of home editions was exhausted on all three days.

The Atlanta Constitution also performed a similar patriotic service by borrowing Journal matrices, in addition to names set by its own Linotypers, and running these on the days following the Journal's publication of lists.

In order to give the people of Wilmington, Del., the fullest information concerning the military registration in that city, the Every Evening last Saturday printed a complete list of the city registration, being the only paper to do so.

It contained all of the 13,000 names, with the serial number opposite each. Ten pages of the paper were required to give the information, it being printed in eight-point, so as to make a clear showing that could be read by everybody.

There are four registration divisions in the city, comprising the 117 election precincts in which the registration was made, and the list was printed by divisions.

FOSTER WINS HONORS.

Captain W. Garland Foster, who prior to enlistment was editor and manager of the Nelson (B. C.) Daily News, has been mentioned in dispatches by General Sir Douglas Haig for meritorious work on the battlefield.

Captain Foster was at one time a member of the editorial staffs of the Victoria Colonist and the Victoria Times, and was well known among British Columbia newspaper men. He is now serving as quartermaster of the 54th Battalion, "Kootenai Cougars."

AMERICANIZATION WORK BY FOREIGN LANGUAGE PRESS.

EDITOR THE FOURTH ESTATE.

SIR: There seems to exist among a small section of the American public a certain amount of entirely unfounded prejudice against the foreign language press, and voices have not been lacking proposing the total suppression of this valuable asset of the United States of America, and generally of any country possessing a large alien immigrant population.

Opponents of the foreign language press obviously do not appreciate how indispensable such an institution is to the government of a country in time of war.

Taking as an example one of the most influential foreign language papers—the Polish Daily Telegram of New York City, one who understands the remarkable work done by the paper during the past few months would grasp the possibilities and the need of the continuation of its work.

It is sufficient to mention that such vital, national workers as the mayor's committee on national defense, the Liberty Bond committee, the directors of the state military census and the bureau of municipal research, the Federal recruiting authorities and such local Americanization institutions as the Gramercy Neighborhood Association, could all testify to the real patriotic work and purpose accomplished by the publisher of this paper, W. A. Mazur, and his assistants.

Mr. Mazur gave an enormous amount of space in his paper free of all charges, for the purpose of publicity in every one of the war mobilization measures undertaken by the authorities of this country. The Federal army recruiting committees have established a special recruiting station at his offices at 90 East 10th street, and during the period of the state registration Mr. Mazur gave his offices, together with his whole staff as registrars, facilitating the taking of the census.

W. A. Mazur has addressed many meetings in New York and the provinces, in the endeavor of consolidating the Poles in this country for the support of the Government.

The cooperation of the foreign language press in such national movements has been called indispensable as the one agency which can reach the enormous alien population of this country. It should be borne in mind that this section of the inhabitants of the United States rarely if ever read the English language press.

The Polish Daily Telegram publishes articles mostly in Polish, publishes many in English; and its general effect is one of enlightenment, loyalty to this country, Americanization and the fostering of mutual good will and understanding between the United States citizens and those intending to take out citizen papers. It reaches Polish emigration as no other English language paper can; and the state and Federal authorities, recognizing the fact, have been taking full advantage of the existence and work of this newspaper, which, working quietly but steadily, performs more faithfully American work than many an English language publication, in the face of great difficulties and hindrances, inseparable from the publication of such a newspaper.

MILLER ENLARGES.

William J. Barrett, for thirty years with the editorial and business departments of the Brooklyn (N. Y.) Times, and for the past three years connected with the Hearst organization, joins forces on July 23 with Charles D. Miller, publishers' representative with offices at 225 Fifth avenue, New York.

Mr. Barrett brings to the Miller organization the benefit of mature years and ripe experience in all phases of newspaper work that should be of no small value in assisting Mr. Miller to establish himself more solidly in the special agency field. For a great part of his service with the Brooklyn Times, Mr. Barrett was sporting editor.

MCADOO PRAISES AD CLUBS.

Herbert S. Houston, chairman of the National Advertising Advisory Board, has received the following communication from Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo:

"The National Advertising Advisory Board and the advertising clubs contributed immeasurably to the splendid results of the liberty loan."

"I am grateful to you all for the patient service you have rendered and to the business men who contributed so liberally in the matter of advertising space. If you will let me know their names, I shall write each of them a personal letter of thanks."

"You have done badly work. Nothing gives me more pleasure than to cooperate with a live bunch like the advertising men of America."

New York, Boston, Philadelphia and other large cities; in fact, all cities throughout the United States, used the Chicago plan, which was originated for the Red Cross and Liberty Loan, sold full pages to patriotic business men to advertise the Liberty Loan and Red Cross. Nearly 1,000 pages were used to help raise the $100,000,000 requested by President Wilson.

New York alone sold 54 full pages: Philadelphia 40; Indianapolis 36; Des Moines 25; San Francisco 15; Minneapolis 10; Joplin, Mo., 15. The government secured advertising that would have cost over one million dollars.

OWNERSHIP OF PEN NAMES.

Judge Barratt, in Court of Common Pleas No. 2, has granted an injunction to Herman L. Collins, editor and president of the Philadelphia Evening Telegraph, against the Public Ledger, which will prevent that newspaper's using the pen name "Girard."

In January, 1913, a week or two after Cyrus H. K. Curtis purchased the Public Ledger, Mr. Collins joined the editorial staff of that newspaper and inaugurated a column on the editorial page over the pseudonym "Girard." He continued to write it continuously for four and a half years, or up until June 23 last, after he had resigned to become editor of the Evening Telegraph.

Only on two occasions in that period of four and a half years, once in 1914 and again in 1915, when Mr. Collins was absent on his vacation did anybody write the "Girard" column. On those two occasions he designated another editor to write it for him.

When Mr. Collins retired from the Ledger, that newspaper continued to use the name "Girard" over an article or series of articles appearing on its editorial page. That began on June 25 and has continued every week-day since.

Mr. Collins immediately brought suit to prevent the Ledger from using his pseudonym, and the court now upholds his contention.

At the hearing in the case a number of widely known men volunteered to testify to the fact that it was a matter of public knowledge that Mr. Collins was "Girard"—thus establishing the point that "Girard" is an individual, and not, as the Public Ledger tried to prove, merely a department of the paper to which any editor might be assigned.

HOUSE WANTS WAR INFORMATION.

SUGGESTION TRICK NEWS IS BEING GIVEN OUT TO FOOL THE ENEMY!

When the Aviation Bill was brought into the House on July 14, there arose mild criticism of the Military Affairs Committee for not furnishing more details regarding the aviation program and the expenditure of so large a sum of money.

Representative Kahn dramatically exclaimed:

"Let me call your attention to one fact. England has been at war with Germany for three years. England does not know today how many submarines Germany is turning out each week. It is kept a profound secret, and it has had a deterrent effect on England."

"Why cannot this country keep its aviation program secret? If you tell the enemy what you are going to do he will prepare to meet you. If he knows that so many airplanes are going to Europe he will meet those airplanes. This House should trust its Committee on Military Affairs and the War Department."

Representative Fitzgerald and Representative Campbell interjected that in the Official Bulletin, published by the Committee on Public Information, there had been from time to time voluminous statements regarding the big aviation program.

"If the Secretary of War wants secrecy," suggested Mr. Campbell, "why cannot he control the Council of National Defense, of which he is chairman, and see that no more statements are issued about this?"

"Yes, why should discussion be had everywhere but in the House of Representatives," asked Mr. Fitzgerald.

"Because it has been done this does not make it right," said Mr. Kahn.

"The attention of the Secretary of War has been called to this and he has promised secrecy in the future. It is time now for us to begin to clamp down the lid."

"If we are going to spend $640,000,000 on aviation hasn't Germany a pretty good idea of how many machines we will send over?" asked Representative Cooper of Wisconsin.

I seek connection as assistant to the publisher on a large daily or publisher or business manager on a smaller paper. Have just concluded year as publisher of new daily and Sunday paper in Middle West city of 250,000, suddenly suspended recently when rival political faction forced back to quit. While plant was not making money by long shot when suspended, the books, covering the 11 months' operation of the property, showed over 32,000 net daily (A.B.C. audit was shortly to be released) and over 20,000 Sunday. In excess of $50,000 in advertising contracts written. While $200,000 was put in property, analysis of situation will show that this was intelligently expended and that plant was operated economically. In addition to this and other business office experience, I have behind me an excellent record as an editorial executive covering a number of years. Am 33 and married. WANTED—Position on first class daily as business or advertising manager, by a high-class man of unusual character, ability and experience. Best of references. Address Box 888, care The Fourth Estate.

"No," said Mr. Kahn, "because airplanes are of different kinds and prices cost all the way from $10,000 to $75,000."

Representative Kahn gave the Secretary of War as authority for the statement that there would be no such publications on the aviation subject in the future. He said:

"I have protested against giving out such information. I pointed out the necessity of keeping it secret. War is not ping pong. Thousands of men are giving their lives in this war and you must protect them. You have to protect the interests of the country, and when you give out this information officially, as it would be through a full discussion in the House of Representatives you would supply the enemy with information."

FOOLING THE ENEMY.

Representative Temple of Pennsylvania advanced the idea that perhaps the Council of National Defense was engaged in giving out trick information to deceive the enemy.

Representative Kahn agreed this might be possible, but Representative Fitzgerald leaped on this suggestion, saying:

"The gentlemen does not mean the Council of National Defense, whose official bulletins are published for the information of the public and the members of Congress, has been publishing erroneous information in order to fool somebody while instructing us?"

Representative Kahn started to reply, but Representative Fitzgerald continued:

"However, one report from the Bureau of Information bears out the statement of the gentlemen."

Representative Kahn said also he believed in the utmost secrecy concerning the contracts for naval vessels.

NEWS OF THE AD AGENCIES.

Walker A. Allen, secretary of the Manternach Company, the Hartford (Ct.) advertising agency, and a well-known member of the International Association of Manufacturing Photo-Engravers, has been appointed chairman of the publicity committee of the engravers' association.

Mr. Allen has been identified with the Manternach Company for a number of years and also with the Charter Oak Ad. Club, in which he has been a moving spirit. He has lately returned from a long business trip through the Middle West and reports the crop conditions, especially in Michigan, as exceptionally good and promising. He never saw better wheat than is to be seen there now and the bean crop is to be enormous.

A number of the leading Boston advertising agencies are reported to be short-handed owing to so many of the men being at Plattsburg undergoing training for reserve officers.

Newmarks Advertising Agency, Inc. was chartered in New York State on July 13 with $10,000 capital stock. The directors are A. and F. H. Newmark and P. Jaffe of 126 West 112th street, New York.

Patton-Wierengo, Inc. is the name of a new advertising agency in the Book Building, Detroit.

F. C. Patton has been associated for several years with the Dickinson advertising manager of the Continental Motor Company, and also represents Michigan, with headquarters in Detroit. Recently he was general manager of the Detroit Truck Company.

Maxton R. Davies, manager of the Detroit office of the Dunlap-Ward Advertising Company, has been elected vice-president and secretary of that firm and will continue in charge of its Detroit headquarters. He has been in the advertising business about fifteen years, most of that time in connection with Detroit automobile accounts.

He has served two years as commercial editor of the Motor World and has been with the J. Walter Thompson Company for four years, a similar period with the Brownwell-Humphrey Advertising Agency and has also been advertising manager of the Peninsular Stove Company.

Richard S. Wood, formerly with the Metropolitan Magazine, Current Opinion and the Street Railways Advertising Company, has joined the staff of the John O. Powers Company, New York.

M. R. Herman, late with the Goulston Agency, has gone with Albert Frank Co., New York.

E. M. Davidson, formerly with Ewing & Miles, is now with the Redfield Agency, New York.

Albert M. Orme has been added to the George Batten Company's forces after service with the Scientific American.

J. W. Morgan has taken a partner in the advertising agency business he has conducted alone for years in New York. The new member of the firm is Francis De Witte, formerly of the Batten, Ayer, Lord & Thomas and the Taylor-Critchfield-Clague Agencies.

The Tuholski Advertising Service has been established in the Gas & Electric Building, Denver, by D. A. Tuholski and A. Paul Porter. They report placing the accounts of the Tolver Tube & Wire Company, Ellis Camp Red Company, Stall Manufacturing Company and Jonas Brothers, all of Denver.

the appointment of George W. Hopkins to the position of general sales manager, President Whitten said:

"George W. Hopkins, vice-president and general sales manager of the American Chicle Company and for years vice-president and sales manager of the Loose-Wiles Biscuit Company, is recognized as an authority on matters of sales management and occupies a premier position among the leading sales managers of the United States.

"In introducing Mr. Hopkins, it will be interesting to know that he was the first president of the New York Sales Managers' Club, which is composed of twenty-five of the leading sales managers of New York City, representing many of the largest and best-known industries in the country. He is at the present time vice-president of the New York Advertising Club, which is the largest advertising club in the world.

"We anticipate, under Mr. Hopkins' leadership, the building of a selling force which will stand out pre-eminent in efficiency and organization, with an unprecedented sales result as a consequence.

"Mr. Hopkins is already assured of the loyalty and ability of our present sales force, and his aim will be to co-ordinate the efforts of his department with other departments of the business in a manner that will give us 100 per cent results from our combined efforts."

James G. Lewis, the new advertising manager of A. P. de Sanno & Son, dental specialists, of Philadelphia, received a collegiate training in mechanical engineering, but preferred to do newspaper work. He has been connected with the morning and afternoon newspapers of Wilmington, Del., and the Philadelphia Press and Philadelphia Evening Telegraph.

C. W. Stokes has been appointed assistant general publicity agent of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, with offices at Montreal, Que.

An advertising club has been launched in Vancouver, B. C., with the following officers: President, Frank Parsons of Wood, Vallance & Leggat; vice-presidents, M. M. Carson of H. Birks & Sons, Ltd., and S. Toombs of the B. C. Telephone directory; secretary, Frank Harris of the Crawford Harris Publicity Bureau; treasurer, S. Read of the Sun. This list will be supplemented by the election of six directors.

Harry S. Saunders has been elected president of the Baltimore Advertising Club, succeeding E. Lyell Gunts, who declined reelection. Norman M. Parrott succeeded himself as secretary-treasurer.

The Buffalo (N. Y.) Advertising Club held its annual outing on July 11 at the Automobile Club's country home, Clarence.

Roland Cole, former advertising manager of the Yawman & Erbe Company, Rochester, N. Y., has been appointed executive secretary of the Monroe County Home Defense Committee.

Several representatives of the film industry have joined the Kansas (Mo.) City Advertising Club and will for the first time provide in that club a source of direct information on their business. Among the new members are Richard Robertson, World; C. S. Edwards, Jr., Pathe, and O. R. Gookin, Vitagraph, representing the exchanges, and W. B. Tuteur, exhibitor.

H. Prescott Simpson, well known with the Fowler-Simpson Advertising Agency, Cleveland, is now president of the United Service Selling Company, of the same city, organized to render service to the advertiser or the dealer through the use of an imported transparent window poster called "Duralite." Mr. Simpson says: "We are working with the advertiser—in conjunction with newspapers—with a medium that makes publicity of more value."

Master Chase Joerns, two days old has just been elected an honorary member of the Junior Advertising Association of Chicago, according to Jerome Finlay, president of the organization.

"The baby's father," said Mr. Finlay, "is also the daddy of the Junior Ad Club idea. He helped us organize our association. Arnold Joerns is one of the biggest advertising men in the country, so we just naturally are going to make an advertising man out of the baby boy who will beat his dad.

"The Junior Advertising Association is an organization of young men and women who are studying the science of advertising under the direction of the Advertising Association of Chicago. It is affiliated with the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World. It may be some time before Master Chase Joerns can attend a meeting of the club and hear his 'dad' lecture, but nevertheless he has gone on record as the world's youngest member of the Associated Advertising Clubs."

Don Martin, manager of the Columbus (Ohio) Advertising Club of the Chamber of Commerce, has returned from Indianapolis, where he has been since the opening of the reserve officers' training camp in May. He attained a high grade of efficiency in his work and had been assigned to the cavalry. At the final physical examination he was found a few pounds under weight and under the application of the rigid army rules there he was released from further duties in the camp.

E. G. Hirsch, secretary of the Chicago Advertising Association, is spending his vacation setting new fishing records at Ogeema, Wis.

When the Cincinnati Advertising Club recently elected the "Red Ticket" officers for 1917-18, it did so by reason of a platform that boded an active year for the organization. The platform planks consisted of:

"Addresses by prominent speakers solely upon advertising or allied professions or business;

"An entertainment stunt at every meeting;

"The encouragement of reciprocal trading amongst all members;

"The club's funds to be judiciously used for educational purposes along advertising lines;

"A 'glad hand' committee and personal introduction of all members at each meeting;

"Tables seating eight or ten under a captain;

"Establishing an advertising course in the public schools;

"Postal card notices of every meeting;

"The best luncheon our money can buy."

The new officers who are making good their promises are: Jesse M.

JESSE M. JOSEPH.

Joseph of the Joseph Advertising Agency; first vice-president, Frederic H. Weiss of the Mabley & Carow Company Annex; second vice-president, Ned Hastings, manager of Keith's Theater; secretary, Robert A. Crockett, the Proctor & Collier Company; treasurer, Charles A. Culbertson, Standard Optical Company; financial secretary, Joseph A. Tomlin; board of governors, L. K. Oppenheimer, Oppenheimer Printing Company; Bruce Reynolds, of the Reynolds Advertising Agency.

G. M. Prentiss, advertising manager of the Standard Oil Cloth Company, New York, donated the prize cup for the company's annual outing golf tournament held on July 10.

T. E. Ward has become advertising manager of the House of Hobblerlin, Toronto. He was formerly with the McLean Publishing Company.

The National Bank of Commerce, in New York, has appointed James I. Clarke to be its advertising manager. Mr. Clarke was formerly with the New York Sun.

WITH BOSTON'S PILGRIMS.

It is learned from the indefatigable chairman of the Boston's Pilgrim Publicity Association house committee, George D. Moulton, that his persistent efforts to secure new camping grounds for the P. P. A. have finally been crowned with success.

"What we've been looking for," says the genial Commodore, "is rooms with club privileges—where the members can have more sociability—correctly spelled e-a-t-s. And at last we've got it—fine, large, central, improved location, high above Washington street—plenty of elbow room where we can revive the Eight Bells with luncheon at the same time, served by Automat Company which occupies first floor. Nothing we've done for several years has so much promise for the social side of the organization as this new move."

But by no means all the service which the country requires is confined to those within the draft age limits. For examples the older Pilgrims of Boston are actively engaged in doing their bit on prominent war committees.

P. F. O'Keefe is chairman of the recruiting sub-committee of the Boston Public Safety Committee.

P. A. O'Connell is chairman of the sub-committee on recruiting of the Massachusetts Public Safety Committee, of which general committee Thomas J. Feeney and John F. O'Connell are also members.

When it comes to L. E. Kirstein or L. A. Coolidge or E. A. Filene, it is virtually impossible to keep track of their activities, all three spending most of their time in Government work at Washington.

Up in Westfield, nearer home, Joseph D. Bates is busily engaged with Professor Allyn in developing dehydrating and other processes looking to the proper conservation of food on a large scale.

A. A. C. W. SERVICE FOR CHURCH ADVERTISERS.

The Church Advertising Department of the A. A. C. W. is planning an advertising service for clergymen and laymen interested in more efficient church work. The department will act as a clearing house for successful church advertising plans, and will publish these plans in a monthly bulletin that will be sent to the subscribers to the service, which also includes the right to each subscriber to propound each year, three individual church problems which advertising can help solve.

During the summer months, the newly elected executive secretary, William L. Roberts, with headquarters at the New York Advertising Club, is busily engaged collecting data and getting things in shape for the issue of the first Bulletin on September 1, when the actual service will begin.

NEWS FROM JAPAN.

The Jiji Shimpo, a leading semi-daily of Tokio, has offered prizes totaling $225 for the three persons who take the least time to ascend Mt. Fuji, the "peerless mountain of the Orient." The contest will be held July 28 and twenty participants will be selected from physical tests made by the Jiji's special staff of physicians.

As an international affair, efforts are being made to interest American English, French and other nationals to make the climb. Since 1707, the sometime volcano has been at peace. Its slopes are covered with land dust, shoe-top deep, which makes the ascent of the 12,000-foot sacred mountain a rather slow task. Mt. Fuji, is 60 miles from Tokio. All the expenses of the twenty contestants will be met by the Jiji.

Richard Washburn Child is spending the summer in Tokio, writing articles on the leading lines of industry in Japan for "Asia" of New York and also writing for Collier's Weekly.

Frederick McCormick of California is in Russian on a two months' journalistic mission.

The news at Karuizawa, Japan, the most popular summer resort in the Far East in point of attendance, is being handled for the Japan Advertiser, Tokio, by its American staff members working in three-week shifts.

the Missouri Writers Guild, led by President J. Breckenridge Ellis of Plattsburg, Mo. The plan has not yet been fully mapped out.

The Guild also publishes the Missouri Writers Guild News, which goes free to every member and contains a resume of the literary activities of the members. This has been published quarterly and Lee Shippey of Higginsville has been retained as its editor during 1917-18.

The Guild year begins in May with the annual election of officers during "Journalism Week" at the University of Missouri. It was founded in 1915. Up to his recent election to the presidency, Mr. Ellis was vice-president.

The fall meeting and outing will be held October 1-10 and the Guild members are hoping to have Augustus Thomas and Winston Churchill, both of whom are Missourians, as guests and speakers.

COMPOSING ROOM TALK.

EDITOR THE FOURTH ESTATE:

SIR: After traveling among the many large newspaper offices of the United States, and visiting their composing rooms, I have found a subject that is well worth careful study.

In composing rooms of newspapers publishing from 12 to 24 pages daily, and carrying from 40 to 100 columns of ads, I have seen as high as 30 floor men, while in others of the same size only from 4 to 10 floor men.

Some managers or superintendents say local conditions of business make the difference, but such is not altogether the case. The greatest secret lies in the art of getting the greatest production from your plant at the least possible cost.

In studying this subject I have put special attention to the good features of each plant, and taken note of what caused the bad features, or conditions, and what procedure could be taken to rectify the apparent inefficiency.

I find that many papers do not take advantage of the possibilities of cheapening their cost of production that their composing machines possess. Are they properly equipped to meet your own requirements to the best advantage? Very rarely do I find them so.

It is also rare that the ad room is properly arranged to get the ads to press expeditiously and cheaply. And the working material is seldom supplied with such system as to allow their men to be on productive work all of the time.

The arrangement of type cabinets should be such that each alley is a complete unit, that lead and slug racks are always sufficiently full to meet the demands of the day's business.

The subject of non-distribution has become a live issue and some superintendents say that were the distribution to be eliminated their men would have nothing to do at certain hours of the day, but these men are in their own light, for while it may appear so, there is not a progressive manager who could not make it possible to utilize their time more profitably.

But the greatest attention must be given to getting the ads to the forms early. It is an easy matter to close up pages after the ads are all in, and a few moments saved in the ad room make catching the mail and getting the paper on the street early more of a certainty.

Superintendents have the control of many thousands of dollars worth

SHIFTS IN TACOMA.

Richard Hayes, who was for some years marine reporter on the Tacoma (Wash.) Ledger, recently joined the editorial staff of the Seattle Times where he is doing assignment work, chiefly features.

He was succeeded on the Ledger by A. B. St. John who has been connected with Seattle and Everett newspapers and who worked for some time on the Saturday Sunset of Vancouver, B. C. and the Daily Bulletin of that city. Mr. St. John has had a good deal of experience in editing annual editions of newspapers of the Pacific Northwest.

Miss Louise Allen, who graduated a few weeks ago from the University of Oregon, is now a reporter on the Tacoma Ledger doing a "regular run."

Edward Lounsbury, formerly a copy reader on the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, is the new telegraph editor of the Tacoma Ledger.

When Oscar Thompson, night editor of the Ledger joined the office's reserve corps training camp at San Francisco, Harry Kelso, telegraph editor, was made night editor.

PRINTERS ENDORSE CONTROL OF PAPER DURING WAR.

Delegates to the N. Y. Allied Printing Trades Council endorsed Federal control of the price of newsprint paper until the close of the war.

A protest was entered which will be carried to Mayor Mitchell, of New York, against the appointment of A. C. Wesaman as commissioner of education in New York City to succeed the late Thomas J. Carroll, who was also president of the Allied Printing Trades Council.

DR. BOWER LEADS MICHIGAN NEWSPAPER WOMEN.

The Michigan Women's Press Association is laying plans for a lively year's work under the leadership of Dr. Emma E. Bower of Port Huron, Mich. The new president comes from a newspaper family. Her brother was B. Frank Bower, who was for many years connected with the Detroit News-Tribune, the Cleveland World and the Cleveland News, being proprietor of the latter paper at one time. Another brother was editor of the Ann Arbor (Mich.) Democrat.

Dr. Bower herself was actively in newspaper work for about 15 years. She succeeded her brother as editor and publisher of the Ann Arbor Democrat on his death. In 1893 she was elected secretary of the Ladies of the Modern Maccabees and in 1898 she sold her newspaper. At present she is editor of the official organ, the Lady Maccabee.

The working policy of the Michigan Woman's Press Association is: "Let us women learn to put down self and work for a cause."

President Bower's officer associates are: Mrs. Gracewood Brown of Ann Arbor and formerly of a Harbor Beach newspaper; Miss Florence Brooks of the Jackson Patriot; Miss Edith Lennon of Hillsdale; Miss Mable Louise Grissom of the Lansing Republican; Miss Jennie Starkey of the Detroit Free Press; Mrs. Prudence Janet Sherman of the Detroit Tribune; Mrs. Roy K. Moulton of Grand Rapids; and Miss Marie B. Ferry, curator of the State Pioneer of Michigan.

N. Y. AND BOSTON PRINTERS TO PLAY FOR RED CROSS.

The Boston and New York teams of the Union Printers' National Baseball League, will play a game for the benefit of the Red Cross Fund at Ebbets Field Brooklyn, N. Y., on Monday, August 6.

The following Monday, these teams will play in Boston for the benefit of the Boston branch of the Red Cross.

The New York association will bear all the expenses of the game in Brooklyn, including music at the park, and turn over the gross receipts to the Red Cross Fund.

Charles H. Ebbets heartily co-operated with the printers and donated the use of Ebbets Field for the function.

KNOWS HOW TO DO IT.

A. J. Philpott, art editor of the Boston Globe and one of the star reporters of New England, has been the publicity director for the 5,000 performers production of "Caliban" at the Harvard Stadium. Philpott has secured an immense amount of high-grade publicity for the enterprise, as he knew how to suggest news-angles and special-article subjects that had the real meat in them. Result: Attendance average between 7,000 and 12,000 persons at a single performance.

TOURING ALASKA.

M. J. Brown editor of the Corvallis (Ore.) Courier, is on a trip through the interior of Alaska. He will go over the White Horse pass from Skagway to the headwaters of the Yukon, which he will follow to its mouth, then to Nome, with side trips to the Indian villages, mining camps and other out of the way places.

Mr. Brown is representing an Eastern and middle west syndicate of 200 newspapers for which he will write stories.

BOYD SOLE OWNER.

The Dallas (Ore.) Itemizer is now under the sole management of H. L. Boyd. His partner, J. E. Bloom, has disposed of his interest to give all of his attention to mining property in the Cascade mountains.

STEINMAN'S SUCCESSORS.

C. S. Fultz and John F. Steinman, partners of J. Hale Steinman, publisher of the Lancaster (Pa.) Intelligencer and News-Journal, have taken over his duties.

curated in the printing office of one of the metropolitan dailies in New York City. One ambitious and progressive steeptyper has produced mats out of old newspapers; also out of paper that comes off the rolls before printing, doing away with the red rag and blotter, using only tissue paper for the face.

The sample mat and a copy of the newspaper were submitted to Superintendent Glen Williamson, of the New York World, with a request for an opinion as to the feasibility of the plan. Mr. Williamson was of the opinion that the idea is entirely feasible, always providing that the news print sheets are clear of wood pulp splinters and run even in thickness.

If there is much undigested wood pulp in the paper, or if the paper does not run uniform in thickness, it may interfere with the success of the plan, otherwise it is entirely within the reach of any publisher to adopt the method.

The steeptyper above referred to prefers that his name be not mentioned nor the steeptyping room in which he works. He will be glad to take his method up with any publisher seeking to economize. To promote the publishing interests THE FOURTH ESTATE will forward and communications addressed Stereotype, in care of THE FOURTH ESTATE.

Along about the time the legislature adjourned the proprietors of the Jerome News, one of whom was an old friend of Garlow, offered him the management of the establishment. They wanted to start a daily and he gave them the Verde Copper News.

HEARST BUYS PUCK.

Puck, a humorous periodical, has been sold to the International Magazine Company, owned by William Randolph Hearst.

About three years ago, when Nathan Straus, Jr., bought the magazine, its style and makeup were considerably changed. The publication was sold, early in May, by Mr. Straus to George von Utassy, publisher of the Horseless Age, and a former official of the Hearst magazine interests.

The offices of Puck are at 119 West 40th st., New York. Joseph Arthur Moore of the Hearst interests will have supervision of the magazine, with Foster Gilroy continuing as general manager.

MOVIE MAGAZINE CHANGES.

Alfred A. Cohn of Los Angeles has been appointed Western managing editor of Photoplay Magazine; Frederick James Smith of New York has been appointed Eastern managing editor, and James R. Quirk, publisher, will assume the duties of editor.

Mr. Cohn has been with the magazine for about a year and formerly was city editor of the Los Angeles Examiner.

Mr. Smith was formerly editor of the Motion Picture Mail of New York.

The new appointments follow the resignation of Julian Johnson, who has joined the Selznick organization as editor-in-chief of productions.

ANOTHER DAILY PAPER FOR NEW BRITAIN?

Establishment of a morning daily at New Britain, Ct., by a group of professional and business men in that city is contemplated in the near future, according to seemingly authentic rumors.

The political attitude of the proposed publication is not indicated, but there is reason to believe it will not be a solely political organ.

While the city has two afternoon papers, the morning field is only covered by papers of nearby cities.

FRANK BRANT, formerly secretary and circulation manager of the Philadelphia North American, died recently in Trooper, Pa.

As circulation manager of the North American he was known from one end of the state to the other. He was born near Pottstown on a farm and went to Philadelphia when a young man, starting on a newspaper as driver of a wagon. He became later a circulation solicitor and finally was placed in entire charge of the circulation of the Press throughout the state. He later served on the Public Ledger, the Times, and went to the North American about 1901, being the first to fill the position of circulation manager.

He left the North American in 1910 to become president of the Chadwick Engineering Company, manufacturer of Chadwick automobiles, at Pottstown. He was also affiliated with the Light Manufacturing Company, maker of motorcycles, in the same town. He was president of the General Lawton Building & Loan Association, Philadelphia, and a director of the Trooper Building & Loan Association. WARRANTS BY WHOLESALE.

After Sam C. Owens, editor of the Gridiron, of Louisville, Ky., was held for jury on forty-nine warrants of attempted blackmail, publication of obscene matter and slander, sworn out by W. E. Chess, Barbara Biller, Clem Huggins and Robert J. Hagan, he went into the business of swearing out warrants himself.

He swore out three against Chess, one against Huggins, one against Hagan, one against Joseph Hofigsang, a former employee, and one against Anne Present. He accuses Chess of false swearing, subornation of perjury and obstructing public justice. He charges Hofigsang and Anne Present with false swearing and accuses Huggins and Hagan with obstructing public justice.

All of the cases grew out of publication by Owens in his paper of alleged escapades of Chess.

PAPER PROBLEMS MULTIPLY.

 eral tale of woe come from production managers at mills that cannot get fuel or cannot get cars to ship in needed material nor take out the finished product. At the same time the situation is rapidly developing where the paper manufacturers will, in effect, be bidding against Uncle Sam for labor and, to make matters even worse, the state of affairs that has come about in Canada with regard to conscription is anything but reassuring.

THE TRADE BOARD'S SUPPLY.
 The Federal Trade Commission continues, without variation of program, the distribution of such news print as is placed at its disposal. There is not enough of this paper to go around, but the 500 tons per month available are pretty well scattered and there are no tales of urgent needs unsatisfied, as was the case a while back.

Information coming to Washington is that exports of news print continue at low ebb despite certain rumors to the contrary. There is no doubt that if ships were available, Latin-American and Australian publishers would sweep the board clean so far as surplus paper in the American market is concerned, but the inability of most interests to get ocean tonnage for love or money prevents this foreign demand from making much impress upon the market.

SIGNIFICANCE OF THE CURTIS CASE.

 nothing more than mere conjecture or circumstantial evidence to connect the Pictorial Review with the Trade Commission action.

Most emphatically may it be denied that the action by the Trade Commission is a sequel to the outcome of the court action in the New York District.

The Trade Commission was, to be sure, conversant with the fact that a case was pending in court and to a certain extent kept tab on its progress, but the preliminary investigation which resulted in the issuance of the complaint against the Curtis Company had been in progress for weeks before Judge Hand gave his opinion and it was no more than coincidence that the Trade Commission served notice on the Curtis Company so promptly after the decision was made public in New York.

"PREPOSTEROUS" REPORT.

"Too preposterous to justify a denial" was one comment made to THE FOURTH ESTATE among the veiled intimations in gossip Washington—and there is no such hotbed of irresponsible gossip as Washington in war time—that maybe the Trade Commission was the more ready to proceed against the Curtis interests because a certain element in the administration is supposed to be ambitious to "get" the Curtis crowd.

The Curtis Company won a notable victory at the Patent Office a few years ago when it sought to register the name of its house organ as a trade-mark and the Ladies Home Journal has cooperated most effectively in the circulation of Government publications via its Readers' Bureau.

THE CAR OF PROGRESS is running on high gear in these days. The pressure of great events is likewise forcing us closer together. This will give us opportunity to catch up with some men of other days—Patrick Henry for example, who, though five times Governor of his native state, declared: "I am not a Virginian; I am an American!"

Let each American who has waked up give elbow room to any neighbor whose Big Ben may not yet have gone off. Neighbor doubtless will wake up soon and find his place in the effort that is to make the world safe for democracy by the advance of freedom, brotherhood and goodwill.

As the National idea spreads through business we shall hear less of the "Made in Workville" idea and the "Keep your money in Smallville" slogan. They will be lost in the recognition of the general fact that goods are made everywhere, are wanted everywhere, and should be advertised everywhere.

For ourselves, we expect from now on to hear less of the criticism that our advertising is too general—has too little of Ayer & Son in it. It has ever been our aim to draw attention to the fact that advertising is the most common-sense way to obtain and maintain business. If we could not get a business man to that point, knowledge of our record or our facilities would likely be wasted on the desert air of his indifference.

Our Annual and Directory will also be less likely to be criticized as being too big. What has made it big has been the bigness of our country, the great number of its publications, and our idea that every legitimate publication is entitled to its place in the industry of which it is a part. For this reason a Vest Pocket or Thumb Nail Directory has never appealed to us.

Some Advertising Agents and some Publishers have been good enough to say that the information we furnish in the Annual and Directory is a distinct contribution to the business of Advertising Agents and direct Advertisers, to the business of Publishing and to the business of the country. We are glad to be of service to all.

It is great to be living in Nineteen Seventeen—heir of Seventy-Six and Sixty-One. We hope to bear and do a larger part in the world's march to better things.

LITTLE CHANCE FOR PAPER LEGISLATION

AT THIS SPECIAL SESSION OF CONGRESS —SUMMER REDUCTION IN USAGE
BRIGHTENS SITUATION.

Chances are not improving, to be unpleasantly frank, that there will be special legislation at this session of Congress for the purpose of authorizing the Federal Trade Commission or any other Governmental agency to take hold of the news print situation in the capacity of administrator.

If any newspaper publishers seriously expected a news print remedy to be administered via the Food Control Bills their hopes have gone glimmering and there is no more likelihood that the proposition can be hitched on to the War Revenue Bill, the last big general measure on the Administration program for this session of Congress.

Bluntly, it is to be special legislation or nothing, and, not to be too pessimistic, the outlook for special enactment (presuming that to be desirable) is none too rosy unless Congress should decide to remain continuously in session, merging the extra session into the regular session due to open in December.

Among the newspaper men who are in Washington regularly or intermittently in order to keep tab on this particular situation, the general feeling is that the hesitancy of Congress to invest the Trade Commission with autocratic powers over news print supply is not due so much to opposition on the part of unconvinced publishers—although that is yet a factor—as to the circumstance that publishers in general have eased up in their agitation for Governmental relief.

There is no doubt about it that publishers in general are not, as one Government official expressed it, "howling nearly so loudly" as they did last winter and Congress, always ready to dodge such a task, has taken this to indicate that its first aid services are no longer required.

The slowing down of the push against Congress by the "mass formation" of newspaper publishers has been due almost solely to the softening of the news print market. Now it is well recognized that the news print market is due to ease off with the slackened consumption in summer. As a matter of fact the drop in demand this year has not been nearly so pronounced as the normal slump in the off season of the average year before the war, but because the dip in the consumption curve went considerably below that last summer (when there was almost no seasonal falling off) publishers seem to have taken heart and cuddled the hope that maybe the status is permanent. At any event they have ceased, to a marked degree, nagging Congress.

Far-sighted publishers who are in touch with the whole situation can only hope that the coming winter will bring no disillusionment in the form of conditions such as prevailed at the most acute period in 1916.

If Congress is in continuous session it will, of course, be possible for publishers, once they scent the return of their old troubles, to rush to the national legislature with a demand for quick and definite action.

Such action, better late than never, might curb any temptation on the part of paper producers or jobbers to indulge in sheer price manipulation, but it is not so certain that any Congressional or Governmental action will prove a cure for the complication of complaints that may develop next winter as a result of the labor situation, freight situation, coal situation, etc.

COAL SITUATION BRIGHTENS.

The past week has brought a ray of hope with regard to the coal situation in the Northwest, already referred to in THE FOURTH ESTATE as imperiling the operation next winter of the M. & O. plant and several other big mills.

Thoroughly aroused at last to the gravity of the situation which finds no surplus fuel going into storage during the summer at the head of the Great Lakes, the War Board of the American Railway Association has addressed an appeal to the railroads to persuade all coal operators having contracts to supply coal to the Northwest to load during the remainder of the season at least 30 per cent of their daily supply of cars for lake ports whence trans-shipment can be made to the Northwest.

It is admitted by the railroad officials that there is uncertainty whether the Northwest will have sufficient coal to meet requirements next winter, hence this drastic action.

Paper consumers dependent on Northwestern mills may be moved to "put in their oar" to help matters along. Coal embargoes, such as have threatened to temporarily put some Canadian paper mills out of commission, are bad enough, but it is infinitely worse to face a contingency that may take big capacity plants out of the market for weeks or months on end.

The present summer slump in news print consumption, restricted though it has been, has nevertheless sufficed to enable paper manufacturers to accumulate some stock and, better yet, to make sorely-needed repairs to machinery that in many instances had been driven at high speed for a considerable length of time with no opportunity last year for the usual annual overhaul.

It is not a formidable surplus of news print that has gone into storage this summer and there is reason to suspect that if the Australian and South American buyers who are in the market could command unlimited tonnage for export shipments it might be wiped out in the twinkling of an eye; but, as matters rest, is a margin to intervene between paper consumers and disquieting hand-to-mouth conditions.

Paper manufacturers should credit for one thing in this connection—and that is their foresight in not retaining the surplus stock at the mills but shipping it out for storage at points central to the territory they serve.

This precautionary distribution may tend to save the day for many a publisher this autumn, for, as has been repeatedly warned in THE FOURTH ESTATE, there is a possibility that the freight situation this autumn will be a serious one.

PLAN FOR INLAND PAPER MILL.

PUBLISHERS OF SIX STATES
CONSIDER PROPOSAL
FOR 2.50 PAPER.

D. Binkhorst & Co., brokers at Kalamazoo, Mich., have interested themselves in collecting data for building a print paper mill in the Kalamazoo district, on the shore of Lake Michigan or elsewhere on the lake, as determined by the publishers who may be interested.

Mr. Binkhorst has called together from twenty to forty, mostly small paper publishers, at three or four different meetings in Chicago during the past sixty days to discuss the matter. The most recent meeting was held last Friday at the Congress Hotel, when somewhere between fifty and sixty newspapers were represented.

The papers are located in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin and Michigan. The last meeting held over all day, and seemed to be of great interest to those present. A printed plan of organization was presented to each publisher to study and a committee of five publishers was appointed to look into the matter from the newspapers' standpoint and make recommendations.

The committee desires to ascertain the attitude of responsible newspapers in the six states named toward buying stock in the proposed print paper mill, and agreeing to buy their tonnage at that mill.

This committee consists of Thomas Rees of the Springfield (Ill.) Register; Joseph S. Morgan, the Dubuque (Ia.) Times-Journal; D. E. Town, Chicago Evening Post; J. F. Drennan, Decatur (Ill.) Review; and A. W. Peterson of the Waterloo (Ia.) Courier.

The committee gave THE FOURTH ESTATE the following statement and explanation of the plan:

"Any publisher taking stock in the mill, who already has an unexpired print paper contract, will, of course, carry out his contract, and the tonnage made by the new mill which would be coming to him would be disposed of elsewhere, at $2.50 per 100. There would be no difficulty in disposing of this stock until such time as the share-holding publisher may be ready to begin taking tonnage.

"Mr. Binkhorst's plan is to have each publisher using, for instance, 500 tons, take stock to the amount of $20,000, paying 25 per cent down and 25 per cent each thirty days thereafter. More or less tonnage required would require the payment for stock in same proportion.

"The capital stock proposed is $1,500,000—mill to be supplying paper by January next. Well known, experienced men state that the profit the mill would make would be 24 per cent on the capital stock.

"It is proposed to furnish paper at $2.50 a hundred to the stockholder. The mill is to have a capacity of 36,000 tons of paper per year.

"It is thought that sixty or more publishers from the above six states could easily subscribe for the stock and thus insure themselves tonnage at a reasonable price. Mr. Binkhorst has written options for all machinery and building material, so that full equipment is assured.

"Mr. Binkhorst's plans include the building of a structure which will cost $150,000 to house the plant. He has a written option on two of the best paper making machines that can be built. These machines are 80 per cent finished.

"A. G. McIntyre, print paper expert, in the employ of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, came on from New York especially to attend the meeting last Friday.

He made a long talk endorsing the project and commended the plan as worked out by Mr. Binkhorst.

"Mr. McIntyre being the successful print paper mill man that he is, and thoroughly posted in the manufacture of print paper in all its phases, was asked by the committee of five publishers to cooperate with us and, in fact, go so far as to employ an expert man whom he knew was competent to assist him, and to go into the details of the proposed Binkhorst plan.

"Mr. McIntyre employed A. A. McDarmid, and he is now at work with Mr. McIntyre and Mr. Binkhorst in perfecting the Binkhorst plan, so that it should be entirely acceptable to publishers who wished to build a mill. Mr. McIntyre states that Mr. McDarmid is competent to manage the mill and may be obtained at a reasonable price to do so.

"Frank P. Glass, publisher of the Birmingham (Ala.) News, made the trip from that city solely to attend the meeting in Chicago, and tell the newspaper men of the work that the

MUCH INTEREST IN THE SUIT OF ROSEWATER VS. EARL.

Los Angeles journalism has been boiling over during the past week as a result of the suit by Charles C. Rosewater against the Los Angeles Express and Tribune, referred to briefly in last week's issue of THE FOURTH ESTATE.

Residents of that city have been accustomed for years to the attacks of the Los Angeles Times, owned by General Harrison Grey Otis, and the Tribune, owned by Edwin T. Earl, upon one another, but never has there been such a furious onslaught as the present one.

Mr. Rosewater furnished an official copy of his complaint to the Times and Examiner, which printed it in full on the front page, the claim, briefly stated, being that he had been employed as general manager under false representations, so far as the circulation of the papers was concerned, and that a system of rebates has been given to large advertisers in order to deceive other advertisers into paying a larger rate.

The Rosewater complaint printed various figures as to profit and loss and claimed that he had been employed at a salary of $200 a week and 20 per cent of the net profits in each year for four years from March 1, 1917.

Mr. Earl, in reply to a telegraphic request for his answer to the Rosewater charges, wired as follows:

"Mr. Rosewater signed and swore to the affidavit of Express and Tribune circulation in April last, covering the six months ending March 31, 1917. During his employment from March to July he never intimated one word about the alleged circulation padding until the recent suit.

"Evidently Rosewater perjured himself either in April or when he filed the present suit.

"The facts are that there was no circulation padding, but there were loose methods and irregularities, which Rosewater had emphatic instructions to remedy, beginning with February and repeated by me many times during March, April, May and June. His gross neglect and failure to do this led to his dismissal.

"The Chicago Audit Bureau's auditor, who has been working on our circulation since June 1, has repeatedly stated that Rosewater's charges of padded circulation were grossly exaggerated. The auditor's examination is about finished and we hope to have definite figures soon."

Naturally the advertisers of Los Angeles are looking forward with interest to the forthcoming report of the auditors.

"There is no waste time in distribution, no sorting of leads or slugs, no unsightly mounds of brass or galleys of pi; but all is productive."—JAMES STIRLING, Superintendent Pittsburg Post-Sun.

"I am a great believer in the Monotype; especially the Non-Distribution System. It is a great time and labor saver for the printer and money maker for the office."—C. E. KING, Foreman Arkansas Gazette, Little Rock, Ark.

"In three months' time we produced 10,000 inches of ads in excess of the preceding year with the same number of men. We hardly believe it would have been possible to do this without the Monotype System."—CLIFFORD EMMONS FALES, Superintendent Evening Gazette, Worcester, Mass.

"We find the Monotype Non-Distribution System makes the composing room a constant producer, where formerly we used much valuable time for distribution. The Monotype with its Non-Distribution System is certainly a time saver and a success."—ARTHUR HEATH, Foreman Cincinnati Enquirer.

"I consider the Monotype a labor saver, time saver and all-around utility as a newspaper equipment—a crowning achievement in the matter of producing a daily newspaper."—ARTHUR COOPER, Foreman Quebec Daily Telegraph.

"We are operating Monotype Non-Distribution successfully in our composing room, and the time does not seem far off when every newspaper in the country will stop distributing, because Monotype Non-Distribution is so obviously practical, efficient and economical."—J. C. SHEPPARD, Knickerbocker Press, Albany, N. Y.

"I do not see how we could get along without the Monotype Non-Distribution System. It is a mighty good thing for any newspaper plant, no matter how large or how small it is."—J. P. McCULLOUGH, Harrisburg Telegraph, Harrisburg, Pa.

"We produce the greatest volume in a given time with continuous type-setting, and no stoppages at any time to distribute or reclaim material."—W. V. GOWHILL, Superintendent Cleveland Leader and News.

"A feature of the system as important as Non-Distribution is the increased efficiency of the compositors, resulting from abundant material—efficiency which, when necessary, makes time 100 per cent productive."—W. C. AKERS, Sioux City Tribune.

"The newspaper foreman is the fellow who must keep down costs in the composing room. We have found that the Monotype Non-Distribution System solves the problem of costs."—W. S. HANCOCK, Flint Daily Journal, Flint, Mich.

CANADIAN PUBLISHERS' NEWS PRINT FIGHT.

THE EXPORT COMPANY'S RELATIONS WITH THE INDUSTRY—EVIDENCE PRINGLE WOULDN'T HEAR.

Following the ruling in the Canadian newsprint paper investigation by Commissioner Pringle that questions as to the nature of the business of the Canadian Export Paper Company, Ltd., of Montreal, were not relevant, the Canadian Press Association has issued a report illustrating the relation between that company and the Canadian news print paper industry.

A table shows that there are fifteen news print paper manufacturing companies in Canada, with an aggregate annual production of 640,789 tons. Only five companies supplying the general market are not included in either the George H. Mead & Company or the Canadian Export Paper Company, Ltd. groups. The combined annual production of these five companies is only 161,075 tons, or one-quarter of the total Canadian production.

The George H. Mead & Co. and the Canadian Export Paper Company, Ltd., groups represent between them an annual production of 403,222 tons, or 62.81 per cent of the total Canadian production.

The Canadian Press Association reviews the entire Dominion controversy between the publishers and the paper makers, as follows:

For some time prior to 1910 the contract prices for news print paper bought direct from the manufacturer were as follows:

In Eastern Canada: Roll news from $1.50 to $2.10 per 100 pounds, f. o. b. mill; sheet news to rural weekly newspapers from $2.35 to $2.85 per 100 lbs. f. o. b. mill.

In Western Canada: Roll news from $2.10 to $2.45 per 100 lbs. f. o. b. mill; sheet news bought mostly through jobbing houses. (The Western mills on their establishment fixed prices that absorbed most of the difference in freight rates from Eastern mills.)

Early in 1910 there began an upward trend in prices. By the summer of 1910 there had been a substantial increase in current market prices, and travellers for paper houses were informing customers that the prices on January 1, 1917, would be 3 cents a pound, or more, for roll news and about 4 cents a pound for sheet news.

In September, 1910, it developed that the contracts of most of the newspapers had a common expiry date of December 31, 1910. Many newspapers whose contracts expired at an earlier date, were able to arrange only for their requirements up to the end of the year.

On October 7 the daily and weekly newspapers requested the Finance Minister to investigate the news print situation.

On October 9 the newspapers' representatives and the paper manufacturers met in Ottawa, at the call of the Finance Minister. The paper manufacturers stated their price for roll news for 1917 was $3.00 per 100 lbs. f. o. b. mill, an increase of 71.42 per cent as compared with the existing minimum contract price of $1.75 per 100 lbs. f. o. b. mill. That price and a proportionate price for sheet news would have imposed on Canadian newspapers a new burden of nearly $3,000,000 a year. The newspapers' representatives said the price proposed was unwarranted and prohibitive, and renewed their request for an investigation by the Government.

INVESTIGATION BY GOVERNMENT.

During the rest of 1910 the Government conducted an investigation through the finance department. Returns as to cost were secured from the paper manufacturers.

On January 5, 1917, the finance minister announced his conclusion that the prices for news print paper should be not more than $40 per ton (50 cents per 100 lbs.) above the prices paid by the respective publishers on January 1, 1910, and that in case of newspapers that had been without contracts the conclusion reached should be made retroactive to November 1, 1916.

This meant an increase in the minimum price of roll news from $1.75 per 100 lbs. f. o. b. mill, to $2.25 per 100 lbs. f. o. b. mill—this as compared with the demand of the mills for a minimum price of $3 per 100 lbs. f. o. b. mill.

The Finance Minister intimated that the War Measures Act, 1914, gave the Governor-General in Council plenary powers to regulate and control the exportation of any article, and suggested that the manufacturers and publishers should compose their differences on the basis of his conclusion and render unnecessary any action by the Government.

The Finance Minister's conclusion continued the existing differential in price against the daily newspapers of Western Canada, but this point was afterward met by an understanding that the price to those newspapers should not exceed $2.50 per 100 lbs. f. o. b. mill.

On January 10, 1917, the newspapers' special paper committee met the paper manufacturers in Montreal, at their request. The manufacturers' proposals were that the publishers should endorse the idea that all existing contracts for news print paper should be cancelled, and that the publishers and the manufacturers should endeavor to reach an agreement as to price, without reference to the conclusion of the Finance Minister. The newspapers' committee refused to accept either proposal.

During February two Orders in Council were passed, providing that the exportation of news print paper should be only by license, under regulations by the Minister of Customs, and authorizing the Minister of Customs to fix the quantity and price of news print paper to Canadian publishers. Both Orders in Council were to become effective only from and after publication in the Canada Gazette, but neither Order in Council was published.

During March some of the paper manufacturers put into effect the following prices for news print paper: Roll news, $2.50 per 100 lbs. f. o. b. mill in car lots; sheet news, $3.25 per 100 lbs. f. o. b. mill in car lots, and $3.50 per 100 lbs. f. o. b. mill in two-ton lots. These prices were made retroactive to March 1, and it was intimated that they would continue only until June 1.

The paper manufacturers practically defied the findings of the Finance Minister, conceding neither the prices fixed by his conclusion nor the idea that those prices should date back to November 1, 1916.

COMMISSIONER PRINGLE APPOINTED TO INVESTIGATE.

On April 16 the Finance Minister informed the special paper committee that R. A. Pringle, K. C., had been appointed a commissioner for the purpose of investigating the cost of production, manufacture and sale of news print paper, and intimated that if the press desired to be represented by counsel at the hearings there would be no objection on the part of the Government.

On April 21 the Finance Minister's special paper committee informed the Finance Minister that, in view of the previous investigation by the Government and the fact that the conclusions following that investigation had not been enforced, the committee felt unable to assume the responsibility of taking part in the proposed renewed inquiry.

On May 8 the first session of the inquiry under Commissioner Pringle was held at Ottawa. The principal business of the session was an agreement upon a questionnaire that would be sent by Commissioner Pringle to the paper manufacturers. It was announced that an Order in Council had been passed on April 16 giving the Minister of Customs power to fix the quantity and price of news print paper to Canadian publishers during the period from March 1, 1917, to June 1, 1917.

On May 8 the Minister of Customs passed a regulation fixing the price for the 3 months ending June 1. The prices fixed were the same as had been put into effect by certain of the manufacturers during March, as reported above.

The second hearing in the investigation under Commissioner Pringle was held at Ottawa on May 21. The manufacturers submitted their written replies to Commissioner Pringle's questionnaire as to costs of production, selling prices, profits, existence or otherwise of agreements as to selling prices, etc.

The newspapers' special paper committee was not represented, either directly or by counsel, at either of the two hearings referred to above.

PUBLISHERS' PARTICIPATION IN THE INQUIRY.

In the meantime the Order in Council authorizing the inquiry by Commissioner Pringle had been made public. The inquiry was defined as "an inquiry into and concerning the manufacture, sale, price and supply of news print paper within the Dominion of Canada," and it seemed to the newspapers' special paper committee that this definition gave promise of a full and complete inquiry with a view to getting at all the facts in connection with the Canadian news print paper situation.

In view of this, and in response to repeated representations of Commissioner Pringle and H. A. Stewart, K. C., counsel for the Government, that the participation of the newspapers in the inquiry would facilitate the bringing out of the facts, the newspapers' special paper committee reversed its former decision and decided to take part officially in the inquiry. W. N. Tilley, K. C., was retained as counsel.

On May 25 there was passed a new Order in Council authorizing the Minister of Customs to fix the quantity and price of news print paper to Canadian publishers during the period from June 1 to September 1, 1917. Under the authority of this Order in Council the Minister of Customs renewed for one month the prices that had been fixed for the three months ending June 1.

On May 30 Commissioner Pringle held a hearing at Calgary. The newspapers' special paper committee took part officially at this hearing, being represented by John M. Imrie, manager of the Canadian Press Association, Inc. It was brought out that the Fort Frances Pulp & Paper Company, Ltd., had been charging $4 per 100 lbs. f. o. b. mill, for roll news, notwithstanding the regulation of the Minister of Customs. Most of the hearing was devoted to a charge of the manufacturers that the newspapers were wasting news print paper.

On June 5 Commissioner Pringle held a hearing in Vancouver for the purpose of examining the Powell River Company, Ltd.

PUBLISHERS WITHDRAW DUE TO LIMITING OF INQUIRY.

On June 19 to 21, the manufacturers were under cross examination at a hearing in Ottawa in regard to their written replies to Commissioner Pringle's questionnaire.

It was established that many of the manufacturers had used arbitrary figures of $50 a ton for sulphate and $25 a ton for ground wood, instead of the actual cost of production. Several witnesses admitted there had been an understanding among the manufacturers to use these arbitrary figures.

It was brought out, also, that two manufacturers, producing one third of the total Canadian production, pooled their entire product through a firm in Dayton, Ohio, that was practically controlled by the president of one of the companies, and that the allowance to that firm, as a commission, was included in the cost of production shown by the two companies.

Mr. Tilley endeavored to probe the affairs of the Canadian Export Paper Company Ltd., Montreal, a Canadian company.

INTERTYPE

"The Better Machine"

By H. R. SWARTZ, President, Intertype Corporation

(Reprinted from "INTERTYPE NEWS")

IN THIS first issue of Intertype News, and as my first word to the trade since assuming the presidency of this corporation, I would like to emphasize the fact that our Intertype slogan—"the better machine"—is not merely an advertising phrase. I wish that all publishers and printers could realize how much that phrase means to every member of the Intertype organization. We have all worked hard to produce a machine worthy of such a slogan; and we all believe and know that we have succeeded.

When this corporation commenced business it was with the understanding, approved by the men who were heavily interested financially, that no expense should be spared in building the best composing machine that money and brains could produce. The first step toward that end was the preparation of a complete list of all criticisms regarding Intertype design, construction, and operation; such criticisms being gathered from competitors, Intertype users, operators, machinists, and members of our own organization. Each criticism was then carefully considered, absolutely on its merits and regardless of its source, by a committee of experts. In every instance where a criticism proved to be justified, no expense was spared in correcting the fault, however insignificant, by improvements in design, material, or construction.

During the past twelve months more than $100,000 has been invested in new equipment for the manufacture of Intertypes of a quality higher than ever before, with the determination that every machine which leaves the Intertype factory shall, when compared with similar models of other manufacture, be recognized by operators, machinists and purchasers alike as "the better machine."

GREAT BRITAIN'S PAPER REGULATIONS.

ROYAL COMMISSION HAS NOT SET PRICE, BUT WILL ARBITRATE DISPUTES—NO MORE LICENSE TRAFFIC.

The British Royal Commission on Paper, appointed on June 4 as explained in THE FOURTH ESTATE last week, has issued revised regulations on the importation and distribution of paper and paper making materials. Contrary to rumors that have been circulating in the United States, the British commission has not set any price on news print paper. On this point the new regulations provide, in section No. 23:

"Should any complaint be received that an excessive or unreasonable price is being demanded for paper which has to be supplied under these regulations, or that unreasonable requests for a paper of a given quality or weight are being refused, the commission will investigate such complaint and if satisfied that the complaint is substantiated will take such action with regard thereto as may seem desirable."

Another interesting point is the clause covering the disposal of licenses. These may not now be bought and sold and can only be transferred with the consent of the commission. Thus, to a very large extent the traffic in licenses, which had sprung up during the past twelve months, is abolished. Last summer those who had license concessions in excess of their requirements were willing to sell these at $12 to $15 per ton, but as import restrictions became more stringent these licenses gradually grew in value until recently $100 to $125 per ton was being paid.

On July 2 the following Regulations were made and issued under and by virtue of a Proclamation dated June 4, 1917:

IMPORTATIONS.

1. Printed Matter, Coated Paper, Paper Hangings, etc.—The importation of printed forms, writing paper with printed headings, calendars, show cards, labels, posters, and color or lithographic printing, and other printed and coated paper and paper hangings will not be permitted.

The importation of such printed matter as newspapers, magazines, periodicals, catalogs, price lists, and books, other than single copies sent through the post, will not be permitted, except in special cases for which a license may be granted in exceptional circumstances.

2. Wrapping and Packing Paper, Straw and Other Boards, Boxes and Cartons.—Licenses may be granted to importers of wrapping and packing paper, strawboard, millboard, wood-pulpboard, cardboard, pasteboard, and boxes and cartons of paper, cardboard, etc., to import during the 12 months commencing March 1, 1917, one-fourth of the weight which they imported in the previous year on other than Special Extra Licenses.

3. Other Paper.—Licenses may be granted to importers of paper other than that which is included in Regulations 1 and 2 to import during the 12 months commencing March 1, 1917, one-half of the weight of such paper which they imported in the previous year, on other than Special Extra Licenses.

4. Paper-Making Materials.—Licenses may be granted to paper-makers to import during the 12 months commencing March 1, 1917, one-half of the weight of paper-making materials which they imported in the previous year on other than Special Extra Licenses.

GENERAL.

5. Licenses will be granted subject to the condition that the licensee comply with the regulations and requirements of the commission as to the distribution of the materials and paper imported and of the paper made from the imported materials. They can be transferred only with the consent of the commission and may not be bought and sold.

6. The licenses issued will be subject to withdrawal by the commission at any time.

7. Applications must be made to the commission for a license to import paper or paper-making materials before the desired imports reach this country. Risk of inconvenience and loss will be avoided if the applications are made before the goods are ordered. The application for the first license desired by any person must be accompanied by a statutory declaration made on a form which will be supplied on application to the commission.

8. The importer is the person who has bought or ordered the paper or paper-making materials which it is desired to import, directly from a person out of the United Kingdom, or through an agent here of such person.

9. Licenses will not be granted to agents unless the paper or paper-making materials they desire to import are to be imported by them on their own account as dealers.

10. The "previous year" is the 12 months March 1, 1916, to February 28, 1917.

DISTRIBUTION.

PRIORITY.

11. Until further notice Priority Certificates will be issued in order to secure supplies under the Regulations in respect of:

1. Any contract or order placed by the Admiralty, the War Office, or the Ministry of Munitions.

2. Any contract or order which the Admiralty, the War Office, or the Ministry of Munitions certifies in writing to be war or munitions work.

3. Any contract for naval or military equipment placed by an Allied Government by or with the consent in writing of the Admiralty, the War Office, or the Ministry of Munitions.

4. Any contract or order placed by the Stationery Office or any other Government Department which the Department certifies in writing to be necessary for the efficient conduct of the war, or to be essential and urgent in the national interest.

5. Any contract or order placed by public authorities or public utility companies, and certified by them in writing to be for the minimum quantity that will enable them to carry on so much of their work as is necessary in the national interest.

6. Any contract or order which the Paper Commission directs to be treated as on an equality with war work.

It must be clearly understood that the Priority Certificate will give no claim to supplies in excess of the amount to be granted under the Regulations.

12. All contracts and orders for which certificates are issued shall take precedence of all other contracts and orders irrespective of the date when the orders were received and of any contractual obligations to the contrary. If in consequence of the issue of a priority certificate any importer, maker, or dealer shall be unable wholly or partially to execute any contract or order, he shall forthwith give notice thereof in writing to his customer, who shall thereupon have the option to give a counter notice in writing to cancel such contract or order.

13. In the case of contracts and orders placed or certified by Government Departments, if more than one certificate has been issued to any one person, the order of precedence in which those contracts or orders shall be executed will, if necessary, be determined by the Government Departments concerned. In all other cases it will be determined, where necessary, by the Paper Commission.

14. These priority regulations do not increase the quantity of paper or paper-making materials which an importer, maker, dealer, or consumer may obtain. They only determine the order in which, in relation to the supplies of other persons, particular contracts or orders shall be executed.

15. Where, for purposes connected with or arising out of the war, the Government requires supplies of goods which involve the importation of paper or paper-making materials by any person in excess of his allowance under these regulations, the Commission may license the importation of such additional quantities as appear to them to be necessary. When application is made for a license for the importation of such an extra supply, the commission will require to be satisfied (1) that the extra supply asked for is no more than is required for Government orders after the supplies available under these regulations have been used for those orders; and (2) that it is impossible to obtain the requisite supply unless a special license is granted for an extra importation.

16. Any maker or user of or dealer in paper may be required by the Paper Commission to accept orders for priority certificate purposes. In default, the supplies of paper or paper-making material which he would otherwise receive or be entitled to claim for such purposes may be transferred to persons who can execute such orders. The terms on which such orders shall be executed or such transfers made will be determined by the commission.

17. No priority certificates other than those given on the form issued by the Paper Commission and sent out in the schedule hereto, are valid as authority for giving priority to any contract or order for paper. The commission may cancel such certificates at any time.

GENERAL.

18. Importers of or dealers in paper or paper-making materials shall, if required, supply such paper and the paper made from such materials to those persons whom they supplied with paper in the previous year to the extent of the same proportion of the weight of paper so supplied to them in that year, as the importer is allowed under Clauses 2, 3 and 4. If an importer, manufacturer, or dealer, after meeting the claims under regulations of holders of priority certificates, is unable to meet all other claims under the regulations, the balance available shall be distributed pro rata.

19. Importers or dealers shall stipulate as a condition of giving supplies as required in the preceding regulation that, subject also to the priority certificates the persons to whom they give them shall in turn, if required, supply to their trade customers the corresponding proportion of the weight of the paper supplied to them in the previous year under similar conditions. The persons thus supplied shall receive their supply only on condition that they again supply their trade customers in the same proportion.

20. Reasonable notice must be given by claimants under the regulations to their suppliers. Such notice should relate to each four-monthly period of the year.

21. Subject to these regulations and to priority certificates, the notice referred to in the previous clause is binding upon both parties. If the price be not mutually agreed upon when notice is given, or subsequently, it shall be determined by the commission. Supplies must be continued pending settlement of price.

22. If any person fails, in the opinion of the commission, to meet claims under these regulations or the priority certificates, the commission may take steps to withhold his supplies.

Should any complaint be received that an excessive or unreasonable price is being demanded for paper which has to be supplied under these regulations, or that unreasonable requests for paper of a given quality or weight are being refused, the commission will investigate such complaint, and if satisfied that the complaint is substantiated will take such action with regard thereto as may seem desirable.

24. Where a supplier cannot supply a customer as required by these regulations, or where for any other adequate reason, such a customer is obtaining or desires to obtain his supply of paper in whole or in part from another person than the one from whom he received his supply in the previous year, the commission may (1) increase the license of the person from whom the customer is obtaining or desires to obtain his supply; or (2) issue to the purchaser a license to import. In either case the commission may, if satisfied that it will be equitable to do so, correspondingly reduce the license of the person who supplied the customer in the previous year.

25. No allowance of extra weight of paper or materials can be made for new businesses, new newspapers, increased business, or increased circulation, since March 1, 1916. No allowance of extra weight will be made after March 1, 1917, for wet pulp.

26. Licenses may be exchanged on the basis of ton for ton if the change is to be from paper to material, and of one ton of paper for 30 cwt. of material if the change is to be made from materials to paper.

27. It is hoped and expected that all parties to existing contracts made before March 1, 1917, will be willing, where necessary, to adjust them reasonably to the altered conditions which these regulations involve. A customer will not necessarily be regarded as being entitled to his supplies under the regulations of the commission if he has already obtained or is obtaining similar supplies under other arrangements from the same or other sources. To the extent to which a customer has obtained or is obtaining such other supplies his supplies under these regulations, from those persons who supplied him in the previous year, may be reduced.

28. It must be clearly understood that any license which the commission may issue will not override, but will be subject to the granting of, a Board of Trade license in the case of any importation of paper or paper-making material from Belgium.

29. The word "person" includes any firm, company or corporation.

30. The classification of the Commission of Customs and Excise shall be adopted for all paper or paper-making materials affected by these regulations.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JULY 28, 1917

HOW WILL THE GOVERNMENT SHOW ITS APPRECIATION?

The question—How will the Government show its appreciation of the services rendered to the nation by the newspapers in disseminating the draft information—is now topmost in the minds of newspaper publishers.

The Paterson Press-Guardian very appropriately broaches the subject as follows:

The newspapers of the country never tackled so big a job as the one that was thrown upon them on July 20 by the army draft, and they never measured up to a big task so admirably as they did in carrying the news of the drawings to every corner of the land in the night's editions.

It was not until late the night before that the entire method of drawing the numbers was entirely changed.

Every newspaper in the country had arranged its system on the basis of the original plan only to be called upon early Friday morning to change the whole system of setting up the numbers, and securing the names of those drawn.

And almost before the new arrangement could be properly fixed between editorial room and composing room the numbers began to fly over the telegraph wires like snowflakes in a swirling storm.

Out of that mass of figures order had to be brought out of chaos.

The numbers had to be set up in sequence, while busy workers in municipal buildings matched up the names of the men drawn.

Although the first number was not picked until nearly 10 o'clock, noon extras began to unfold in an awaiting public the early returns of the draft.

Thinking men are asking the question today—what would the government of the United States do without the daily newspapers?

The big draft task was undertaken as a matter of course and it was "put over" without any fuss or feathers.

Incidentally, it might be stated that the job cost the newspapers and the telegraph press associations vast sums of money and an expenditure of nervous energy that can never be computed.

Thousands of newspaper men all over the length and breadth of this big land tumbled exhausted into early beds at night after the biggest day's work of their lives and on the hottest day of the year, but as sleep stole over them they smiled at the achievements of the day.

But all that is merely incidental. The question is—How would the government of the United States have disseminated the news of the draft to 100,000,000 people without the agency of the newspapers?

How much money would it have cost the government to have undertaken the job, or rather would it have been possible at all for the government to have done the work at any expenditure of money imaginable?

The answer is simply that the thing could not have been done without the paraphernalia of the newspapers and the channels of distribution which they control.

We trust the government thoroughly understands its debt to the newspapers and that it is duly appreciative of the obligation.

It would be impossible for THE FOURTH ESTATE to tell what every newspaper did—so far that reason no names are mentioned.

Certain it is though that every newspaper in the land did its best to spread the draft information for the Government.

WINNING OVER THE PEOPLE FOR A FARE INCREASE.

Another case of a public service corporation using newspaper advertising to successfully win over the people to its side in a case such as usually results in much bad feeling is told by the Pilgrim Publicity News, of Boston.

The Bay State Street Railway began on July 15 to operate for a six months' trial period on a straight six cent unit fare and a reduced transfer privilege, but even few advertising men appreciate the part which modern publicity played in bringing this larger income to the Bay State Company.

The original cause of many of the Bay State Company's troubles was the helter-skelter system which it absorbed.

There are too many street railways in Massachusetts from a traffic standpoint. Roads were built years ago with apparent utter disregard for even the possible traffic that those lines could get.

The result is that even today it costs the Bay State Company several times the fare to maintain service and transport each passenger on some of these lines. But the people will not consent to the closing of such lines, and so the profitable lines have had to "carry" the unprofitable ones.

With fast increasing costs for materials and labor and steadily decreasing profits, which have tended in later years to disappear altogether, the need for a larger income became imperative.

Fortunately for the road, President Sullivan decided to throw the old-time customary corporation secrecy out the window and to go to the people with the facts.

He delivered eleven talks in eleven cities all of which were fully reported in the newspapers, and he bought advertising space in the newspapers.

Of course such a policy got results—it couldn't help but get them.

As the President's assistant, Thomas Dreier, in a letter to the editor, put it: "You will note that we got this increase without bloodshed, riots, murder and sudden death. This increase will give us (estimated) $720,000—about half of what we actually need."

But when you remember that the representatives of the communities and the representatives of the company did this amicably in conferences—well, doesn't it show that folks who are supposed to be antagonistic can get together and get results?

And if that can be done now, think of the wonderful work that can be done in the future. Capital and labor can settle things in the same way.

Who says there isn't a field for friendly publicity?

HOW PUBLISHERS PROTECT MANUFACTURERS.

Striking instances of how newspapers always stand ready to protect their home industries are provided in the state of Connecticut. Frank Kiernan & Co., advertising agents of New York, within the past few days offered several advertisements to secure ironworkers and helpers for a large dry dock company to newspapers of New London and Bridgeport. The publishers declined to print these advertisements and in returning the orders wrote as follows:

New London (Ct.) Evening Day

"We regret that we must decline to publish the enclosed advertisement inasmuch as there is such a demand for skilled workers of all kinds in New London that we feel it our civic duty to refrain from publishing advertisements that would draw them away from this city and we therefore have been declining all advertisements of this nature."

Bridgeport (Ct.) Post and Telegram

"The labor market in Bridgeport is difficult for our manufacturers to handle and we have deemed it policy to discontinue the insertion of advertisements which would take labor away from the Bridgeport shops. In this we are endeavoring to work with our local manufacturers and this is the only reason that the advertisement is not acceptable."

NOTE AND COMMENT.

THE FOURTH ESTATE is represented in most complete detail in a newspaper memorial volume of the late Joseph H. Choate, which has just been completed. The work includes 1129 columns of news matter, editorials and lectures as printed by more than 1700 newspapers, and was prepared at the suggestion of the family of Mr. Choate by the Hemstreet press clipping concern in New York. The big volume is considered somewhat remarkable because of the clipping bureau's report that the press devoted more space to the demise of Mr. Choate than to any prominent man of the past decade.

"Business will be what we make it. We are hoping that there will be enough optimists to offset the pessimists. We believe it is time enough to lay down when you are knocked down, and we are going to push our business more than usual. We see evidence of a rapidly increasing disposition on the part of all business men along the same line."—The Mailpost Company, Rochester, N. Y.

Earl Leedy of the Clearwater (Kan.) Courier defines the editor of a weekly newspaper thus: "A fellow who works like thunder on Wednesday and Thursday and can't find anything to do the rest of the week."

Rev. W. F. McElroy, pastor of a prominent Louisville church and religious editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal, at a recent meeting of religious workers in Jackson, Ky., emphasized the importance of newspaper publicity and advertising in church work.

"Newspaper publicity stimulates the church to greater endeavor and consequently increases its efficiency. Why let soup and breakfast foods and theaters and automobiles fill up the columns of the daily press and the church never get a look in except by accident? The way to build up a big business or a big church is to let the world know about it."

The Omaha (Nebr.) World Herald has been awarded the contract for city advertising.

P. A. Revelt of the Wilkes-Overland Automobile Company, Toronto.

"We intend to maintain the present size of our advertising appropriation in the newspapers."

"Newspapers can best assist the national advertiser in selling his product during war time by being optimistic in their attitude. It is the fear that is more dangerous than the actual occurrence."

"Conditions were never healthier for buying than they are now and all indications point to even greater prosperity during war time than we have experienced thus far."

"In our opinion the best policy for advertisers to follow in order to keep business at its best state of efficiency is to continue to carry out the development of their plans as laid down before the war."

Advertising campaigns for the Southern Pacific lines were discussed in outline at a meeting of the general passenger agents, traffic managers and L. S. Spence, director of traffic, held recently in San Francisco.

War conditions will not be permitted to interfere with the advertising program of the company.

EVER THE WIDE WORLD OVER.

EDITOR THE FOURTH ESTATE.

Sir: Very recently I received a letter of inquiry from Manila, which makes the third letter in as many years that I have received from that one place. Last summer I received one from New Zealand. This would seem to indicate that THE FOURTH ESTATE reaches over the entire world. Some time ago I heard from one of the great London papers, also in reply to the advertisements run in your valuable paper.

WILLIAM L. BETTS,
President W. L. Betts Co., Newspaper Content Specialist, New York

A RED LETTER DAY.

TO THE EDITOR.

Sir: THE FOURTH ESTATE not only reaches me regularly, but makes Saturday a distinctive day on the calendar. Not only is it a privilege to read THE FOURTH ESTATE, but every copy is of value and is carefully filed away. ROBERT RICHMOND.

PURELY PERSONAL.

Major Robert Ewing, publisher of the New Orleans States, was in New York this week.

Eric C. Palmer, who recently returned from the presidency, has been made chairman of the entertainment committee of the Brooklyn (N. Y.) Press Club. He is now at work on plans for the summer outing.

William M. Hyde, editor of the Post Washington (N. Y.) News, is mourning the loss of his mother, who died last week in her eighty-first year.

Frank Dilnot, New York correspondent for the London Chronicle and biographer for Premier Lloyd George, was a speaker before the Side Y. M. C. A. in New York this week on "Lloyd George, Christian Statesman."

William F. Metten, business manager of the Wilmington (Del.) Every Evening, and Thomas F. Dunn, publisher of the Dover Index, representing the Delmarva Press Association, are aiding the military registration boards in Delaware in their efforts to disseminate information through the state.

Roland F. Andrews, managing editor of the Hartford (Ct.) Times, who is a captain in the Connecticut State Militia, has been ordered to Washington, D. C.

William Wolfe, advertising manager of the Johnson (Pa.) Leader, has been visiting New York City.

Raymond G. Fuller, former Philadelphia newspaper man, has been appointed director of the school of secretarial studies of the Russell Sage College of Practical Arts at Troy, N. Y.

John L. Hartness of the Troy (N. Y.) Times has been re-elected to a fourth term as secretary treasurer of the New York State Allied Printing Trades Council.

Jack Lait, feature writer for the Chicago Herald, is making a tour of the West. Lait recently covered the Canadian training camps for a series of special military articles for the Herald.

S. J. Duncan Clark, the Chicago Post's war expert, addressed a community meeting at Waukegan last week on the war situation.

R. S. Vance, an Associated Press man in Tampa, Fla., is spending his vacation in Chicago.

W. H. Hagley, publisher of the Fort Worth (Tex.) Record, was one of the week's visitors in New York City.

J. K. Fraser, vice-president of the Blackman-Ross Company, New York, is spending his vacation at Matane, Que., Can.

Charles B. Cory Jr., formerly special writer on athletics for Philadelphia, Norfolk and other Eastern newspapers, and now assistant advertising manager for Inland Storekeeper with offices in Chicago is the father of a brand new boy, Charles B. Cory.

Harold R. Jones, city hall reporter for the New Britain (Ct.) Herald, has been named by Mayor George A. Hugley as member of that city's Food Conservation Commission to have charge of the publicity. He was also one of the official observers recently in the endurance test of the Savon automobiles.

Eddie Doherty, rewrite man on the Chicago American staff, is the proud father of an eight-pound son, Eddie.

PUBLISHERS WERE HOSTS.

Employees of the Houston Post's mechanical department were the guests of the Post management at an enjoyable outing last week to Galveston.

WEDDING BELLS.

Miss Anna Mealey of Richmond, a reporter on the Marion (Ohio) Daily Star and the Marysville Tribune, and George Nelson Hinds, telegraph editor of the Marion Daily Star, were married at the home of the bride's brother.

Harry A. Rollins, city editor of the Carthage (Mo.) Democrat, and Miss Marie Haughwout were recently married in Springfield.

Orrick Johns, a writer of note and son of George S. Johns of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch was married recently in St. Louis to Miss Grace Wilson of that city.

Miss Anna Phillips, an East Liverpool (Ohio) newspaper woman, and Alfred Cartwright have been married. Sigmond A. Lee, editor of the Journal of Labor, Louisville, Ky., and Miss Effie McDonald have been married.

Henry L. Remick of the Associated Press office in Chicago, who has been detailed to duty at Petrograd, was married on July 27 in Springfield to Miss Marie Goulet, society editor of the Illinois State Register. Mrs. Remick will remain in Springfield for six months, after which she will join her husband in Petrograd. Mr. Remick was formerly city editor of the Springfield (Ill.) Record. During the last session of the Illinois legislature he was assistant to Thornton Smith, manager of the Associated Press legislative bureau in Springfield.

FOOTE MOVES UP.

Robert O. Foote has been made managing editor of the Richmond (Va.) Evening Journal, of which paper he formerly was news editor and dramatic critic.

Mr. Foote, who is thirty-three years old, is a native of Iowa but is more closely identified with Pacific coast newspaper circles, having worked on Los Angeles, San Francisco and Pasadena newspapers for a dozen years.

Before going to Virginia a year ago he was in charge of the Los Angeles Graphic, of which publication he was associate editor and dramatic critic. Foote is widely known, at least by reputation, to the dramatic reviewers of the country through a satirical article of his on "Small Town Critics," which appeared in the last annual number of the Dramatic Mirror and brought down upon the author's head the maledictions of half his conferees in the United States.

OFF FOR EUROPE.

Karl Walter, a Western writer who was lately with the Kansas City Star and head of the recently organized Reciprocal News Service of Kansas City, has sailed for London, accompanied by George T. Bye, formerly connected with the Thanhouser Film Corporation.

Mr. Walter and Mr. Bye, who intend to be located in Paris, where a new office is being planned, will act as correspondents.

Mrs. Margaret Walter has resigned as women's editor of the Kansas City Star in order to accompany her husband abroad.

HEADS CITY EDITORS.

The Indiana City Editors' Association has elected C. T. Jewett of the Terre Haute (Ind.) Star president for the ensuing year.

Some of the city editors present at the annual meeting in Alexandria were: Edward C. Toner, Anderson Herald; Dale J. Crittenberger, Anderson Bulletin; George Lockwood, Muncie Press; C. T. Jewett, Terre Haute Star; W. F. Baum, Alexandria Times-Tribune.

STAFF CHANGES.

Don S. Day has resigned from the sporting staff of the New York Morning Telegraph.

Harold C. Brooker, formerly with the Spartanburg (S. C.) Journal and the Greenville Piedmont, has joined the staff of the Charleston News and Courier after recovering from a month's illness in the Columbia Hospital.

Samuel D. Fuson, night editor of the Columbus (Ohio) bureau of the Associated Press, has resigned. Walter J. Reek, who was assistant night editor, succeeds him. Dave M. Auch of Chillicothe, Ohio, is now assistant night editor.

Philip A. Steinbach, a member of the news staff of the Wilmington (Del.) Every Evening, has resigned.

Harlan Thompson has assumed the duties of dramatic editor of the Kansas City Star in addition to those of assistant city editor, which position he has held for the past two years. As dramatic editor, Mr. Thompson succeeds Ralph J. Block, who is now with the New York Tribune.

Robert Hartley, Parliamentary reporter for the Victoria (B. C.) Times, has been appointed secretary to the minister of finance.

George F. Keener of New York has joined the news staff of the Wilmington (Del.) Every Evening.

Deon G. Burton, formerly with the Springfield (Ill.) News-Record, has joined the staff of the Springfield State Register.

D. Arnold has been added to the editorial department staff of the New York Sun.

James Edward Leslie is acting as Sunday editor of the Pittsburg Dispatch during the absence, on furlough, of A. Howard Carroll. The latter will likely resume his regular duties next week.

Joseph W. Zorn, who has been connected with Lorenzen, Green & Kohn, publishers' representatives, in their New York office. Is now a member of Co. 26, 8th Coast Artillery.

Donald Goss, formerly a student at Indiana University, recently joined the news staff of the Indianapolis News.

Charles A. Perrin has returned to the editorship of the Glens Falls (N. Y.) Post-Star. He resigned about eight weeks ago to join the regular army, but was in service only a short time when his arches gave way and he received an honorable discharge.

W. G. Garvin has succeeded E. W. Davidson as legislative reporter for the Springfield (Mass.) Republican. He will also continue to cover the state house for the Boston Herald and Traveler.

L. M. Davis is the new editor of the Joplin (Mo.) Herald, succeeding J. F. Williams.

Carl T. Bixby is now a member of the Raleigh News and Observer advertising staff, having been discharged from the famous Richmond Light Infantry Blues on account of physical defects that developed while in service. He was formerly with the Dapprich Advertising Agency of Richmond, Va., and the George A. Deatal Agency of Baltimore. With the News and Observer, Mr. Bixby will have charge of the copy and production department.

Claude Callan, who has conducted an editorial feature for the Fort Worth Star-Telegram for several years has gone to the Kansas City Star to run a column called "Folks and Foibles." No success to Mr. Callan has been appointed on the Star-Telegram.

Harry Crichtlow and V. F. Burnett are new additions to the Chicago

American staff. Crichtlow has worked on various papers in the West; Burnett is from Madison, Wis.

Martin Broderick of the St. Paul Daily News' reporting staff has enlisted in a little known department of military service—a regiment of foresters. He expects to leave for France by August.

C. D. Alderman, in the editorial department of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, has resigned to become sales manager of the S. H. Kleinman Realty Company in Cleveland.

Ernest Frederickson of the Mining, Oil and Industrial Record, at Salt Lake, Utah, has resigned to assume an executive railway position.

William Sullivan, of the Chicago office of the United Press, is in Springfield on vacation relief during the absence of H. J. Riefler of the Springfield bureau.

C. F. King, former advertising manager of the Chicago Herald and later connected with the Louisville Herald, has joined the advertising staff of the Chicago Evening Post.

N. D. Cotham has succeeded E. F. Cotham as editor of the Monticello (Ark.) Monticellonian. The latter has gone to war.

E. G. Harburg has resumed his old run in the Federal building for the Chicago Tribune.

Miss Alice Doane is a new reporter on the staff of the Chicago Tribune.

C. L. Chope of Ft. Bayard, N. M., is now on the telegraph desk of the Amarillo (Tex.) Daily News.

Johnstone Vance, managing editor of the New Britain (Ct.) Herald, has resigned.

William W. T. Squire, formerly police reporter for the Hartford (Ct.) Courant, is a recent addition to the city staff of the New Britain (Ct.) Herald.

WANTS NAME OF OAKES.

George W. Ochs, formerly publisher of the Philadelphia Public Ledger and now editor of the New York Times Current History Magazine and the Midwest Pictorial, has filed a petition in the Court of Common Pleas in Philadelphia for permission to Americanize the spelling of his name.

Mr. Ochs recited that his parents were born in Germany, but, upon coming to this country before they were of age, became Americans. His father serving as a Union officer in the Civil War. Mr. Ochs stated he did not wish his two sons to grow up with a German name.

Mr. Ochs proposes to call himself George W. Ochs Oakes, but the surname for his sons is to be Oakes.

NORTHCLIFFE'S SECRETARY.

W. F. Bullock, formerly New York correspondent of the London Daily Mail and the Times, is now secretary of the British War Commission in America, of which Lord Northcliffe is chairman.

MOVIE MAN WAS HOST.

Sidney Abel of the Vitagraph Company gave a supper to members of the Chicago press at the College Inn last week.

CANADA'S PAPER CONTROVERSY.

pany, composed of Canadian paper manufacturers.

It was shown that the five companies connected with the Canadian Export Paper Company, Ltd., produced over one-half of the remaining two-thirds of the total Canadian production.

There was produced a letter from one of those companies to a Canadian publisher referring the latter to the Canadian Export Paper Company, Ltd., for a supply of paper.

Commissioner Pringle repeated a combination among the manufacturers. He ruled that Mr. Tilley's statement he had made time before, that he was not interested in the question as to whether there was any question as to the nature of the business in which the Canadian Export Paper Company, Ltd., was engaged was not relevant to the inquiry and refused to allow that question to be answered. Mr. Tilley then withdrew from the case.

At the hearing on June 19 Commissioner Pringle announced that G. T. Clarkson, of Toronto, would make an independent audit of the books of the manufacturers, with a view to arriving at the actual cost of production.

Another hearing on June 27 was confined almost entirely to an examination of statements submitted by Ontario Paper Company, Ltd.

On June 30 the Minister of Customs passed a new regulation continuing for August the prices that had been fixed for the three months ending June 1, and had been continued for July. This latest regulation was made subject to revision as to price in the event of it being decided at a later date that the price fixed by it was either too high or too low.

FINDINGS OF FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

On July 9 the findings of the U. S. Federal Trade Commission as to Canadian costs, etc., were made public. These findings compared with the replies of the manufacturers to Commissioner Pringle's questionnaire as follows:

See Table A—Page 12.

The Federal Trade Commission also declared that competition in the selling of news print paper in Canada as well as in the "United States had been prevented by the manufacturers; that the power of the News Print Manufacturers' Association, of which most Canadian manufacturers were members, had been used entirely to suppress the threatened competition of three new Canadian mills, and that the organization of the Canadian Export Paper Company, Ltd., Montreal, had resulted in the entire suppression of competition in bidding for trade in the United States between the five Canadian manufacturers interested in it.

The latest hearing on July 10 and 11 was devoted almost entirely to sulphite costs. Statements as to the cost of production of sulphite were submitted by many manufacturers, and they were examined in regard to them. It was proven again that in most cases the arbitrary figures for sulphite used in the statements of cost furnished in response to Commissioner Pringle's questionnaire were considerably above the actual cost of production.

SUMMARY OF PRESENT PRODUCTION CONDITIONS.

The returns of the manufacturers to Commissioner Pringle and the evidence taken before him, showed that Canada's total production of news print paper in 1916 amounted to 584,789 tons.*

Since the beginning of 1917 the St. Maurice Paper Co., Ltd., of Cap Madeleine, Que., has commenced operations and the annual production of its present plant will be about 30,000 tons.

There have been also increases of about 15,000 tons in the annual capacity of the Ontario Paper Company, Ltd., and of about 11,000 tons in the annual capacity of the Spanish River Pulp & Paper Mills, Ltd.

These two additions make the present annual production of the news print paper mills of Canada 640,789 tons.* This production is distributed as follows:

See Table B—Page 12.

Further admissions of the use of arbitrary figures and of collusion among manufacturers to use those figures characterized the hearings of the news print paper investigation under Commissioner Pringle subsequent to the withdrawal of the daily and weekly newspapers and their Counsel, W. N. Tilley, K. C.

DEPRECIATION ALLOWED FOR FIRST TIME

J. A. Bothwell, general manager of Brompton Pulp & Paper Company, Ltd., said that in the returns of that company to Commissioner Pringle depreciation had been allowed for the first time. The allowance was at the rate of $2.95 per ton. The average amount allowed by the United States Federal Trade Commission in its table of cost in Canadian mills in the first six months of 1916 is $1.72 per ton.

SUDDEN INCREASE IN COST LARGELY DUE TO ARBITRARY FIGURES.

The statement of the Donnasconna Paper Company, Ltd., showed a sudden jump in the cost of news print paper from $29.21 per ton in 1915 to $45.39 per ton in 1916 and $50.30 per ton during the first four months of 1917.

George M. McKee, general manager of the company, admitted that the returns for 1916 and the first four months of 1917 were based on arbitrary figures of $50 per ton for sulphite and $25 per ton for ground wood, instead of the actual cost of production. Mr. McKee afterward gave the actual cost of news print paper in 1917 at $42.24 per ton ($2.11 per 100 lbs.) and the actual cost of sulphite in 1917 at $42.63 per ton.

ARBITRARY FIGURES AGREED ON BY MANUFACTURERS.

George Chahoon, Jr., president of Laurentide Co., Ltd., admitted to H. A. Stewart, K. C., counsel for the Government, that after the first session of the present investigation some of the manufacturers who make their own sulphite had discussed among themselves the prices at which sulphite and ground wood should be entered in the replies to Commissioner Pringle's questionnaire, and had decided upon $50 per ton for sulphite and $25 per ton for ground wood.

George F. Henderson, K. C., counsel for two of the manufacturers, wished to make it clear that there was no compulsion on any manufacturers, to adopt these figures, and that while some had adopted them others had not. Mr. Chahoon agreed that this was the case. He said he and J. A. Bothwell, general manager of the Brompton Pulp & Paper Company, Ltd. (also vice-president of Canadian Export Paper Company, Ltd.) had "decided that the only way to keep this thing from an investigation that was going to drag out interminably was to put ground wood and sulphite in at a fair price that it could reasonably be sold at, although not at a market price." On his return home, Mr. Chahoon telegraphed each one of the manufacturers his "personal opinion that it would be satisfactory to the commissioner if these statements were made out along these lines."

In a later examination in regard to the sulphite costs of Laurentide Company, Ltd., it was admitted that in computing the cost for 1916 the war taxes for that year, amounting to $120,000, had been taken into account.

ONE MILL GIVES 1917 AVERAGE COST AT $44.00 PER TON.

Frank Powell, manager News Pulp & Paper Company, Ltd., said the average cost of news print paper in the mill of that company during the first three months of 1917 was $44.00. This average was notwithstanding a cost of $54 per ton during March, due in part to the necessity of having to purchase some ground wood from another mill and pay for same at the rate of $40 per ton.

Mr. Powell said there had been a steady increase in cost since the beginning of the year, due to the gradual using up of supplies bought under old contracts at less than present prices.

J. M. McCarthy, vice-president of Price Brothers & Co., Ltd., (also president of Canadian Export Paper Co., Ltd.), answered in the affirmative a question of the counsel for the manufacturers as to whether "generally speaking," the statement of his company was correct.

Mr. McCarthy claimed that there had been increases of about one-third in the cost of labor and of about $5 per ton in the cost of coal. He said he was unable to answer Mr. Stewart's questions in regard to the cost of sulphite and other items.

Mr. Stewart asked whether there was anyone present who would know. Mr. McCarthy said the company's auditor was present. Mr. Stewart said he would have to ask him some questions. Commissioner Pringle suggested that it would be better to let Mr. Clarkson (the auditor appointed by the Government) go into the business of all the companies and delay the examination of the auditor for Price Bros. & Co., Ltd., until that had been done. Mr. Stewart said the auditor was present, and insisted upon examining him.

AUDITOR DISAVOWS STATEMENT.

Ronald Amy, the auditor referred to by Mr. McCarthy, said he had helped to prepare the statement that was put in by Price Bros. & Co., Ltd. In answer to Mr. Stewart's question, he said the cost of wood during the season of 1916, delivered at the company's mill, was $8 per cord, and that he thought it had been put in at that large figure in the statement furnished. Mr. Stewart handed the statement to Mr. Amy, and asked him to see if he was right. Mr. Amy said the statement shown to him was not the one he had helped to prepare.

He said: "I must say I had nothing to do with this statement. I did not prepare that one. We have been preparing one which I thought was before the Commission." He said he thought the statement shown to him was prepared on the basis of $9 per cord of wood.

Mr. Stewart proceeded to examine the witness further as to the cost delivered in 1917. Mr. McCarthy interrupted to state that it was an impossible question to answer. Mr. Stewart reminded Mr. McCarthy that he had said his accountant could give those figures. Mr. McCarthy said the accountant was there to refresh his memory. Commissioner Pringle closed the incident by stating that he would have Mr. Clarkson go to the company's mill and see what he could make out of the books.

ARBITRARY FIGURES INCREASED COST BY $16.00 PER TON.

George H. Millen, president and general manager of E. B. Eddy Company, Ltd., admitted that in the statement of that company for the first four months of 1917 sulphite had been entered at $40 per ton and ground wood had been entered at $30 per ton, although the actual costs of production during that period were $45.00 per ton for sulphite and $18.84 per ton for ground wood.

With the use of these arbitrary figures there was shown in the statement to Commissioner Pringle a cost for roll news in 1917 of $61.91 per ton. The use of the figures of actual cost given by Mr. Millen would reduce the cost in 1917 to $45.13 per ton, even that figure would include $1.10 per ton as interest on investment and $3.08 per ton for administration expense. The latter allowance is $2.43 per ton in excess of the allowance of the Federal Trade Commission for average administration expense in Canadian mills during the first six months of 1916.

At a later hearing in regard to sulphite costs, A. H. Bowness, superintendent of the news print paper mill of E. B. Eddy Company, Ltd., said the cost of sulphite in 1917 was $52.57 per ton, and the cost of ground wood in 1917 was $21.22 per ton. These figures are considerably higher than the figures of actual cost given two weeks previous by the president and general manager of the company, as stated above. Mr. Bowness figure for ground wood cost in 1916 was $17.47 per ton, and he admitted that in computing the 1917 cost the allowance for administration expense had been figured at 10 per cent of the sales, instead of the firm's usual allowance of 7 per cent.

MISTAKE IN ONTARIO PAPER COMPANY'S STATEMENT.

Stuart G. Shepard, counsel for Ontario Paper Company, Ltd., Thorold, said a mistake had been made in the statement submitted by that company, and that an amended statement would be furnished.

Warren Curtis, president and manager of the company, gave amended figures as to cost of production of news print paper that were in each case less than the figures shown in the original statement. The cost of news print paper for the first four months of 1917 was given in the original statement as $68.96 per ton.

Mr. Curtis said the actual cost was $58.21 per ton. He admitted that even this figure was increased slightly by the averaging of the costs of news print paper and rotogravure paper, which he said costs about $2.50 per ton less than news print paper. He admitted that this figure also included an allowance of about $3.50 per ton for interest on borrowed money, the plant being operated on a capital stock of $10,000.

It was shown also that during a portion of the term prior to the completion of the company's sulphite mill, it had been paying from $90 to $95 per ton for sulphite, and that this had increased the cost very considerably.

White Rock

Unsurpassed Mineral Water

Mr. Curtis admitted that the company was at a further disadvantage through being at a great distance from supplies of raw material and the necessity of bringing in those supplies by freight. He said the costs of production in the Laurentide, Abitibi and other mills that can bring in most of their raw material down stream should be less than in the plant of his company.

Mr. Curtis gave new figures of cost of sulphite and ground wood in place of the figures shown in the original statement. The first figures given were $44.53 per ton for sulphite and $16.40 per ton for ground wood. Mr. Curtis claimed that the actual costs were $47.50 per ton for sulphite and $23.60 per ton for ground wood.

HALF TONE NEWS COSTS LESS THAN ORDINARY NEWS.

One of the surprises of the hearings was the statement of Mr. Curtis that the cost of making half tone news is from 10 cents to 15 cents less per ton than the cost of making ordinary news. He said this was due to the fact that as the stock is a little heavier the production on the machine in a given time is greater. Half tone news is used by a number of rural weekly newspapers and other publications, and the selling price has been higher than the selling price of ordinary news.

SULPHITE AND GROUND WOOD COSTS.

Several other manufacturers gave figures as to the actual cost of sulphite and ground wood that were much below the arbitrary figures for these items used by many of the manufacturers in their return to Commissioner Pringle.

Even in connection with the revised figures two witnesses admitted that their respective companies had used new methods of arriving at the cost of certain items that had made the cost in the revised figures higher than it would have appeared but for the adoption of those new methods.

VARIATIONS FROM U. S. COMMISSION.

Commissioner Pringle said he could not understand why there was such a large difference between the figures arrived at by the accountants of the Federal Trade Commission after examining the books of the Canadian manufacturers, and the figures submitted by the manufacturers themselves in the present investigation.

The commissioner described the difference as very striking. H. A. Stewart, K. C., counsel for the Government, agreed with Commissioner Pringle on this point, and said he would be surprised very much if the accountants of the Federal Trade Commission were not able to uphold their findings. Mr. Stewart suggested to Commissioner Pringle that an effort be made to have those accountants come to Ottawa to testify in the present investigation. Commissioner Pringle said he would like to have them come.

Several witnesses admitted that the accountants of the Federal Trade Commission had had every opportunity to arrive at accurate cost figures in their respective plants. They had been given access to all the books and in some cases had remained as long as three days at one plant.

BEST SUPPLY CANADIAN NEWSPAPERS.

When W. H. Bierman, general manager of the Belgo-Canadian Pulp & Paper Company, Ltd., was on the stand, Commissioner Pringle taxed him with refusing to supply paper to certain Canadian newspapers. It was stated that two Belgo-Canadian papers had been buying of its selling agent through one of its selling agents and that on taking up the matter with the company direct, with a view to securing the rates fixed by the Minister of Customs, the company had refused to supply them.

Mr. Bierman said the company's objection to supplying these papers was because of the small quantities required. At least one of the orders was for a carload. Commissioner Pringle informed Mr. Bierman that the newspapers were entitled to be supplied, and Mr. Bierman agreed to supply them.

SATISFIED WITH RULING.

At the hearing on July 10, counsel for the manufacturers protested against the articles that were appearing in the Canadian newspapers in regard to the proceedings of the investigation. They said these reports were distorted.

Commissioner Pringle said it wouldn't do to be too thin-skinned about the matter—the publishers were vitally interested in the investigation.

He said he had not read any of the articles except one in regard to Mr. Tilley's withdrawal as counsel for the publishers, and in regard to that article he stated that he did not think it fair for the press to state that the publishers had withdrawn because the commissioner's ruling had balked a complete investigation of the cost and supply of news print paper. Commissioner Pringle said that the more he considered the matter the more satisfied he was with his ruling.

FINDINGS OF U. S. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION AS TO CANADIAN COSTS.

Further evidence of the inflation of costs in the replies of the Canadian paper manufacturers to Commissioner Pringle's questionnaire has been provided through the publication of the complete report of the Federal Trade Commission on the news print paper industry. This report makes public the detailed findings of the commission as to costs in Canadian news print paper mills. These findings are based on an examination of the books of the Canadian manufacturers by the commission's accountants.

NEWS PRINT COSTS $27.43 PER TON IN FIRST HALF OF 1916.

The report shows that in ten Canadian mills that produced about 75 per cent of the total Canadian production, the average cost of news print paper during the first six months of 1916 was $27.43 per ton. The detailed figures for that period and the three previous years are as follows:

See Table C—Page 12.

The commission reports that while the average cost in ten Canadian mills during the first half of 1916 was $27.43 per ton, the cost in four of those mills was less than $27 per ton, and the cost in one mill was $25.68 per ton.

It will be noted that the commission's allowance for depreciation during the period covered by the above table ranges from $1.09 to $1.72 a ton. The allowances for depreciation in the returns of the Canadian manufacturers to Commissioner Pringle ranged up to $4.65 a ton.

COSTS FOR SECOND HALF OF 1916.

No figures are given as to the cost in Canadian mills during the second half of 1916, but it is stated that returns for that period from the principal mills of United States showed an average increase of $1.50 per ton over the cost in the first half of 1916. If there was a similar increase in cost in Canada, the average cost of news print paper in the principal Canadian mills during the second half of 1916, according to the Federal Trade Commission's figures, would be $28.93 per ton. The costs for 1916 shown by the Canadian manufacturers in their original returns to Commissioner Pringle ranged from $42.39 to $52.48 per ton.

SULPHITE COSTS ABOUT HALF MANUFACTURERS' FIGURES.

The detailed finding of the commission as to sulphite costs in Canadian mills are as follows:

See Table F—Page 12.

The cost of sulphite in Canadian mills during the second half of 1916 is not shown in the report, but it is stated that returns for that period from a number of mills in United States showed an increase in cost of $1.75 per ton. If there was a similar increase in cost in Canada, the average cost in eight Canadian mills during the second six months of 1916, according to the figures of the Federal Trade Commission, would be $28.60 per ton. An arbitrary figure of $50 per ton was used by most of the Canadian manufacturers in their replies to Commissioner Pringle's questionnaire.

MANUFACTURERS' FIGURES OF GROUND WOOD COSTS CUT IN TWO.

Most of the Canadian manufacturers in their returns to Commissioner Pringle for 1916 put in ground wood at an arbitrary figure of $25 per ton. The Federal Commission places the cost in ten Canadian mills during the first six months of 1916 at $10.54 per ton. The Commission's detailed statement for that period and the three previous years is as follows:

See Table D—Page 12.

SELLING PRICES AND PROFITS OF CANADIAN MILLS.

That ten Canadian mills, producing 75 per cent of the total Canadian production, earned during the first six months of 1916 profits of $9.54 per ton, is one of the findings of the Commission. How this figure is reached is shown by the following table:

The net cost in Canadian mills during the first six months of 1916 was $4.60 per ton, or 23 cents per 100 lbs., less than the net cost in the mills of the United States.

The average selling expense of the Canadian mills, as shown by the Commission's report, is over 5 per cent higher than the average selling expense of the mills in United States. In view of the discussion before Commissioner Pringle in regard to the inclusion in the returns of Abitibi Power & Paper Co., Ltd., of an allowance of $1.50 per ton to Geo. H. Mead & Company, Dayton, Ohio, it is interesting to note that the average selling expense of the mills in United States during the first six months of 1916 was 50 cents per ton.

EXISTENCE OF A COMBINE IN CANADA CHARGED BY COMMISSION.

The commission finds that competition in the selling of news print paper both in Canada and United States has been prevented by the allotment of customers or by the non-interference by members of the News Print Manufacturers' Association with the customers of any other member. It is stated that this organization includes practically all of the Canadian manufacturers, and that its executive committee of five includes George H. Mead, president of Spanish River Pulp & Paper Mills, Ltd., and of George H. Mead & Company, of Dayton, Ohio (which sells the entire product of both the Spanish River and the Abitibi Companies); J. H. A. Acer, sales manager of Laurentide Company, Ltd., E. W. Backus, president of Fort Frances Pulp & Paper Company, Ltd., and G. H. P. Gould, of Donnacona Paper Company, Ltd.

These five Canadian companies that are directly represented on the executive committee are shown to have produced over 5 per cent of the total Canadian production in 1916. The meetings of the executive committee of the association, it is stated, are held alternately in New York, Montreal, and Chicago.

It is charged by the commission that the power of the News Print Manufacturers' Association entirely to suppress the threatened competition of new mills, has been exercised in the case of three new Canadian mills. It is stated that the customers required by two of these companies in order to keep their production off the competitive market were surrendered to them pro rata by members of the association.

The commission states that "The increase in price has been due in part to the fact that free competition has been seriously restricted in the news print paper industry. Important manufacturers in the United States and Canada were banded together to secure unreasonable profits."

HOW CANADIAN EXPORT PAPER CO., LTD., SUPPRESSED COMPETITION.

Under the heading of "Evidence of violations of anti-trust laws," some interesting information is given in the report in regard to the Canadian Export Paper Company, Ltd., of Montreal, whose business W. N. Tilley, K. C., representing the daily and weekly newspapers in the investigation under Commissioner Pringle, wished to probe.

It was the refusal of Commissioner Pringle to permit that probing that led to the withdrawal of the daily and weekly newspapers from the investigation.

The Federal Trade Commission states that the organization of the Canadian Export Paper Company, Ltd., was urged by the secretary of the News Print Paper Manufacturers' Association; that the tonnage placed at its disposal by the Canadian manufacturers who compose it is sold as though it were the product of one concern; that the proceeds of the sale are prorated among the interested manufacturers, and that it has resulted in the entire suppression of competition for trade in United States between the five companies interested in it.

INFLATION OF COST FIGURES URGED BY SECRETARY OF ASSOCIATION.

The commission reports that "two campaigns among the news print manufacturers were prosecuted through the secretary of the News Print Manufacturers' Association, urging that such manufacturers take steps to show general and large increase in costs as a justification for proposed sharp advance in prices."

The first campaign was in the winter of 1915-1916, and apparently failed to make the desired showing. The report states that "a number of mills answered that there had been no particular increase in costs, or that if slight increases had occurred, they had been offset by certain savings."

The second campaign was in May and June, 1916, and the report states that "it was then emphatically impressed upon the mills that in their cost statements all materials used should, regardless of actual costs, be figured as though bought in the current open market, when such was not the case." The similarity between these alleged instructions and the methods used by many of the Canadian manufacturers in preparing their returns to Commissioner Pringle is striking.

PAPER TROUBLES IN PARIS; PRICES GOING UP.

Senator Humbert, editor and owner of the Paris (France) Journal, has a new war cry. His old one was "Cannon and Munitions;" his new one is "Paper." He is clamoring for the development of the paper industry in order to obviate the disappearance of newspapers through lack of raw material. The Senator asserts that the available supplies will be exhausted within three months.

Various palliatives have been tried with no decisive result. Some Paris newspapers have appeared as a single sheet four days a week. The further effort to reduce consumption underlies a movement to increase the price of the one cent newspapers to two cents.

The latest born of Paris newspapers, Le Pays, a journal which makes a specialty of pacifism of the Germano-socialistic brand, refers to this movement. It says:

"The French dailies are now studying the question of raising their price on August 1 to 2 cents and increasing their subscription rates in proportion. If the project is adopted unanimously by our contemporaries we will conform to their decision. Nevertheless, we notify our readers that those subscribing before August 1 will not be asked later to pay any increase."

BOOKS USEFUL TO EDITORS AND ADVERTISERS.

"BUSINESS FINANCE," by William H. Lough, former professor of finance, New York University School of Commerce Accounts and Finance; Ronald Press Company, publisher.

As its name indicates, this book deals with the every day financial problems of the private business concern. The previous literature on the subject is scanty and the book to a considerable extent breaks fresh ground. The chapter on "Financial Standards" is especially interesting and we hope that Mr. Lough and others will further the work of investigation in this particular field.

"SOME LEGAL PHASES OF CORPORATE FINANCING, REORGANIZATION AND REGULATION" by Francis Lynde Steison, James Byrne, Paul D. Cravath, George W. Wickersham, Gilbert H. Montague, George S. Coleman, William D. Guthrie; the Macmillan Company, publisher.

This volume is a compilation of addresses delivered in 1916 before the Association of the Bar of the City of New York. Lawyers of wide experience in dealing with the organization and reorganization and matters connected with the regulation of corporations are the contributors. The general public is fortunate in being able to have at its disposal the results of the long contact of these men with important corporate affairs.

"PRINCIPLES OF ACCOUNTING," by Stephen Gilman; La Salle University, publisher.

The purpose of this book is to present the basic principles of the science of accounting in a graphic and comprehensible manner. The graphic form is effectively used in diagrams, charts and concrete examples. Although intended primarily for those having bookkeeping training, the volume is clearly written and should considerably interest the layman.

"CONDITIONS OF LABOR IN AMERICAN INDUSTRY," by W. Jett Lauck and Edgar Sydenstricker; Funk & Wagnalls, publishers.

No American who wishes to know the exact conditions of American industry with regard to labor at the present critical moment in our nation's history can afford to neglect this really important report and summary of many recent investigations of facts concerning wages and working conditions. The data is intelligently presented and the general or editorial writer will find in this book a helpful up-to-date source book on labor.

"AMERICAN WORLD POLICIES," by Walter E. Weyl, Ph. D.; Macmillan Company, publisher.

"American World Policies" is hardly equal to the author's last book, "The New Democracy." It does not bring the same sense of conviction nor carry the same weight of authority. But it is nevertheless a real contribution to the literature of "economic internationalism." The reader will not want for satisfaction for his attention. He will be repaid in profit and in pleasure.

NEWS NOTES OF CIRCULATORS.

Through what is considered a remarkable newspaper feat, the Brooklyn Eagle was able to notify the Brooklyn and Long Island public of the result of the army draft by printing the actual names and addresses of the young men who are called.

As soon as the numbers were drawn at Washington, the Eagle was able to identify the Brooklyn and Long Island men to whom they applied, and by a remarkable system of tabulation involving the employment of a big extra force of tabulators and typewriters, the names of those drawn were printed in the Eagle's columns in addition to the call number and their red ink numbers.

On Saturday morning in an eight page extra, the Eagle published all the names drawn that will be called within ten days for examination.

Long before the extra was off the press the publication office of the Eagle was crowded to the doors by young men and fathers wanting to buy copies of it.

In the regular edition of Saturday afternoon the Eagle published the names of those drawn later in the draft. Before the draft, the Eagle published in its columns, and also in booklet form the boundaries of all exemption board districts, their location etc., giving complete instructions on just what to do and how to do it.

MISSISSIPPIANS PLAN.

Plans for the year were mapped out by the board of governors of the Mississippi Press Association at a meeting held in Jackson.

The board of governors includes Walker Wood, Winona, chairman; V. B. Jmes, Columbus, secretary; Guy P. Clarke, Clarksdale; C. N. Harris, Canton; W. A. Bean, Amory; J. L. Gillespie, Greenwood.

A PRIZE WINNER.

William B. McCormick, the Chicago American's city hall man, won the prize bonus for the year for his good work in finding a method by which the Chicago city council could revoke its vote affirming Mayor Thompson's school board appointees. McCormick was given a $50 prize and a boost in salary for showing how the trick could be turned.

"FUZZY" BACK IN CHICAGO.

L. F. ("Fuzzy") Woodruff, newspaper man-at-large, is back on the telegraph desk of the Chicago Examiner after a considerable absence, during which he served on the Georgian and other Atlanta newspapers. "Fuzzy" has about as wide a newspaper acquaintance as any man in Chicago.

80,000 TONS PAPER PROMISED.

TO BE BROUGHT ON MARKET AND DISTRIBUTED BY THE A. N. P. A.

The current bulletin of the A. N. P. A. paper committee says:

"The recent tendencies of the print paper and pulp market have been decidedly interesting and satisfactory."

Pulp is very soft and very little moving.

"Prices on print continue to show a marked drop, very much more than can be accounted for by the usual summer slump. Curtailment of consumption has been of great additional benefit, which apparently to date has more than offset the tendency of some of the smaller mills to shut down for summer repairs.

"The present market is in such shape that it would apparently take a very elaborate shut-down to bring about again a starved condition. If consumption can be maintained at its present point until about November, we may hope for substantially no higher prices than exists today.

"Mills throughout the country are reported to be urging publishers to take in more stock.

"Practically all mills appear to have stock to offer, though it is usually done in as diplomatic a way as possible to avoid the impression that a surplus exists.

"Large spot orders are reported to have been placed during the week at 3 1/10 and a number of contract renewals at 3 cents f. o. b. mill. On the other hand, contract renewals are reported, particularly for smaller consumers, at 3 1/4, and spot quantities at 3.75, which has been the highest price reported asked during the last two weeks. This is an enormous cut over old prices under similar conditions. While nothing yet is reported over 3 cents, publishers should feel greatly relieved that the present very acute conditions make prices no worse than they were at the end of 1916.

"The paper committee particularly urges all publishers to avoid stocking up and buy only for immediate requirements, in order to hold the price at its present point or better. There is no very large danger immediately of sufficient mills shutting down to meet such a contingency, although without doubt a number of them would shut down.

"The possibility of a general strike is reported in some quarters to be serious, and in others as pure fancy. It is always, however, a possibility, in spite of the fact that paper makers have a year's agreement with the unions.

"We now know for a certainty that about 80,000 tons of new paper will be brought into this market under the auspices of the A. N. P. A. and carefully distributed.

"The prime necessity at the present time is careful buying and continued insistence on economies in our own consumption, as well as urging similar economies on the users of wrapping paper, book and other grades.

SHEET STOCK AVAILABLE.

"The paper committee will have available within three or four weeks a very large tonnage of sheet news in any size desired. It may be bought in either ton or carload lots f. o. b. New York at a price substantially under the market. Terms are cash with order.

Applications for this may be addressed to the Paper Committee of the A. N. P. A., World Building, New York, immediately.

WATER POWERS AND MILLS.

"The paper committee would again urge all members to use all efforts to aid in securing the immediate passage of the water power legislation at this session of Congress.

"The passage of this legislation will have a most important effect upon the future source of newspaper supply and is of definite and specific interest to every publisher. Aside from this, the development of the water powers in the country, is imperatively needed for the general welfare of the entire nation."

"Unless this legislation is passed it will be impossible to finance paper mill undertakings that have their power sources in the public domain. We consider this one of the most important factors affecting future prices of paper.

"The committee now has before it propositions which are being held in abeyance awaiting the result of this legislation and which promise to further add to the news paper tonnage, but which cannot be financed under the existing laws.

"The time is short; therefore we would urge that you give this matter your immediate attention both in your editorial columns and directly with your representatives in Congress."

SYRACUSE HOUSEWARMING.

Happy speeches by men of the newspaper profession, good songs and music, many good things to eat and a spirit of good fellowship that kept all in a happy frame of mind marked the "housewarming" at the new home of the Syracuse (N. Y.) Journal on the night of July 17.

The management of the Journal had as guests at a sumptuous banquet laid in the composing room, the employees and their wives and invited friends to the number of 230, and from 6.30 o'clock until nearly midnight all strove to outdo the other in having a good time. Following a reception and inspection of the building in which each of the employees located his her future space in the new home, all gathered at the banquet tables.

There was not a dull moment during the entire evening from the time H. D. Burrill, publisher of the Journal, seated the assemblage until the strains of the last dance died away and the tired but happy crowd departed for home.

High tribute to the management of the newspaper was paid by Roy Howard, president of the United Press; John Budd, national advertising representative, and other speakers. Mr. Burrill praised the men and women of his "family" who strive each day to make of the Journal a newspaper that is even more interesting.

FLORIDA PUBLISHERS WILL PAY $4.50 FOR PAPER.

The Florida Press Association, working through a special paper committee, has made an arrangement for a paper supply through the Virginia Paper Company by which the publishers of the state will save from $100,000 to $150,000 annually, according to an announcement just made.

The rate made by the paper company on news print is $4.50 per hundred, against $6.25, the price some of the publishers are now paying. The Florida Press Association includes 204 newspaper publishers and 385 job printers.

A FINANCIAL AD GUIDE.

The Investment Bankers' Association's board of governors, at a meeting in Chicago on July 20, planned to get out a guide on fraudulent financial advertising to send to newspapers, magazines and brokers.

FORD CHANGES ACTION.

Henry Ford has dismissed his million-dollar libel suit in the Federal Court, Chicago, against the Chicago Tribune and has begun a new suit in a Detroit court in its place.

ANOTHER SMASHING BEAT FOR

Beats Nearly Every Day

From Lima (O.) Times-Democrat,

It is pleasing to report we were not only getting our numbers out on the bulletin board FIRST, but in twenty minutes after we hung out "258" the opposition (served by United Press) had a reporter copying our numbers and a girl carrying them to their own board two blocks away.

HOWARD BURBA,
Editor.

From Harrisburg (Pa.) Evening News.

On behalf of my associates I want to send to you this note, simply as evidence of our admiration for the speed with which the I.N.S. delivered to us the draft numbers. The service was so rapid that the only way we could measure it was by checking up the gaps between it and its rivals.

DEAN HOFFMAN,
Managing Editor.

From Evanston (Ill.) Index.

Through your service we were able to print more names and numbers of Evanston men drawn, giving the order in which they will be examined, in our edition of Friday night than did the Chicago Tribune Saturday morning. If all newspaper editors liked the International as well as we do, there would be no other news services.

JAMES L. LEE,
City Editor.

THANKED BY THE UNITED

MANAGER INTERNATIONAL NEWS SERVICE

Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir:

I feel it my duty, and it certainly is my pleasure, to thank your service for the problem of the transmission and publication.

This task was performed with remarkable expedition. The home in the land was affected by the draft, I consider not that you have performed a patriotic duty of no small moment.

On Friday, July 20, the drawing in Washington of the numbers in the papers had printed since the Civil War. These numbers interested a great many people.

The three big news services of America, International News Service, United Press, and Associated Press, were the BEST test of their comparative merits that could be devised. All three did this story to the best of their ability. IT WAS THE SUPREME TEST!

IN NEW YORK

The Evening Journal—(I.N.S. only)—was on the street at 6.00 p. m.

The Evening Globe—(A.P. only)—was on the street at 6.15 p. m.

The Evening Mail—(U.P. and A.P.)—was on the street at 6.30 p. m.

IN BOSTON

The American—(I.N.S. only)—was on the street at 2.30 p. m.

The Evening Traveler—(U.P. and A.P.)—was on the street at 3.00 p. m., later than the American, with 500 fewer numbers.

The American—(I.N.S. only)—followed this edition of the Traveler at 3.30, with 2800 numbers.

The Globe—(A.P. only)—was on the street at 3.20 p. m. with 1000 numbers.

IN CHICAGO

The American—(I.N.S. only)—was on the street at 5.55 p. m.

The News—(A.P. only)—was on the street at 5.57 p. m. with 1000 numbers.

The Post—(U.P. and A.P.)—was on the street at 5.56 p. m. with 1000 numbers.

Consider the above figures, and then give one guess as to which service was the best. The answer is obvious. It was the International News Service, gazing for its poor service on the ground that it had to move slowly to avoid the draft.

HOW WAS IT DONE?

It was done because the I.N.S. has mastered the science of gathering news.

It was done because the I.N.S. gets and keeps the best men available.

It was done because the I.N.S. telegraph operators, the highest paid in the world, work these numbers and worked so fast, and yet without errors, that competing services were out of the game.

It was done because the word SERVICE in the title International News Service is not a mere boast.

Every member of our organization and every one of our solicitors has had general advertising agency experience. With our five offices we completely cover the country and have seventeen active solicitors continually securing business for our papers.

We do not bill or collect. We spend all our time in getting business for the papers we represent.

The class of papers we represent and the volume of business they carry prove conclusively we lead as representatives of newspapers in the national advertising field.

THE WHY AND WHEREFORE OF THE "SPECIAL."

HOW THE BUSINESS STARTED—WHAT IT HAS DONE AND IS DOING FOR NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING.

In gathering its Directory information THE FOURTH ESTATE found that there are many publishers of newspapers, advertising agents and national advertisers who have anything but a clear conception of what a "special representative" of a newspaper is and the service he renders.

Many publishers in smaller cities, when asked if they had a representative, replied: "Certainly, Advertising Agency in New York or Chicago is our representative. We pay it commission for getting business for us."

Many others had only a vague idea.

So THE FOURTH ESTATE coupled with its directory compilation the gathering together, from all possible angles, information on the "special representative," his origin and development; the service he renders the publisher, the national advertiser, and the advertising agent.

This information, like the Directory it accompanies, has never appeared in any publication before. THE FOURTH ESTATE takes pleasure in dedicating it to the cause of more and better newspaper advertising through bringing about a complete understanding of the "special representative" from all sides.

A short historical sketch of the "special representative" business seems appropriate to lead into the broader details of the subject.

In a way, the uncertain knowledge of the "special" is explained by the comparatively short time that "specials" have been a recognized part of the newspaper business and by the fact that their offices are located only in the larger cities, where the national advertising accounts "grow."

L. H. Crall is generally believed to have been the first "real" special representative, locating in New York in 1875 and laying down many principles which have guided the business during the forty-two years that have intervened.

Crall was originally an advertising solicitor in Cincinnati and was accustomed to make periodical trips to New York to develop new accounts and to handle the renewal of old contracts. In the course of his travels he came into contact with E. B. Mack and F. T. McFadden, who were also advertising men from the banks of the Ohio River.

As time passed, their business increased and more and more of their days were passed in New York.

Then the "big idea" occurred to Mr. Crall—why not have a man in New York all the time looking after the advertising interests of one or more newspapers on a commission basis?

With the outline of his idea firmly fixed in his mind, he called upon several publishers of important newspapers and as he was to pay all expenses out of a 15 per cent. commission on whatever "foreign" business he secured, the plan was accepted by enough prospects to make Mr. Crall's proposition worth while.

Then he moved permanently to New York, taking offices in the Bennett Building, at the corner of Nassau and Fulton streets, as representative of the Cincinnati Times, Chicago Inter Ocean, Milwaukee Sentinel and Cincinnati Enquirer.

He was not long alone in the field, for his old friend, Mr. Mack, jumped in a month later, as did Mr. McFadden, who came a few weeks later.

TIMES HAVE CHANGED.

The pioneer trio found conditions prevailing that have since passed into history. The general agent had a grip of steel both on the newspaper publisher and the national advertiser, who was but a distant cousin of the present members of his class.

Because of their strength, the general agencies of the seventies cut the newspapers' rates as deeply as they could and took as large commissions as the publisher could be bulldozed into paying.

"Checking copies," with their attendant blessings and evils, were unknown to that day, the advertiser taking the agent's word that the copy was run according to specifications.

Weekly editions of several large dailies dominated the field, by cutting their rates far more than their daily contemporaries.

What national advertising there was—and financially it was large—was limited to comparatively few fields, with lottery and medicine accounts far in the lead. Neither class was guided by "truth-in-advertising" standards, either.

Newspaper circulation statements were rather vague and subject to liberal discounts at the hands of the space-buyer—if he regarded them at all.

That was the state of affairs which confronted the early "specials" and they realized that some reforms had to be effected if they were to start a permanent institution.

They began by introducing bona-fide circulation statements and showed the advertiser that he could not afford to "pass up" a medium of boundless possibilities, simply because the weeklies suffered their rates to be cut.

That attended to, they turned their attention to collections. Settlement previously had been on a semi-annual basis and certain advertisers took advantage of that fact to run up large bills with newspapers, developing nomadic habits when the collector visited the address which was given on their letter-heads.

Mesars Crall, Mack and McFadden put collections on a monthly basis and when one gentleman who had used large space decided to go out of business without paying his debts, they formed a cordon around his office from dawn to dark and caught him, collecting every cent that was due their newspapers.

The trio developed proprietary medicine advertising to the limit, then went after other business, little by little forcing the medicine man from the top rung of the advertising ladder.

With the introduction of so many unaccustomed lines of national business, publishers woke up to the fact that, while they were making more money than before, they were not making as much as the new fields permitted.

Rate-cards, whose primary function seemed to be to conceal rates, were issued. But despite their nebulous information, rates were doubled. The advertising agent applied his usual process of downward revision but met more determined opposition, with the result that the publisher received far better rates than before.

BRAIN WORK.

In getting new business, Mr. Crall made excellent use of a fertile imagination, which was well displayed at the time of the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia in 1876. On that occasion he carried the battle into the bailiwick of the general agencies and came away victorious by capitalizing the rivalry of several piano manufacturers for exposition awards.

With no agency intervening to cut rates and exact practical commissions, he induced one of the piano firms to advertise its claims in his list of papers. Naturally its competitors saw the point and followed suit.

Then Mr. Crall played his "ace." He telegraphed the copy of his client to the dailies he represented, beating all competitive houses by one day to a week, and it wasn't very long before the other rivals fell into line, giving him complete control of their advertising and allowing him to telegraph their copy every night.

He followed up this triumph over the general agent by securing the account of the B. T. Babbitt Company, the soap manufacturer, and placing it to the general satisfaction of all concerned.

Another achievement of the first "special" was the settling of the Eastern territory, which he insisted covered the Atlantic seaboard from Maine to Key West and extended west to Buffalo and Pittsburg. That settlement is still in force.

THE FIELD WIDENS.

The next "special" to join their ranks of the pioneer trio was S. C. Beckwith, who brought the interests of the Omaha Bee and the Leadville (Colo.) Chronicle to New York shortly after 1880. Others soon followed and the special agency business took on the form that it holds to the present time.

The dual interests of the first "specials" were separated and the representation of the advertiser was returned to the general agent, leaving the "specials" free to fight for more business at higher and firmer rates for the newspapers.

SOME PRESENT-DAY FIGURES.

There are now about 175 general agencies in New York and more than 1,000 national advertisers. Approximately 1,600 American and Canadian dailies are represented in New York by about 75 special agents, with about the same number in Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, St. Louis, Detroit, Kansas City, St. Paul, Cleveland, San Francisco and Atlanta have either main or branch offices of the successors to the pioneers of 1875.

NO COMPARISON.

Jefferson Thomas, the Jacksonville advertising agent, says:

"THE FOURTH ESTATE report of the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association meeting was excellent—those of other trade papers did not compare with it."

MORE AND BETTER ADVERTISING.

SECURED FOR NEWSPAPERS BY COOPERATION OF "SPECIAL" AND AGENTS.

By E. S. Cox, of Cone, Lorenzen & Woodman.

Twenty-three years in the special agency business have proved to me three things are necessary to make a success of the special agency business.

One is, always tell the truth about circulation and conditions.

Second, to have the same rate on a paper for everybody, and Third, to represent your own papers intelligently and to know all about those papers and have the data and details and conditions of each paper ready for immediate presentation to every advertiser and agent when he wants it.

Thirty-six years ago, that is in October, 1881, I started in the advertising business with my father. I have been in the business continually ever since. I can remember as a boy when we would get business with the agent's commission 25 per cent., the bills payable quarterly, and most of the business we got was patent medicine advertising.

The advertising agent had a very hard time to make any money and a great deal of business was placed direct because the papers did not protect the agent and did not have uniform rates.

In those days there were only two or three special agents. The whole business was run on the system of getting business, without regard to rate cards or any fixed business methods.

During the past thirty-six years I have seen the business change, until today it is absolutely run on a clean, straight, legitimate basis, where the rates are uniform, the circulation is known and proved, whereas in the old days it was simply a matter of guess work—and every man had his own guess.

The advertising agents today create new business. With the help of and through the work done by the special representative, they buy advertising space in the different papers at the best price. Work done by the wise special agent with his paper and by the paper itself makes advertising pay the advertiser. Consequently through the combined forces of the advertising agent and the advertiser and the intelligent publisher the business is constantly increasing and will continue to do so.

I believe the special agents have had more to do with legitimizing and putting on a sound business basis the newspaper advertising business than any other one department of the business. Without their work the general agents could not do as they are doing, and the newspapers could not be in touch with the situation and know how to handle the advertising which they receive.

I believe that the present splendid condition of the advertising business is solely the result of the work done by the special representative, as the representative of the newspaper, working for the interests of the newspaper, and by the advertising agencies.

Through the working together of these forces, rates have been made fair and uniform and are today absolutely maintained. No one who knows anything about the business ever thinks of cutting a rate any more.

The advertising agent has recognized this fact and because of the protection given him by the reprerepresentatives in refusing to allow agent's commission direct to advertisers, the advertising agent has been enabled to spend more money and to create millions of dollars' worth of new business of all kinds.

I helped to form in Chicago years ago the first special representatives' association, and was president of that body for several years. I helped to form the first association here in New York.

The sole object of both associations, after all, was to get business for the newspapers, but it was the consensus of opinion then as it is now that the newspaper, to succeed, to carry a profitable amount of national advertising, to get paid for it promptly and, beyond all else, to have it pay the advertiser, must protect the general advertising agent by giving him absolutely uniform rates, by refusing to allow the agent's commission direct and by co-operating with him through the special representatives, the promotion department and all the other lines that a newspaper can use to make advertising pay.

I have known the publisher of THE FOURTH ESTATE, Ernest Birmingham, for a great many years. I believe that the work done by THE FOURTH ESTATE has been a great help in making the newspaper business and the advertising business the success it is today, and I want to congratulate you on the splendid paper you are publishing and to wish you every success and happiness in the future.

ADVERTISING IN THE SEVENTIES.

"MAY THE BEST MAN WIN" WAS THE CRY IN EARLY SPACE-BUYING BATTLES.

By F. St. JOHN RICHARDS,
Of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A generation or so ago newspaper space was bought by, rather than sold to, the "foreign" advertiser. Advertising managers devoted their energies to increasing their local advertising, but gave very little consideration to the out-of-town purchaser of space. They sat in their offices and waited for the buyer to come to them.

The larger part of the "foreign" advertising was made up of proprietary medicine copy and traveling salesmen often combined the making of newspaper contracts with selling their wares to the trade, in the cities and towns they visited.

Rates were flexible, circulation stated in very general terms, and making a contract usually meant a dicker, and may the best man win.

One buyer had a reputation for always offering half the asking price of the publication. Sellers soon learned to double their usual rates in dealing with him.

It was the occasional custom for a general advertising agent to be commissioned by several advertisers whose aggregate copy would make large bulk. This gentleman would travel all over the country and make contracts with newspapers for all of his clients, demanding such concession in price and location as the large copy displayed before the eyes of the newspaper publisher would seem to justify him in expecting.

There has always been some difference of opinion as to which of the three was the original "special agent" in New York, but it seems to be a fact that F. T. McFadden, L. H. Crall and E. B. Mack were the pioneers in a business that has grown to be one of the most important newspapers are without space selling representatives in New York, Chicago and other cities and a large number of smaller papers enjoy co-operatively similar advantages.

The three pioneer special agents soon had a number of companions who realized the sound business principle involved and a few years found such men as N. M. Sheffield, A. Frank Richardson, H. D. Hanover, C. J. Bills, J. D. Lorentz, S. C. Beckwith, Henry Bright, Wallace G. Brooke, C. H. Eddy, T. B. Eiker, and others making contracts in New York for newspapers all over the country and not only giving satisfaction to the publishers and making money for themselves, but obtaining for the advertisers better service than they had ever been able to secure under the old arrangements.

Of the men who were in the business in New York during the life of the three pioneers, there remain at the present time actively engaged: Wallace G. Brooke, Charles H. Eddy, R. J. Kenworthy, H. E. Crall, H. D. La Coste, J. T. Beckwith, J. D. Lorentz and the writer.

ONE OF THE FIRST "SPECIALS."

SIEGFRIED STOOD SQUARELY
FOR TRUTH AND HIGH STANDARDS.

By FREDERICK H. SIEGFRIED.

When THE FOURTH ESTATE asked the writer for a brief sketch for its "Special Representative Number," I replied that I was afraid that this time the editor was "in the right church but the wrong pew," as such experience as I have had in the agency field—following some years of hard work hugely enjoyed—has been as a general agent, not as a "special." Then the editor, possibly under the impression that I had previously been associated in business with my revered father, the late A. H. Siegfried, flatteringly repeated the request which I am happy to honor by a reminiscence, as I can recall nothing with greater pride than my father's business career, so much of which was spent in this vital department of our now gigantic publishing industry.

A. H. Siegfried, at the time of his passing, in 1895, was general manager of the Curtis Publishing Company, the closing years of his life having been devoted to the business re-organization and broad constructive planning for that paragon of magazine-makers.

But he was probably best known among those who have made printers' ink the prime factor in American development as a special representative.

Following distinguished advertising service under Colonel Henry Watterson and Mr. Haldeman, on the Louisville Courier-Journal and the old Commercial of the same city, then as an executive of the St. Paul Pioneer Press, in the halcyon Driscoll days, he came to New York in 1882 as eastern manager of the Chicago Daily News and Record. Soon afterward he made Montclair, N. J., the home town for his family, which it has been ever since.

An important local historical work said regarding him, about the time of his removal to Philadelphia:

"The sound integrity and high principle of the ideas and methods of the Chicago Record and Daily News and the Ladies' Home Journal are well adapted to him and he to them."

Mr. Siegfried has always been known as a one-rate, definite and open-minded newspaper man—positive, decisive, square-cut, and with a high sense of business honor. He believes that newspaper circulation should be measured as accurately as dry goods or land, and that advertising has, and always should have, a definite and relatively inflexible basis of value and sale.

"As an evidence that this is not mere theory with him, it is a fact that he once squarely declined an order which ran up into five figures, because the advertiser wished to 'cut' it by twenty cents, simply that he might be able to say that he had 'cut' the published rates of the Chicago Daily News. Afterward, Mr. Siegfried secured the order at his own price, the 20 cents included.

"Nothing more quickly irritates him than assault upon right newspaper methods. But while unconquerably resolute where a sense of duty is concerned, those who come oftenest in contact with him know best the warm gentility of his nature and disposition, and his frank readiness to aid those who ask the benefit of his influence or advice. His sound judgment and good common sense, taken in connection with his wide knowledge of men and affairs, have brought him much into demand for counsel and information by young men generally.

"It not infrequently happens that he is consulted by representatives of newspapers as to facts which concern their own publications. The confidence he thus unconsciously invites from his contemporaries and competitors indicates not only the extensiveness of his information and soundness of advice given, but reveals the broad sympathies of his nature, as well as its entire freedom from petty and narrow prejudices."

From earliest youth, A. H. Siegfried had vision almost prophetic in its accuracy as to the vast development of publishing—the business and the profession—which has been so abundantly vindicated since his untimely death 22 years ago. Representing the third generation of an unbroken family line of devotion to publishing as a vocation, maintained today in its fourth cycle by his younger son, Laurence B. Siegfried, of Boston, and now in Naval Reserve, and by the writer, which has continued since almost the beginning of the last century, he exemplified by his own career his own cardinal principles by starting all things at their true beginnings and then working systematically upward—basing each step upon actual experience; by unswerving fidelity to an ever lofty but always sane ideal, by unalterable adherence to truth and by doing anything which he felt worthy of doing at all with all of his might.

It was not my intention to make use of the opportunity courteously afforded by THE FOURTH ESTATE, of which my father was a charter subscriber, as a means of recording a panegyric; but publishing men of the latter's generation, who may chance to see this statement, will ungrudgingly admit its justification.

WORTH FEW HUNDRED TIMES THE COST.

Charles S. Patterson, efficiency specialist, writes:

"In my traveling constantly, coming in contact with the heads of business departments of daily newspapers everywhere, it is quite the rule to find that the business manager or manager of advertising or circulation who is wanting in efficiency is also not a subscriber to THE FOURTH ESTATE or any other craft paper.

"These men could make themselves worth to their employers a few hundred times as much each year as a subscription to THE FOURTH ESTATE would cost."

SPECIAL'S SERVICE TO PUBLISHERS.

AN INTERMEDIARY BETWEEN AGENT, ADVERTISER AND NEWSPAPER.

By DAN A. CARROLL.

The function of the special representative in the national advertising field has broadened and become definitely fixed. He renders the newspaper publisher a definite and economic service as important in its way as is the service which the general advertising agency delivers the national advertiser.

The well-equipped special representative maintains an organization in close touch at all times with the development of national advertising, and it is this type of service that is generally recognized by astute publishers to be indispensable.

The rapid development in national advertising in recent years, both in the class of business and number of accounts, has wrought a considerable change in the work of the aggressive special representative.

Time is not far distant when certain publishers had an idea that national advertising in itself was not of sufficient importance to warrant a well-worked-out organization in the field, developing new business and working with advertisers and general advertising agents, as a part of the service between the newspaper and the advertiser.

Today, however, it is pretty generally recognized that the special representative lends a certain speeding up process in the transaction of business between the publisher, advertiser and general advertising agent. His suggestions relative to the important part which the newspaper plays in a campaign are welcome, and generally received with courtesy because the average special representative who knows his field intimately can often render worth-while service in a way that makes his work in the field invaluable.

Every national campaign in the newspapers is merely the sum and total of many local campaigns, and the possibilities of the success of each local campaign is more manifest when the newspaper through its special representative is working in close cooperation with the advertiser or his agents in the carrying out of all the details pertaining to the matter of service.

The personnel of the special newspaper representative's office is made up to a greater degree of men who are first of all good business men and solicitors afterwards, therefore, their advice and suggestions in the development of newspaper accounts is often helpful.

HOW THE PLAN WORKS

It is estimated that some 90 per cent. of the national advertising accounts are placed through general advertising agencies. This emphasizes particularly the necessity of close contact between the representatives of the newspapers operating in the national field and the general advertising agencies for the very best results.

The special representative in the national field occupies somewhat the same position as the advertising manager of the newspaper in the local field. He must be alert, in close touch with all prominent accounts as well as the personnel of the leading advertising agencies who handle the principal accounts.

He must have at his finger ends at all times correct and impartial information regarding the fields which his newspaper covers and be prepared to consult with the advertiser and his agent relative to local marketing conditions.

In total, the special representative renders to the publisher by accelerating the work in the development of the business in the national advertising a definite and important service.

He acts as an intermediary between the publisher, the seller, and the advertising agent or his client, the buyer of white space. He eliminates lost motion and reduces the possibility of friction between publishers and agent by means of personal contact. In no other way could the newspaper publisher get service of this character.

PUBLISHER'S VIEW OF "SPECIALS."

CREDITED WITH THE GROWTH OF NATIONAL BUSINESS IN THE NEWSPAPERS.

By JEROME D. BARNUM,
Publisher Syracuse Post-Standard.

The rapid growth of national advertising in newspapers during the past five years has certainly been due, mainly, to the creative influence of special newspaper representatives.

Newspaper publishers, enjoying prosperity today, upon observation of their books, will generally find that this prosperity is measured by the receipts from their national advertising.

It was the special newspaper representative, who had everything to gain by his persistent salesmanship that turned the tide from the magazines to the newspapers.

Continuous solicitation on his part, in all parts of the country, awakened a realization on the part of manufacturers, even when advertising agencies themselves would not admit that the newspaper was the proper medium for their accounts.

Without such intensified preliminary work the newspaper publishers, spread far apart—operating with limited advertising knowledge—with few men at their home office capable of meeting representatives of advertising agencies and manufacturers, or capable of spreading correct knowledge, would never have brought about the confidence in the newspapers that is manifest today by national manufacturers.

Since the organization headed by Paul Block became affiliated with the Post-Standard, its suggestions have influenced and standardized business methods in our office, circulation, and advertising, and even in many cases brought about expansion in news policies. The influence of that organization has also helped materially in guiding the solicitation efforts of our local advertising staff.

Now, through an organization such as Paul Block, Inc., with offices in four different cities, a newspaper can, at much less expense, and at a great saving of time and without inconvenience, present data in its own behalf (as shown by the Post-Standard's influence) to manufacturers East, West, North and South.

Cooperating, as we are, with other newspapers in this strong special representative's hands, we have many more high-salaried men out working for us than we could afford individually.

It remains only for special representatives to add to their organizations a creative demand for new advertising for all newspapers.

I believe the special representative in the next five years will be one of the biggest factors in the development of high-class advertising, and large quantities of it, for all newspapers.

UNIQUE SERVICE TO AD AGENTS.

INFORMATION OF ALL KINDS FURNISHED—HOW RUSH ORDERS ARE EXECUTED.

By HERMAN G. HALSTED,
Vice-President of Paul Block, Inc., and President of the Six-Point League of New York.

It seems to be that the representative who tells the truth and is sincere in his efforts to give his papers proper representation can be of great assistance to the advertising agent.

In the first place, he is obviously a source of great economy. The fact that the representative as a rule concentrates in one office information regarding a number of different papers is a saving to the agent in time and clerical work.

The office of the representative is a handy source of information regarding all the various publications which he represents. He knows the rules and regulations of each different publication. Inquiry of him saves a vast amount of correspondence and enables the agent to get in a few moments information which might take weeks to accumulate. If taken up with individual publications in distant parts of the country.

The representative's intimate knowledge of local conditions in each different city, both in an advertising and merchandising way, enables him to be of great assistance to the agent, not only in placing advertising copy, but in sales problems as well.

The representative is able to furnish statistics not only regarding circulations both in and outside of the city, but as to the character of the population number of homes in each city, average income of their inhabitants, the number and character of local stores in various lines, together with their locations, and the attitude of the dealers toward new products. Wholesale and jobbing conditions and data of all kinds are thus available.

Recently our office was asked by an agent to secure a desirable jobber in several different cities for a certain brand of automobile tire.

Another agent asked us if we could induce our publishers to try to stock local drug stores with a certain preparation.

Another agency asked us how a certain paper which we represent compares in volume of specialty shop advertising with other papers in its city. In this instance the agent wanted the information the same day. We secured it by telegraph and this of course saved the agent considerable expense.

A similar case was that of a general agent who wanted to know how different papers compared with the other papers in their respective cities in the matter of local department store advertising.

Another means of help is the time and trouble which the representative saves the agent in the matter of correcting orders. Every week many orders are received by the representative which have to be corrected either because of wrong rate, incorrect position, or some other error.

If these orders went direct to the papers, they would have to be returned for correction before insertion, and the agents would thus lose valuable time in starting schedules. All these means of assistance are more or less obvious.

I am wondering, however, if the general agent really appreciates the co-operation and assistance which the representative renders in other ways.

For instance, we are sometimes asked to send plates and orders to cities for quick insertion. In order to catch the desired issue this often involves placing the matter in the hands of train porters, paying them a bonus for delivery at the publication office or to a messenger from the publication office whom we have in the meantime wired to meet the train at the station.

Our office was recently asked to furnish a messenger to take a page plate to a city some 200 miles distant for publication the following morning. The plate could be put in the hands of the papers no other way, and the advertisement had to start in two papers the next morning.

We furnished the messenger and he not only took the plate to our paper, but personally saw to it that the three other papers in the city received the plate for their own use after our paper had made the necessary matrices.

It is true that the agency paid the expenses of the trip, but the fact that we could furnish the messenger who would be familiar with the city upon his arrival, thereby facilitating the necessarily rapid handling of the matter was, I believe, of material assistance.

I could recite innumerable different situations where the representative is asked for assistance of one kind or another, but I have already exceeded the space you allotted me.

I feel that I have outlined enough, however, to satisfy you that the representative, if he is the right kind of a representative, is of real assistance.

THE AD AGENT AND THE "SPECIAL."

REPRESENTATIVE SHOULD KNOW ALL ABOUT HIS PAPER.

At the recent meeting of the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association one of the publishers asked St. Elmo Massengale, president of the Association of Southern Advertising Agents, whether he preferred to do business with the "special representative" of a newspaper, or direct with the paper itself.

Mr. Massengale came out flatly and said that advertising agencies preferred to have relations with "special representatives" and told why. He said agents preferred the "special" for economical reasons. The "special" represents a large number of papers—sometimes as many as 10 or 20—with which it is possible, through him, to do all their business in one settlement each month. The special representative is in most cases a very intelligent man able to discuss various conditions in a way that is valuable to the agent.

And other leading advertising agents are just as strongly in favor of the "special" as Mr. Massengale, as is evidenced by the following statements made to THE FOURTH ESTATE, in which they also tell why:

Frank J. Hermes, secretary Blackman-Ross Company, says:

"The special representative of a publisher is the publisher's ambassador. It is impossible for the publisher to issue his newspaper if he has to travel all over the country interviewing advertisers.

"The special representative should have all the necessary information regarding the publisher's field and he should also be so thoroughly conversant with the policies of the publication he represents that he can give the advertiser or agent an immediate answer on any question that may arise affecting the publication's policy.

"Somebody must represent a publication to get much business. If the publisher is building and expanding, all of his time and attention are needed right at home. By hiring a representative he is not only saving money, but he is adopting the most efficient method, because no matter how good a publisher he is, he can't be as good a solicitor as a good representative.

"In other words a man ought to specialize on the job that he is best suited for."

F. M. Lawrence, secretary of the George Batten Company, says:

"We are a great believer in the 'real' special representative, and we doubt that a day goes by that he does not demonstrate to us his worth not only to the publisher but to the agent and advertiser as well.

"I have in mind an instance that occurred a day or two ago where a special representative secured a contract for his paper that probably would never have been made otherwise than through this 'special's' efforts.

"This representative studies his business and was keen enough to see a situation which would enable a certain advertiser to advertise to advantage. The publisher never thought of it and we could not know it unless it was brought to our attention. This special came to us; we took it up with the advertiser and a nice contract resulted.

"It is such service as this on the part of the real 'specials' that makes them more than worth while. Besides, a 'special' who is on the job studies his towns and his papers as well as those of his competitors and is in a position on a moment's notice to give an advertiser or an agent any information which they may require about anything in his territory."

William H. Rankin of Chicago, president of the Western Advertising Agents Association, says:

"In the national advertising field, the special representative is the point-of-contact between agency and publisher. His work aids much to the effectiveness of agency service and helps materially in keeping the machinery of modern advertising well oiled and in good working order.

"As advertising more closely approximates an exact science, the scope of agency service broadens constantly.

"A thousand and one questions quite outside of the data given in circulation statements and rate cards, must receive consideration and here is where the special representative can make himself useful to the agency.

"Intensive study of local conditions, distribution channels, trade tendencies and many other factors that have a direct bearing on the advertising program, precedes the placing of contracts.

"The special representative who would render the best possible service both to the publisher and the agency must be a veritable walking encyclopedia of specialized knowledge with regard to his paper and its field.

"Naturally every publisher wants all of the business in sight."

Permit me, on behalf of the special representative, to enter a protest against the short-sighted policy of the publisher who arbitrarily demands that this or that line of business be secured for his paper. Why don't we get — business? The Times is carrying it—go get it for the Record!

"The publisher should realize that the relative merits of the Record and the Times have been carefully weighed, and the paper best qualified to carry that particular line of advertising has, in most cases, been selected.

"We do not regard ourselves as exclusive representatives of publish-

A Directory of Daily Newspapers having Special Representatives in the National Advertising Field.

(Copyright, 1917, by The Fourth Estate Publishing Company.)

THE FOURTH ESTATE presents herewith its first National Directory of Newspapers having Representatives in the National Advertising Field. Incidentally this is the first list of its kind ever published.

The aim has been to compile a handy record for those who buy space in newspapers—one that will show them at a single glance who represents any daily newspaper in the United States or Canada, giving all in one the name of the representative, his address, branches and telephone number.

This publication in THE FOURTH ESTATE is preliminary to the publication of the Directory in booklet form.

The size has been arranged with the special aim in view of providing a list that will slip into the pigeon-hole of any standard desk, where it can be at the instant call of the busy advertising space buyer.

The Directory contains:

First: An index to the Representatives of Newspapers in the United States and Canada, with names, addresses and telephone numbers.

Second: A list of Newspapers and their National Advertising Representatives.

In order to keep within the desk "pigeon-hole" size, the lists are condensed to the utmost degree.

This condensation, in order to be completely intelligible, has been worked out in "key" form, the name of each Representative requiring condensation being "keyed."

The arrangement by column explains this "key" automatically.

The list of the Newspapers and their Representatives may give, for instance, the St. Louis Republic as being represented by Cone, L. & W. (or CL&W). This is the "key" for Cone, Lorenzen & Woodman; or another paper by Benj. & Kent (or Benj. & K.), which means the Benjamin & Kentnor Company; or another by Verree & Conk (or V&C in some cases), which refers to Verree & Conklin.

In the list there are some cases where suffixes are attached to the names of Representatives. Their meanings are:

At—Atlanta. Cl—Cleveland. Mun—Minneapolis. St L—St. Louis.
Aur—Aurora. Den—Denver. Mon—Montreal. St P—St. Paul.
Bos—Boston. Det—Detroit. OkC—Oklahoma City. S F—San Francisco.
Brant—Brantford. K C—Kansas City. Om—Omaha. Tol—Toledo.
Can—Canada. L A—Los Angeles. Ph—Philadelphia. Tor—Toronto.

When a Representative is given without one of the above suffixes, it means, in the East, his office is in New York; or, in the Western column, that his office is in Chicago.

Reference to the Index in any of the cities he is listed in will give his full name, addresses and telephone numbers.

Column 1 shows the "Key" letters, which appear alongside the newspaper in the List.

Column 2 gives the full name of the Special Representative.

Column 3 gives his home address and branch offices.

Column 4 gives his telephone numbers.

As this Directory is originally compiled by THE FOURTH ESTATE, and is its first attempt, there are undoubtedly errors of record and omission. If readers finding any will kindly notify THE FOURTH ESTATE, at once, they will be corrected.

The intention is to hold the Booklet Directory for a short time before publication, so that errors made in this printing can be corrected and the permanent directory made absolutely correct.

Another point that readers of the list may wonder about is the omission of many of the foreign language newspapers. This is done intentionally, for the reason that none, with the exception of the few in the list, have exclusive representatives. They pay a commission to anyone sending them business and therefore it would be impossible to include them in the list.

ers. We can do more for publishers by help making advertising more profitable to the advertiser; by working in close cooperation with all branches of the advertisers' business.

"We develop business for publishers by devoting all of our energies to the service of our customers, which the broad-minded publisher recognizes as the greatest service we can possibly render to him.

"He must rely upon his own representative to foster the special interests of his medium.

"The special representative smoothes out misunderstandings between publishers and agencies, assists in getting distribution, cooperates with agencies in various ways to insure the success of advertising campaigns.

"I believe that publishers in the interest of efficiency should clothe their representatives with authority, not—merely to solicit business and handle the routine relations with agencies, but to act upon many questions which today must be referred to the home office.

"I sometimes wonder if special representatives realize how great is the pressure upon the time of agency space buyers. Blessed be the 'special' who makes his interview brief, clear, concise.

"Because of his intimate knowledge of the paper, the special representative is often able to make suggestions whereby the agency can give copy a special 'slant' that will make it more effective. Such help is always welcome.

"The special agency plays an important part in co-ordinating the forces of advertising and co-operating with advertising agencies to insure the success of national campaigns.

"Some of the ablest men in the advertising field, are to be found in this branch of the service. The 'sight drafts' drawn by advertising agencies upon the special representative's fund of information are invariably honored promptly and in full."

SERVICE TO THE AD AGENT.

HOW "SPECIALS" CO-OPERATE IN HANDLING ADS FOR NEWSPAPERS.

By CHARLES H. EDDY.

What the "special" gives to the general advertising agent is co-operation. He owes no allegiance to the agent and his service is rendered to the newspaper which he represents and from which he receives his compensation.

The general advertising agent and the special representative are both parts of the force maintained by the publishers in the national field for the development of newspaper advertising.

The general advertising agent is responsible to the advertiser alone, not withstanding that he receives his compensation from the newspaper.

The "special" is practically a part of the advertising staff of the newspaper which he represents.

The "specials" travel the country in all directions planting the seed of newspaper advertising in the minds of prospective advertisers.

This co-operation is of material assistance to the general agent in closing new accounts and sometimes the "special" is called on by the agent to lend his assistance in helping to close such account.

When the agent has landed a new account and secured his appropriation the plan of campaign must be decided. In framing up such campaigns the "special" is sometimes called into consultation by the general agent either as to the general plan or in relation to special points on which the special has detailed knowledge.

Then comes the placing of the business by the space buyer of the agency.

The "special" is prepared to furnish complete information in regard to the paper he represents. He must also be prepared to furnish information in regard to the trade conditions in his particular city as it relates to the advertising to be placed. He is also expected to secure the co-operation of his paper in making the advertiser's campaign in his city successful by advising the dealers that the campaign is on and in other ways to forward the interests of the agent's client.

After the agent has placed his order the further co-operation of the "special" is expected to make sure that the order is correctly executed by the newspaper; that the proper vouchers and bills are furnished; and that the transaction is carried through to a finish as planned.

The "special" is the publishers' direct representative.

Perhaps his chief usefulness to the agency is in keeping the lines of communication open between his newspaper and the agency. Without the "special" as a connecting link the wires would frequently cross and misunderstandings arise between the agent and the newspaper.

The service of the "special" tends to eliminate friction and to facilitate the operations of the agency.

The average standard of service rendered by the special representative is high.

Newspaper publishers understand that to give the co-operation to the general advertising agent outlined above requires high grade men who can command the respect and confidence of the general agent.

The closer this co-operation becomes between the general advertising agent and the special representative the more national advertising will be developed for the newspapers.

"SPECIALS" I HAVE KNOWN.

HOW NATIONAL ADVERTISER MAY BE MADE TO "SIT UP AND TAKE NOTICE."

By FLOYD Y. KERLER,

Chairman Executive Committee Association of National Advertisers.

Special representatives I have met seldom, if ever, can tell me anything that interests me about local conditions in the city where the paper they represent circulates.

They glibly reel off figures that mean next to nothing because they show comparative values with things that do not interest me.

For instance, they tell me that they have 5,000 more circulation than any other morning paper, in spite of what any directory shows.

They are the only evening papers. They carry more lines of department store advertising than both of the other papers.

Their editor is paid almost as much as Brisbane.

Their paper is on the right side of politics—the owner belongs to the best church in the city.

Their (patent) woman's page is unique.

"Our rate is a bit higher than the other evening paper, but we dominate the field; therefore, use our paper exclusively and save money. Now! Aren't we entitled to the business?"

This is a fair sample of a usual solicitation.

A REAL SOLICITATION.

Why doesn't this same man, after a little study, say:

"I realize that any 25-cent article must have a large volume of sale to make a profit for you; consequently, you are interested in the number of local outlets, rather than their size.

"The three department stores cut your price, so I don't suppose you are particularly interested in them. There are, however, fifty-six drug stores, forty of whom are live wires.

"Here is a report from one of our detail men. (Pulls out map of city.) On this map you can see:

- "1. Location of stores.
- "2. Whether they have 1, 2 or 3 windows.
- "3. What their credit rating is.
- "4. Class of people they serve.
- "5. Dentifrices selling best.
- (a) (b) (c)
- "6. Their attitude on displays.
- "7. Stores marked * are our agents.

"I am really interested, and begin to go over the city map carefully, and in doing so, get a pretty accurate idea of the city, the stores and the people, because the man explaining the map has spent a week there (at least) getting the facts he is presenting to me—he really knows.

The representative then produces an A.B.C. report on circulation and proceeds to briefly go through it, pointing out significant features here and there.

Then he might close the interview by saying:

"We control (or own) a window washing company which washes and dresses nearly all the windows you would be interested in.

"It is a separate money-making organization, dressing windows for any one—but one of our advertisers will have special attention. This company furnishes a signed receipt for all material you send them; a signed receipt from each druggist, including a photograph of your display, showing his name on the window. This work will cost you a flat price of $2 per window, or less, according to the locations you choose on the location map sent you when a plan is submitted."

A solicitation like this always gets attention, because it gives real information. You know the representative has been there (how many representatives are there who have never been in the city where their paper circulates?) besides, you know the paper is really alive.

SIX-POINT LEAGUE FORCE FOR GOOD.

ALL NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING AIDED BY WORK OF NEW YORK "SPECIALS."

By J. P. MCKINNEY

The Six Point League is an association of newspaper advertising representatives whose activities are exerted in the territory east of Buffalo and Pittsburgh and, with one exception, all maintain offices in New York City.

The League was founded in June, 1907, with the sole aim of extending knowledge of the pre-eminent value of newspaper advertising. Some years previously an attempt to establish a similar organization was made and for a few months it managed to exist, until it was wrecked over a difference of opinion as to unity of action of its members.

The Six Point League has avoided all the shoals that destroyed its predecessor and made its cardinal principle freedom of action of all members on all subject save value of newspaper advertising.

For several years the League's activities lagged, until opportunity came knocking at its door, and the publishers of America were interested by the publication of a series of large display advertisements, prepared by a committee of which F. St. John Richards was chairman.

The advertisements were addressed to local and foreign advertisers and embodied forceful arguments and facts in favor of the superior advantages of newspaper advertising.

They were given free insertion in hundreds of the most prominent newspapers of America whose representatives were members of the League and requests were also made upon the League for permission to reproduce them by numerous newspaper publishers, whose representatives were not at the time members of the League.

The publicity thus obtained could not have been purchased for a sum under several hundred thousand dollars, and its effort was almost instantaneous in producing inquiries from advertisers from all parts of America.

This enterprise on the part of the League also brought the organization into the lime-light of the trade in a manner most complimentary, and from that date the Six Point League has been recognized as a force in the advertising trade, both powerful and efficient.

About this time the League members made a proposition to newspaper publishers they represented, to contribute a fund to pay the salaries and expenses of an able solicitor to interview prospective advertisers in the interest of all newspapers, and a considerable sum was immediately subscribed.

Later, the Daily Club proposed that the Six Point League handle its subscription, which it was deemed wise to decline, and the outcome was the organization of the Bureau of Advertising of the A.N.P.A., the scope of whose activities being nation-wide, better served the purpose.

MISSIONARY WORK.

The work of the Six Point League was early recognized as of great value by the trade in general, and upon the organization of the New York Advertising Agents' Association a resolution was transmitted to the League inviting the appointment of a standing committee to meet a similar committee of the general agents to discuss all matters of mutual interest.

These two committees of the respective associations are regularly in charge of all matters relating to newspaper advertising, and their meetings have resulted in a complete and friendly understanding of the requirements of each that has been of great benefit to themselves and the publishers of the country.

A number of reforms have been put in effect and the relations between all concerned are upon the most equitable basis.

The Bureau of Advertising of the A.N.P.A., soon after its organization in 1915, invited the Six Point League to elect a permanent member of its Advisory Committee, which recognition of the standing of the League in the field is further testimony of the dignified and successful labors of the organization.

In October, 1915, the Six Point League published a pamphlet of 32 pages and cover, containing a very complete list of newspaper advertisers and their addresses, a list of general advertising agencies with names of space buyers, and a list of blind medical and proprietary articles, in the territory east of Buffalo and Pittsburgh.

Because We Know New England

This Agency started more than twenty years ago and represents exclusively New England daily newspapers. Its exceptional value to a New England daily newspaper is due in part to its value to the advertiser and advertising agent.

We are useful to the advertising agent and the advertiser "Because We Know New England." Some of the largest advertising agencies and most prominent national advertisers look upon us as an arm of their service in the New England territory. One of the greatest international advertisers in the world has an entire department built into its advertising department as a result of the campaign that we devised for them to cope with the difficulty that they had in our territory and which was successful to a degree that was startling—to the non-newspaper advertising competitor who was whipped.

The territory in which we work, comprising about 157 cities and towns, all in New England, is an ideal one in which to start an advertising campaign. The population is more than two millions. Distribution in a territory like this is much more easily obtained than where an equal amount of population is centralized in a metropolitan district and when obtained is more easily held.

A newspaper connected with The Julius Mathews Special Agency registers its appreciation of foreign advertising and its desire to develop foreign advertising not only by inviting the foreign advertiser but by doing everything possible to make that advertising profitable to the advertiser. The benefits are equal to the publisher and to the advertiser. To the one we are frequently able to show more advertising accounts running than in metropolitan papers of hundreds of thousands of circulation and to the advertiser more results than he had ever believed possible to be achieved through newspaper advertising.

The value to the advertiser and advertising agent of close relations with our organization is that through more than 20 years of unremitting work we have come to thoroughly understand the proper tactics of daily newspaper advertising and "Because We Know New England."

FROM A CANADIAN AGENT.

A. L. Callopy, president of the Callopy-Holland Advertising Agency, Ltd., Vancouver, B. C., writes:
"We have considerable pleasure in looking over THE FOURTH ESTATE. It is one of the publications I take home to read thoroughly, each and every issue."

READABLE AND RELIABLE.

S. Armstrong of the American Advertising Agency, Boston, writes:

"Members of our staff have been constant readers of THE FOURTH ESTATE for the past fifteen years and appreciate the efforts the publishers of THE FOURTH ESTATE have so successfully made to edit a paper containing readable and reliable information concerning the interests of publishers and advertisers."

KEEPS ALL IN CLOSE TOUCH.

The Lawrence-Oswald Advertising Company, Cleveland, writes:

"THE FOURTH ESTATE is a medium that keeps the working advertising and newspaper men in close touch with the activities of others in the same line, as well as the general progress and development of those fields, and for that reason we are subscribers."

It is twenty years since the Wm. J. Morton Company entered the special agency field with offices in New York and Chicago.

Four newspapers on our list have been represented by us during all these twenty years.

The newspapers represented command the full confidence and respect of the advertising world, and each feels the benefit of good company.

Our attention has been concentrated upon the papers on our list and the advertising productivity of the territory covered has been carefully cultivated.

The following well-known newspapers are represented by the Wm. J. Morton Company:

SPOKANE, WASHINGTON
The Spokesman Review
The Chronicle (Evening)

SEATTLE, WASHINGTON
The Post-Intelligencer

ANACONDA, MONTANA
The Anaconda Standard

BOISR, IDAHO
The Idaho Statesman

LOS ANGELES, CAL.
The Express (Evening)
The Tribune (Morning)

AND MONTREAL, CANADA

La Presse
Largest Circulation in Canada.

What are your Foreign Advertising Earnings from Kansas City Territory?

I do not know what your Foreign Advertising earnings are from my territory, but a glance over my books at the big yearly increase I have made in Foreign Advertising earnings for the New York World, Clover Leaf Newspapers, Successful Farming, and other publications during the last ten years, gives me confidence that I could show such an increase for one or more high class publications.

OSCAR G. DAVIES,

Publisher's Southwestern Representative
Victor Building, KANSAS CITY Manager, Kansas City Branch
CONE, LORENZEN & WOODMAN

ALTHOUGH we have been called "a growing agency made up of live young men who solicit business on a business basis," we have not yet carried out our original plan.

Brought up and trained in a newspaper environment, and thoroughly conversant with every detail of newspaper production, both from the publisher's and advertising manager's viewpoint, our experience and inclinations are naturally in that direction. We offer any newspaper desiring sincere and conscientious representation in the national advertising field the sum total of our newspaper training and the best efforts of a growing, active organization.

We are representing several good publications, doing some highly satisfactory work for them, and are now ready to roll up our sleeves for the newspaper looking for results.

Let us tell you something about ourselves.

Lorenzen, Green & Kohn

PUBLISHERS

who feel that they are not getting their share of national advertising should write us, as we are producing satisfactory results for the papers we represent.

J. M. COSGROVE CO.

Publishers' Representative
220 West 42d Street, NEW YORK CITY

FROM THE S. N. P. A.

EDITOR THE FOURTH ESTATE:

SIR: I want to congratulate you upon the excellent manner in which you reported the Fifteenth Annual Convention of the S. N. P. A. in your issue of July 14. It was very complete and reflects a great deal of credit on your publication.

COVERS THE WHOLE AD FIELD.

EDITOR THE FOURTH ESTATE:

SIR: I have come to realize that THE FOURTH ESTATE covers the field of advertising most thoroughly—though its efforts are supposed to be divided.

DON'T BE LATE.

EDITOR THE FOURTH ESTATE:

SIR: I know an ad-man sedate. Who hears of new things too late. The trouble with him is under his bang—He reads not THE FOURTH ESTATE.

SIX-POINT LEAGUE OF NEW YORK.

A revised edition was issued in October, 1916, and in October, 1917, the third edition will be published. This directory met with instant success and has proved of great value to the trade. It is in active demand by publishers, advertising agents and solicitors generally.

So recently as April 23 last the Six Point League addressed a resolution to the A.N.P.A. convention calling upon publishers to ward off the hysterical cries being raised for undue economy, by editorials in their papers, and that the suggestion was most timely has been shown by the columns of arguments against the reduction of ordinary business and personal expenditures that are appearing in the daily press, often illustrated with forcible cartoons to drive home the points taken.

During the past winter the League has given four luncheons to members and guests, at which addresses were made upon current advertising topics by a number of eminent men connected with the art of newspaper advertising. Among them were Frank E. Fehlman, vice-president of the H. W. Gossard Company; Floyd Y. Keeler, vice-president and advertising manager of the I. W. Lyon & Son, Inc.; A. C. Reiley, president of the Association of National Advertisers and advertising manager of the Remington Typewriter Company, and Nat. S. Olds, sales manager of the Julius Kayser Company.

All of these informal meetings drew large and interested attendance and were productive of better understanding between advertisers and publishers.

The growth of the Six Point League has been continuously upward and it has a membership of forty-nine at the close of its present tenth fiscal year, out of a total of seventy-four firms engaged in the representation of daily newspapers in New York. They represent above six hundred of the leading newspapers of America.

The Six Point League today is respected and honored as a powerful factor in the development of newspaper advertising, and it is invited to all organization councils having that end in view.

The enormous growth of daily newspaper advertising in this country within the last ten years may be said to have had real inception at the time when the Six Point League committees first began regular visits, in a body, to prospective advertisers, in the interests of all publishers as a whole, doing the work which has since been taken up so successfully by the A.N.P.A. Bureau of Advertising.

The Six Point League has fully demonstrated its right to exist, and its past important achievements give promise of even greater activities for the future.

The officers for 1917 are:
President, Herman Halsted, vice-president of Paul Block, Inc.; vice-president, Hugh Burke of the Philadelphia Ledger; Louis Klebahn, treasurer, and Ralph R. Mulligan, secretary.

Executive committee, J. P. McKinney, M. D. Hunton, Charles H. Eddy, N. A. Huse, W. C. Klein, John O'Mara and F. St. John Richards.

Dan A. Carroll represents the A.N.P.A. Advertising Bureau on the officers' board.

"SPECIALS" OF THE MIDDLE WESTFIGHT NEWSPAPERS' BATTLE
BY COOPERATION IN A STRONG BODY.

Probably no other organization, aside from the A.N.P.A. and the Six-Point League of New York, is doing more for the newspaper publishers of the country in the way of paving the path for potential business than the Newspaper Representatives' Association of Chicago.

Organized nearly seventeen years ago, the association has worked steadily and consistently for a unification of the publishers' interests and the concrete results could hardly be estimated here in mere dollars and cents. It is due to the work of this association that the advertising interests in the West have come to have a fuller appreciation of the value of newspaper advertising as distinguished from magazines and other media, and the annual advertising receipts of newspaper publishers are greatly enhanced by the co-operative efforts of the members of the association.

Appropriations, dozens of them, that might find their way into the coffers of the magazines otherwise, are effectively diverted into the newspaper field and the entire list of newspaper publishers benefit, therefore, from the general activities of this unique organization.

The Newspaper Representatives' Association had its origin in a conversation between two alert newspaper representatives in Chicago, early in September, 1900. The conversation related to the difficult question of advertising policy especially with reference to cooperation among the numerous representatives doing business in Chicago.

The upshot of the conversation was a call issued within a few days for a meeting of all representative in Chicago. This call was signed by James E. Verree, James E. Colby, Edward S. Cone and Horace M. Ford.

The meeting was held on September 13, 1900, and a constitution was adopted which holds good with slight amendments until the present.

The first officers were James E. Colby, president, and James E. Verree, secretary-treasurer.

The charter members of the organization were: Ralph H. Root, Edward S. Cone, James E. Colby, Frank J. Carlisle, William T. Davis.

"SPECIALS" OF THE MIDDLE WEST.

HIGH AIMS WELL CARRIED.

The organization was active from the beginning and the members co-operated splendidly in making the association of immediate benefit to publishers and advertisers as well as to the members. The purposes for which the organization was formed and which have remained essentially unchanged during the seventeen years of existence, briefly, are:

To create and support a fraternal and social spirit among the representatives;

To better serve the business interests of the publishers;

To secure information as to the financial standing of advertisers and agencies;

To recommend the recognition and regulation of advertising agencies;

To cooperate with regularly authorized agencies in furthering the interests of general advertising in the daily newspapers.

The organization, while not a subsidiary of the A.N.P.A., nevertheless works in close union with that master organization. Information gathered by the Chicago association is placed at the disposal of the A. N.P.A. and there is the fullest co-operation with the larger body.

From the very beginning, the Chicago organization has devoted itself to business. It holds monthly meetings which are business from beginning to end. Little time is given to purely social diversions, though an occasional meeting is redeemed from strict business by a social aspect. An idea of the proportion may be gained from the treasurer's report for last year, which shows that less than $50 was expended for social diversions, while more than $1,100 was devoted to the business side of the organization.

In effect, the association is a vast clearing house for newspaper advertising information. Each member is expected to contribute any data that may come to his observation and this accumulated information is placed in abbreviated form for easy reference and distributed in a weekly confidential bulletin to the members.

New accounts, changes of agencies, credit information, possible advertising leads—anything, in fact, that will contribute to the general benefit of the organization or of newspaper advertising is contained in this weekly bulletin, which is held confidential under pain of immediate expulsion for divulging the information. The information, incidentally, is available to the A.N.P.A. and is greatly desired.

This is only a single phase of the multitudinous activities of the organization. Another important work is the occasional issuance of authoritative pamphlets showing the agency accounts of the different advertising agencies in the West. These pamphlets are official and definite and revised as frequently as possible in order that the members may have accurate information.

In this way, information regarding advertising agencies, agency solicitors and agency accounts, medical advertising, general advertising and similar subjects is distributed by the association. An efficient representative is employed to gather this information and prepare it for distribution.

NEWSPAPER MISSIONARIES.

Perhaps an even broader work of the organization is the missionary effort it constantly exerts in behalf of newspaper advertising. Every member of the association is a live and constant evangel of the potency of newspaper advertising in the daily field.

Whenever a general advertiser is found to be wavering between magazine and newspaper advertising, the members of the association become immediately active in their combined efforts to win the day for the newspapers.

It is a violation of no confidence to remark that the association is just now cultivating two big new accounts that will mean a half-million dollars for newspaper advertising if they succeed—and the indications point to success. This is one of numerous examples that might be cited to show the advantages accruing to the general newspaper field because of the cooperative efforts of these Chicago boosters.

Their first efforts, as outlined by one of the officers, is to convince the advertiser and the advertising agency of the value of the daily newspaper as a medium for all kinds of advertising. When the general proposition has been established, the different members, of course, ply their own immediate activity for their respective publications. It is a case of the newspaper first and the individual representatives afterwards.

The fraternal spirit of the organization has been influential in bringing the special representatives' business in the West up to a high plane. What might easily become a case of cut-throat competition has been reduced to fair and friendly rivalry that reacts to the best interests of the advertiser, agency and publishers.

MEMBERSHIP QUALIFICATIONS.

Most of the bigger special agencies in Chicago are represented in the membership of the organization. Only individuals may join and this individual must always be the head of his particular organization and only one individual from each company may belong.

The peculiar value of membership is so apparent that no difficulty has ever been experienced in keeping a full membership. Quite the contrary, in truth, has been the case. The annual dues have been increased from $15 to $30, but this has caused no diminution in membership. The demand is always great.

To insure an active and alert administration each succeeding year, the president and vice-president may not succeed themselves. The secretary and treasurer, however, may be reelected.

J. E. Verree, one of the pioneers in the organization, was secretary-treasurer for eight years and Elmer Wilson has been treasurer for nine years, following Mr. Verree in office.

The present officers are: President, C. M. Veazey; vice-president, F. Guy Davis; treasurer, Elmer Wilson; secretary, C. J. Anderson.

As an evidence of the patriotic sentiment of the Association, $500 has been withdrawn from the treasury for investment in Liberty Loan bonds.

CAUGHT IN RUSSIAN RIOTS.

Mildred Farwell, Petrograd correspondent for the Chicago Tribune, was in the center of one of the recent riots in the Russian capital and, although considerably shaken up by the rough experience escaped to write a thrilling narrative for her paper.

BANNED PAPERS LOSE THEIR CASE IN THE HOUSE.

The House Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads has ordered on adverse report on the resolution introduced by Representative Meyer of New York calling on the Postmaster General for a statement as to Socialist and other papers barred from the mails by order of the Post Office Department.

The Postmaster General advised the committee that it would be "incompatible with the public interest" to furnish the information asked in the London resolution.

Representative London, Socialist, introduced a resolution several weeks ago citing reports that the Post Office Department had denied mail privileges to certain issues of Socialist papers and to other publications owing to alleged criticism of the army draft legislation and other war measures. Members of the House Committee were of the opinion that the papers involved might seek relief from the courts as Congress had no jurisdiction.

"We have no power to compel the Postmaster General to furnish the information if he deems it incompatible with the public interest," said Chairman Moon. "If he should furnish the information we have no power to correct the practices of the Post Office Department in such matters. The cases are clearly ones for adjustments by the courts."

LABOR TROUBLE IN PAPER FIELD FROM THE DRAFT.

America's paper supply is threatened with a marked reduction as a result of the federal draft, J. T. Carey, president of the International Brotherhood of Papermakers, declared on July 23 to the executive council of the Brotherhood, preliminary to the opening of a four days' session in Albany.

Reports from the different paper making centers of the United States indicate, Mr. Carey said, that the draft had taken paperworkers, whose positions as a result of the recent drawing indicated they would be in the first draft army if they passed the physical tests.

New York State, one of the big paper states of the nation, is hit hard in this connection, Mr. Carey said, early reports indicated.

"We will not let our men who don't go across be crushed with over time work, if I have my say," said Mr. Carey.

Mr. Carey does not see why the American labor field should be cleared of American labor so that foreigners could reap the benefits of Americans' wages at time and a half.

"And many of these foreigners even refuse to contribute to the Red Cross," said Mr. Carey.

DR. REID APOLOGIZES.

Dr. Gilbert Reid, an American citizen and editor of the Peking (China) Post, after pledging himself before the United States court at Shanghai "to refrain from criticism of the American government or its officials which may be contrary either to the spirit of our laws or to the purpose of any special legislation as may be enacted during the period of the war," has been released from bail and three charges of libel against him dismissed.

He was accused of seditious libel, libel of President Wilson and libel of Minister Reinsch.

HOME NEARING COMPLETION.

The new home being built for the Minneapolis Daily News will be completed, it is announced, by October 1. It is located at Fourth Avenue, South, and 6th Street and will be one of the most modern newspaper establishments in the West.

LA LIBERTE CAN'T GET PAPER.

END OF ANTI-GOVERNMENT CANADIAN PAPER CAUSES INTERESTING RUMOR.

Despite a formal announcement in large type on the front page of La Liberte of Montreal on July 24 declaring that inability to obtain a supply of newsprint, though cash payment was tendered, had caused that paper to suspend publication, there is a strong public and trade impression that the case shows a new method adopted by the Canadian government to stop seditious newspapers; also that any other newspaper that takes a similar course will find it difficult to get print paper, too.

La Liberte has been unrestrained in its campaign against conscription. It has continually attacked the Canadian Government, the British Government, and the American Government. For some time its compulsory suspension has been under the consideration of the Department of State. It has been warned before, and has changed its name once.

Its editor, Tancrede Marsil, is the most outspoken man of the anti-conscription element.

HYDE PRESENTS A PLAY.

With the beginning of the new theatrical season J. Clarence Hyde, through arrangement with Klaw & Erlanger, will present "The Brain Promoter," a comedy by Edward Laska.

For the past five years Mr. Hyde has been the general press representative for Klaw & Erlanger, with whom he now becomes jointly interested in the new venture. Before going to the New York offices he had been business manager for the same firm of "The Pink Lady" and prior to that business manager of such stars as Ethel Barrymore, Frances Starr, Elsie Ferguson, Blanche Bates, Mrs. Leslie Carter, William Gillette and William Collier.

Previous to entering the theatrical field he had served for a long time after leaving Dartmouth College as reporter and in editorial capacities, and as a writer on art and the drama, for the Herald, Times, World and other New York newspapers.

Mr. Hyde will be succeeded as general press representative for Klaw & Erlanger by James Jay Brady.

CENSORS ON THE GRILL.

THE SENATE HEARS PENROSE EXPRESS HIS OPINION OF CREEL AND DANIELS.

One of the bitterest partisan debates heard in the United States Senate since the declaration of war with Germany occupied three hours on July 24, when Senator Penrose, of Pennsylvania, made an unsuccessful attempt to force action on his resolution to investigate the Bureau of Public Information, more commonly known as the Creel Censorship Bureau.

George Creel, head of the Committee of Public Information, came in for scathing denunciations from Senator Penrose and Senator Lodge.

"This resolution speaks for itself, and I do not know that any extended comment by me is necessary," said Senator Penrose, in calling up the resolution. "Widespread dissatisfaction all over the country among newspaper correspondents and newspaper publishers with the management of the so-called Bureau of Public Information exists."

"Instead of a person having been appointed to that important place, the head of the commission, representative of the business elements of professional life in journalism, a gentleman has been called to fill the post who, to say the least, does not command the confidence of the public or of the newspaper profession. His publication, the Official Bulletin, am informed by newspaper people, is not worthy of being utilized in the public press of the country."

CENSORED PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Senator Penrose charged that Mr. Creel had gone to the extent even of censoring President Wilson's address to the coal operators. He also read Mr. Creel's statement of July 3, describing the submarine attacks on the Pershing transport fleet and then read press dispatches saying that no battle had taken place.

"It seems to me," said Mr. Penrose, "that this is trifling very seriously with the information which the American people are entitled to receive of these events, and any persons who are responsible for this kind of publicity should be investigated by the Senate or some committee of the Senate."

"The Associated Press of July 5 said that there was no submarine attack whatever: no torpedoes were seen and that there was no gun firing at submarines from our destroyers. This is a committee not on information but misinformation."

SECRETARY DANIELS' VERSION.

Senator Penrose read into the record the letter of Mr. Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, explaining the Creel report, in which the secretary declared to Chairman Tillman of the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs that the statement "conveyed the feeling of all who had been waiting and hoping for the reassuring telegrams.

In part this letter said:

"At once a statement was prepared and given out that evening, which I knew would intensely gratify all Americans."

"The message of Rear Admiral Gleaves, announcing the attacks, of course, had not been given to the public, and consequently it had been spared anxiety. When the foreboding ended their rejoicing would have exceeded anything I can express."

"The statement which I gave to the public conveyed the feeling of all who had been waiting and hoping for the reassuring telegram. It began with these words:

"It is with the joy of a great relief that I announce to the people of the United States the safe arrival in France of every fighting man and every fighting ship."

"And then followed the account of the dangers which had been encountered."

"These facts were stated, not in the very words of the Gleaves cablegram, for it is the immemorial policy of the department in time of war not to employ the language of a message coming in code."

"Otherwise it would be easy for the enemy to learn the cipher."

"Moreover the message of the rear admiral contained the names of the ships, which for military reasons are never given out during a war. The language used, as reference to the cablegram will show, therefore, was not the identical language of the cablegram, but contained the material facts of the safe arrival of the transports and convoys, the deliverance from submarine attacks, and the successful conclusion of that part of the enterprise."

"The important part of the statement given out to the public was that all our soldiers and marines and ships had been conveyed to France in safety. Two of the groups arrived without being attacked. The rejoicing over their arrival was heightened by the fact that far outside the so-called danger zone they had been twice unsuccessfully attacked."

"If the terms 'battle' and 'attack in force' are open to criticism, the fact still remains that the rejoicing was warranted. If the torpedoes in either of the attacks had sunk American ships, the criticism made would not have concerned itself with the difference between what might have been called a 'battle' or an 'encounter' or a 'brush.'

"The cablegrams from the rear admiral, which have not been given to the public for reasons stated above, are, of course, subject to the inspection of the Naval Affairs Committee."

"NO INTELLECTUAL PROVENDER."

"That does not furnish any intellectual provender to me," said Senator Penrose, "when a high official of the Government says he gave out a statement which contained the feelings of all persons associated with the Government. This is a new basis for conducting a public information bureau—to have it measured by a state of feeling."

Senator Swanson, of Virginia, acting chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, took up the defense of Mr. Daniels and Mr. Creel. He declared the official cable dispatches would bear out the Creel-Daniels statement. They were available to Senators, he said, but had been withheld from the public for military reasons.

"The Navy is deserving of the greatest praise and not of condemnation," said Senator Swanson. "The chief results of this resolution would be to cause a lack of confidence in those who have charge of the conduct of the war and to furnish information to the enemy," Senator Swanson said.

"No one has attacked the American Navy," said Senator Lodge. "That is not the issue. No one has ridiculed the Navy. Criticism has been aimed at Mr. Creel, and Mr. Creel, thank God, is not the American Navy."

"The Senator from Pennsylvania is being blamed here for this resolution on account of the fact that as it is stated that it will disclose information to the enemy. Those ships were attacked outside the war zone. Somebody knew where they would be at a certain hour in the ocean outside of the war zone. Some German knew the fact. It came because there are spies in this country, spies in the departments."

Senator Lodge praised the "tact, sense and patriotism" of the press in dealing with war news, but said the newsmen were being "constantly meddled with and interfered with by Mr. Creel."

Senator James took up the defense of the Administration at that juncture. "If this spirit of criticism of those in charge continues America will be crippled right here in this chamber," he said.

STONE ASKS THE PURPOSE.

When Senator Penrose had finished Senator Stone of Missouri remarked that he was "puzzled to comprehend the purpose or to understand the object" Senator Penrose expected to accomplish by his resolution.

"Suppose it should be ascertained by the reply to the resolution or by a Congressional investigation, if the Senator should think it necessary to go that far, that there was no battle between our armed convoys and German submarines, what then?" asked Senator Stone. "It might be a subject of some criticism of Mr. Creel, but Mr. Creel has as much right as any other writer for newspapers to bombard and sink submarines. What will be accomplished by it?"

"Well, the Government is paying Mr. Creel," responded Mr. Penrose. "He is not an ordinary newspaper writer in the sense of working for private parties. He is an official of the Government and should be held to account; and if he has perpetrated a colossal fraud in the way of deception on the American people he should be called to account for it, in order that such an offense shall not be perpetrated again."

The Penrose resolution finally went to the calendar under the rules and Senator Penrose probably will move to take it up again within several days.

TWO CENTS ON SECOND CLASS OUTSIDE THIRD ZONE?

It is reported that a prominent Senator will offer an amendment to the war revenue bill exempting second-class mail in the first three zones from additional postage and making the regular postage for the remainder of the country two cents per pound.

PACIFIC AD MEN CONVENE.

VOTE WAR AID TO NATION—
BERG IS PRESIDENT—
PORTLAND IN 1918.

The Pacific Coast Advertising Men's Association has established the Pacific Coast Publicity Defence Bureau to aid the Federal Government in the projection of national propaganda. The resolution was adopted at the annual meeting held in Oakland, Cal., on July 25 and provides for the appointment of representatives from all coast advertising clubs and two members at large.

Also a complete ambulance unit, costing $13,000, will be sent to France by the association.

The fourteenth annual meeting was attended by 500 delegates from all parts of the Pacific Coast. The sessions lasted over July 23, 24 and 25 and closed with a big Hawaiian banquet at the Hotel Oakland. The ambulance plan was originated and explained by George A. Cummings of Oakland and it was unanimously adopted.

Officers for the next year are: President, Charles F. Berg of Portland; first vice-president, F. J. Wadley of Los Angeles; second vice-president, Dave S. Mathews of Stockton; third vice-president, J. C. Thompson of San Diego; secretary-treasurer, William P. Stranberg of Portland.

Executive committee, W. W. Cribbins of Oakland, chairman; C. R. Tallent of San Francisco; Wallace P. Farrington of Honolulu; Bert Troncllas of Sacramento; R. E. Bigelow of Spokane; L. E. Warford of Seattle; and Charles Briggs of Tacoma.

Portland was chosen as the 1918 convention city.

NORTHERN NEW YORKERS WANT NATIONAL ADS

About twenty-five members of the Northern New York Press Association and their families attended the semi-annual meeting and outing at Westminster Park, on the St. Lawrence River, on July 20 and 21. Business sessions were held Friday afternoon and Saturday morning and the balance of the two-day get-together meetings was given over to motor boating and other entertainment. On Saturday a shore dinner was the feature of the day.

F. D. Corse of the Sandy Creek News gave a talk on "The Increased Cost of Production and How to Meet It." G. F. Darrow of the Ogdensburg Advance told "How to Create More Business for the Job Department" and C. B. Wood of the Cape Vincent Eagle read a clever paper on "Don'ts for the Craft." General discussions followed these addresses.

On Saturday Cortland Smith, president of the American Press Association, gave a convincing address on "National Advertising" and admonished the newspaper publishers to adopt a uniform flat rate for space and stick to it.

A committee (composed of Fred J. Rich of the Carthage Republican, secretary of the association; George F. Darrow of the Ogdensburg Advance and L. C. Sutton of the Massena Observer) was named to arrange a definite plan of action to create and secure more national advertising for the newspapers in the association which cover one of the most fertile fields in the state.

WHY ROGERS ASKS PAPER CONTROL.

WOULD PROTECT FOOLISH PUBLISHERS FROM THEMSELVES, BIG REASON.

"I am heartily in favor of the suggestion of the Federal Trade Commission that Congress pass a law giving it control of the print paper situation. I am not afraid that this control will be injurious to either side in the allied industries," said Jason Rogers, publisher of the New York Globe, to a representative of THE FOURTH ESTATE this week.

"As a war measure, unless all newspapers are compelled to apply some practicable rule of reason as to what requirements are, some will go like huge hogs, gobbling all supply in sight regardless of price, with the smaller papers around the country almost deprived of any supply.

"I have probably been as close to the print paper situation for the past year or so as anyone in the country and know whereof I speak. If the newspaper publishers as a whole had listened to the proposal of the paper makers through the Federal Trade Commission in March, many of them would be much better off.

"I believe in Federal legislation as recommended by the Commission more to protect foolish publishers from themselves than for any other reason. If they can be brought to cooperate and eliminate old, foolish competitive conditions, there will be enough paper, and at a fair price.

"In some of our cities one publisher owns his own mill while another does not. Unless the Government steps in and controls the entire product, the one without the mill will feel forced to buy regardless of price to meet the foolish extravagance of the other.

"Under some sane rule providing for a fixed quantity of reading matter for one-cent papers, for two-cent news papers, the entire elimination of returns and free copies, and sensible rates for advertising, our newspapers can all weather the storm and come out of it better and sounder for the experience.

"Likewise the paper manufacturers would be assured a fair and liberal profit for the product, which is more than some of them have made in the past. It will be a good thing for them to have publishers understand that it costs money to make paper, just the same as to make newspapers.

"If the manufacturers are assured fair and liberal profits, more money will be put into paper mills and in a comparatively short time print paper in any desired quantity will be obtainable at fair prices.

"The buying of print paper by publishers is not so largely a matter of what the paper costs as it is whether the price is fair or exorbitant. The paper maker must get his costs and a fair return on capital employed or he cannot live.

"In the case of the New York Globe, we are selling from 16,000 to 26,000 more copies a day than last year and using about ten tons less paper a day. Our paper bill, even at the higher price, is very little more than last year.

"The experience has been worth all it has cost us in showing us how we could do things that would have been thought impossible under ordinary conditions.

BUSINESS TROUBLES

The Rome (Ga.) Daily Chronicle, an afternoon paper, is in legal difficulties, its plant having been seized July 5 by county official on a distress warrant for rent. It is understood that a receiver will be named to adjust the affairs of the paper.

The New York Times INDEX

An alphabetical arrangement of the world's events, constituting a guide to developments in every phase of activity—war, politics, literature, science, art, industry, and finance.

The Index points the way to actual sources of information—the newspapers—and its references are accurate and complete, making research easy.

It is the only work of its kind, and is an elaborate catalog of everything that has appeared in the public press. It is a scientific cross-index.

To locate any event and to ascertain details connected therewith, The New York Times Index is indispensable.

Professional and business men bear testimony as to its value.

It is a source from which a managing editor or editor or librarian of a newspaper can find instantly, the principal news items of his own paper or other newspapers, making it an instrument of endless service. To a newspaper which desires to investigate its usefulness it will be sent on approval without incurring any liability.

The New York Times would appreciate its real usefulness to become known to Editors.

Sent On Approval.

New York Times Times Square, New York

THE NEW YORK HERALD'S GREAT FEAT.

The New York Herald showed great enterprise in publishing not only the numbers of the great draft for the army but the names and addresses of the men drafted in Greater New York, as well.

To do this it had to cover with reporters each one of the 180 draft districts in New York City, identifying from the numbers each man called.

In addition to this the Herald printed in its last editions all the numbers drawn in Washington, and maps showing at a glance the location of the draft districts throughout the city.

This publication gave everyone an idea of the various classes of citizenship called to the colors, letting the men who were drawn know at the earliest possible moment that they were named as the first to be summoned.

The work of presenting the names was complex. The names were taken from the maelstrom on the lists. Lists had been prepared but they were incomplete. It was indeed a gigantic task but it was accomplished easily enough through the medium of the Herald's great news gathering machine.

Samuel S. Koenig, Republican leader of Manhattan, summed up the enterprise in a few words when he said: "I don't see how any newspaper could perform such a gigantic task in the same time that the Herald did."

The news editor of the Herald only says: "It was simply an appreciation of the news value of these names and then some plugging by the whole staff to make a pronoun research of the list and transcribe the names"—a newspaper man's view of a big piece of journalistic enterprise. The presentation of numbers and names occupied 44 columns.

JUDGES CONFLICT IN CASE OF THE MASSES.

Once more the distribution of the August issue of the Masses, the New York Socialist magazine, has been arrested by official order.

On application of Assistant United States Attorney Earl B. Barnes, Judge Hough of the Circuit Court of Appeals on July 28 signed an order holding up the publication and directing that the publishers show cause before him at his country place, Windsor, Vermont, on August 2, why their paper should not be barred from the mails.

Judge Hough's action was a surprise to the publishers of the magazine as Judge Learned Hand in the United States District Court decided last Tuesday that Postmaster Patten had no right to refuse the mails to the publication despite the fact that its editorial policy was apt to be of assistance to the enemies of the Government.

The trouble between the publishers and the Federal officials arises out of a number of cartoons, poems and writings appearing in the issue which attack military conscription and the general war policies of the Government and praise certain persons convicted of having violated the law.

As the suit was for an injunction against the postmaster, and Judge Hand granted such application temporarily, Judge Hough holds that should the lower court have erred there would be no way of correcting the error if the paper were now distributed.

THE TRIBUNE AND WALDO.

THEIR STATEMENTS—TRIBUNE WILL CONTINUE STRICT ADVERTISING POLICY.

Neither the New York Tribune nor Richard H. Waldo is ready to announce what their future plans will be when Mr. Waldo retires from the Tribune on September 1, the expiration of his three-year contract.

George Verner Rogers, vice-president and general manager of the New York Tribune, when asked about the retirement of Mr. Waldo, said:

"The well known policy of the Tribune in the carrying out of which Mr. Waldo has so ably assisted, will in no way be affected by his retirement, except only as it may be, it possible, more vigorously prosecuted.

"We have, we believe, achieved through our advertising policy a responsive clientele of readers on a level with any other newspaper in this country.

"Samuel Adams will continue in the past to expose hypocrisy and dishonest practices.

"Mr. Waldo's plans for the future are not as yet fully matured, but he takes with him our very best wishes.

"For the present, at least, his duties will be discharged by various members of our staff."

Mr. Waldo when asked about his plans, said:

"For the present I am simply announcing that I shall leave the Tribune on September 1 at the termination of my contract, but am not prepared at the present time to announce my future plans."

T. W. Garvin, Mr. Waldo's associate, has left the Tribune to accept an appointment by the Federal Commission on Training Camp Activities as director at one of the cantonments. He will be stationed at Sparta, N. J., where New York troops will go for training. Mr. Garvin left on July 23 for his home in Cambridge City, Ind., and will be at his post August 1.

Mr. Garvin was only recently appointed vice-chairman of the advisory council of the Advertising Club, New York. He came to New York last fall from Cleveland where he was secretary of the advertising club.

THE ORGANIZATION OF A DAILY NEWSPAPER.

ARTICLE VII.

PROFIT-SHARING SYSTEMS—THEIR VALUE WEIGHED—APPEALING TO DESIRE FOR OWNERSHIP IS BEST.

BY EDMUND WALKER.

Chicago Herald Building, Chicago.

In this series of short articles on newspaper work Mr. Walker has created a hypothetical company and takes it through all the stages of an organization's financial existence.

Starting with the period of incorporation, he showed the opening of the accounting books. He will take the paper through a period of prosperity and finally make a mistake in financing, necessitating compulsory liquidation.

In the course of the articles he will introduce various phases of accounting, such as methods of handling depreciation, insurance, amortization plans, building funds, profit-sharing systems, etc.

What is the difference between a Profit Sharing System and a Gain Sharing System?

Supposing you say to your employees:

"This year has been very successful and I propose to take 8 per cent interest on my capital and to divide the balance of our profits equally with you."

That would be a Profit Sharing Plan.

Or again, supposing you say:

"Last year our total expenses were $500,000 and I propose to divide with you any reduction in the total expenses that we may be able to effect during the coming year."

That would be a Gain Sharing plan.

Why should you adopt any Profit Sharing Plan?

What is your motive in doing this?

There are three possible motives. First you may argue that labor is not getting a fair return and you may wish to do the fair thing by labor.

Second you may argue that trouble with your men would not occur so often if you shared your profits, or Third you may claim that by sharing your profits you will get more efficient work out of your employees.

We will assume that our motive is to enable us to get more efficient results from our employees.

Now, you have often heard the story of the child who played with matches, and playing with a Profit Sharing System is just a little more dangerous.

To simply install any system you may happen to have seen working in another plant is the height of recklessness and is doomed to cost you a great deal.

We must thoroughly understand our employee's frame of mind, his living conditions, and why he works.

Why does he work?

His first reason is the law of self preservation; his second is that he hopes to acquire something to take care of old age, thirdly he would like to be the owner of certain things, and fourthly he would like to have sufficient to give him some social standing in his community—that is why he works.

If you frame a system that will appeal to the law of self-preservation his strongest sense—then you will defeat the object of your system, for he will regard the profit sharing distribution as a part of his wage and he will raise his standard of living so that when a hard year comes along your employees will all be in financial difficulties.

The distribution to be made under this system must be regarded as a dividend or bonus, an amount which should be laid aside as capital.

DESIRE FOR OWNERSHIP.

Therefore we should appeal to his desire for ownership.

Supposing we formulate a plan to distribute shares in the capital of the company. This is the plan adopted by the United States Steel Company.

There are many danger points with this system. Some employees will, when they become shareholders, forget that they are employees and regard themselves as the owners of the business. Discipline will be effected and the efficiency results reduced.

Of course provision has to be made at the start whereby these shares would be re-purchased at a stated price in the event that the employees left the services of our company.

Any plan which necessitates an employee staying for a number of years with a company in order to participate is worthless, for the average employee demands his reward today for today's work and is not capable of looking ahead very far.

Some companies, rather than distribute shares have started their employees with an endowment insurance policy on which the dividends to be distributed by the company will be applied. This plan works out successfully in many cases, but you will find that the average man likes to invest his own money rather than have somebody else do it for him.

This article deals with Profit Sharing Systems only, but it is worthy of note that the thought we have just set out could be carried one step further.

Many companies spend large sums in building special rest rooms, swimming pools, etc., for their employees on the ground that this will attract a better class of workman. This may be all well enough, but the same amount of money paid in higher wages would attract a still better class of men.

PROFIT SHARING DISADVANTAGE.

For some years Profit Sharing System gained a great foothold and did actually produce very good results, but the number of successful attempts was not nearly as great as the number of disasters.

The main disadvantages are briefly as follows:

The average date of payment or distribution is too far ahead.

Employees regard the distribution as a part of their regular wage and raise their standard of living accordingly.

The distribution is usually small and causes dissatisfaction.

It is very difficult to formulate a system based on individual reward.

It is unfair that one employee should receive a payment for the work done by another.

If you will carefully think this over you will come to the correct conclusion that an employee values his position if he is being paid a little more than he can demand elsewhere.

Under these conditions he will invariably give you the best that is in him. There will be no disappointments.

Recently when making an installation of accounting and costing systems in a certain newspaper I said: "You can afford to pay $80 per week for a man to fill that job—how good a man can you get for that money?"

If you will look at the employment of help in that light you will get better results.

It should not be a question of how little can we pay John Smith, but how much can we afford to spend in that department and what can we buy for that amount of money.

Some men hold their jobs down while others get underneath and boost, and some thinking employers force their men to boost and force them to earn what they are paying and to earn more.

Owing to the dangers awaiting any profit sharing plan let us abandon the idea entirely and hire our employees on the above plan instead.

Next week we will discuss the adoption of Graphic Charts in our business, their use and their advantages.

WHY WOODSON FAVORS ZONE RATES IN SECOND CLASS

Urey Woodson, publisher of the Owensboro (Ky.) Messenger, who is in Washington looking after the interests of the smaller newspapers of the country as far as the war taxes concern them, has written the following letter to Senator McKellar:

"I have seen in the public prints your proposed amendment to the House bill No. 4280, which strikes me as much fairer than the act as passed by the House, or any of the amendments proposed by the finance committee of the Senate.

"It is not reasonable to say that one cent per pound for second class matter in the first three zones is not sufficient compensation to the government for the express companies are eager to take the packages of newspapers for that distance and much farther at one-half cent per pound.

"The whole difficulty of newspapers in this matter, is that we have been yoked up with the Curtis publications and other national periodicals and have been compelled to help carry the burden of their business.

"The finance committee now proposes to increase second class postage one-fourth cent per pound and to tax our net earnings over $4,000, five percent.

"This they do because they say the publications of the country have had a graft of from $80,000,000 to $100,000,000 per year through low second class postage rates.

"It is a manifest injustice to charge local papers, I mean small dailies from 5,000 to 20,000 circulation such as we have in Kentucky and Tennessee, five per cent more for their postage at this time when eighty per cent of their mail circulation is within the first zone.

"It is even more unfair to ask five per cent of our net earnings to help pay the freight bills of the Saturday Evening Post, Ladies' Home Journal, Country Gentleman, Collier's, and others, from Philadelphia and New York to California.

"It is inconceivable that any set of senators or congressmen could contemplate such an act of injustice. Yet the finance committee has voted 8 to 6 to do this thing.

"I was recently in Washington and was permitted to address the finance committee in behalf of about 200 small dailies in ten central western states on this subject. I showed them that by actual computation 70 per cent of the circulation of these dailies was within the first zone of 50 miles, and 91 per cent within the first and second zones.

"I also showed them that while the large city dailies were paying now about 55 per cent more for their white paper than last year, that the smaller dailies and weeklies were paying from 100 per cent to 150 per cent more, and there was no prospect of relief before the latter part of 1918.

"I showed them that in the case of one newspaper using only 300 tons of paper per year, the price was advanced by the paper mill on the 1st of last September from $3.50 per ton to $110 per ton at the mills; that this publisher wrote to at least 40 mills and brokers asking for paper, but was advised by all of them that he had been patronizing, and that this situation kept up for five months before this publisher could get any relief, while he was now paying from $70 per ton for a portion of his paper and $90 per ton for the remainder.

"In the case of this one publisher, whose gross income is only $80,000 per year, he was confronted with an excess paper bill of more than $20,000 for the present year. This is not an exceptional case. Throughout the West and South you will find, on investigation, this to be substantially true.

"If the newspapers and periodicals owe the government anything they owe it on postage and should be made to pay it, but those who do not owe it should not be made to pay the bills of those who do owe it."

INLAND PUBLISHERS FAVOR SECOND CLASS BY ZONES.

Nine-tenths of a vote taken among members of the Inland Daily Press Association are in favor of postage by the zone system, with county territory exempt as now, while a large percentage of the votes are in favor of a war tax on profits if other industries are so taxed.

Because of the conditions existing and the membership of the Inland being so actively engaged in caring for their plants, President E. P. Alder has deemed it wise to postpone the August meeting, which should have been called for the 15th.

Future legislation of the House and Senate may govern the time he will call it, or a special to take its place, and it is possible that the August and October meetings will be combined.

Just at this time, when the circulations of all but a very few daily and periodical publications are dropping like plummets, the fact that is holding its own, and that in the face of an advance in price from TEN to FIFTEEN cents, is surely significant.

NEWS OF THE AD AGENCIES.

A cooperative advertising campaign has been started in the newspapers by the members of the Southern Advertising Agents Association, which is one of the sectional divisions of the Association of American Advertising Agents. The aim is to teach newspaper readers the value of advertising in war time and the part the agent plays in successful publicity.

The agents represented in the advertisement are:

The Thomas E. Basham Company, Louisville; Cecil Company, Richmond; Chambers Agency, Inc., New Orleans; Johnson-Dallis Company, Atlanta; Massengale Agency, Atlanta; Thomas Advertising Service, Jacksonville; and Staples & Staples, Richmond.

The advertising agency, formerly known as Rauh & Rosenthal, will henceforth be conducted as the Richard S. Rauh Company. Offices as heretofore will be continued in the to all creditors who have had their claims properly filed. The agency up to date has paid 16 per cent in dividends.

J. K. Berger, well known in the motion picture field as "Simon Legee," has entered the advertising agency business. He is now connected with the E. T. Howard Agency, New York.

E. H. Morrissey, formerly with the Chicago Tribune, is a new addition to the copy-writing staff of the William H. Rankin Advertising Agency, Chicago.

W. A. Patterson, until recently in charge of the New York office of the Curtis Publishing Company, will start an advertising agency of his own in New York about September 1.

T. H. Stark has established an advertisers' service office in Louisville. He is a former advertising manager of the Louisville Paper Company.

L. S. Hopper is the new art director for Carl S. von Poettgen, the Detroit advertising counsel.

Jack Goldstein, late of the Seaman Agency, has joined the staff of the Michaels Agency, New York.

PUBLISHERS' PROFITS TAX.

From the New York Tribune.

The executive committee of the National Editorial Association submitted at the recent annual convention in Minneapolis a report protesting against the levying of a special 5 per cent tax on the profits of newspaper and magazine publishers.

That was most natural, in view of the fact that the publishing business is the one business in the country asked to pay this discriminatory tax.

But unlike the association of publishers, which also a short time ago expressed opposition to the special 5 per cent tax on profits, the executive committee of the National Editorial Association went straight to the heart of the situation.

It was willing to consider the peculiar circumstances which influenced the Senate Finance Committee to approve a publishers' profits tax.

The war revenue bill came to the Senate from the House of Representatives without a tax provision of this sort.

The House voted to increase postal rates for first class and second class mail matter and introduced a zone system of charges for second class mail—a reform which the government should have undertaken long ago.

The Senate Finance Committee was intimidated by the beneficiaries of the undercharges on second class mail into discarding the zone system.

It also greatly reduced the House second class rates. In order to compensate for these reductions it imposed the 5 per cent profits tax.

The second class mail subsidists, who profit enormously by the long haul privileges granted under existing law, were more than willing to saddle a discriminatory tax on the entire publishing trade.

A few publishers have a big stake in the perpetuation of the cheap second class flat rate.

Others have a relatively small stake.

Others have practically no stake at all. It was a piece of shrewd strategy, therefore, on the part of the long haul publishers to substitute a special tax for the proposed increased second class rates.

In that way they preserved their special privileges at the expense of the rest of the publishing trade.

The executive committee of the National Editorial Association has taken notice of this selfish trick.

It recommended as a fair basis for second class charges one which took into consideration the difference between a publisher who sends his publication two thousand miles and one whose mailing limit is two miles.

That is an indorsement of the zone system—the only equitable system either for parcels or for bulky second class mail.

If the House second class mail rates are restored to the bill, there will be no excuse for a special 5 per cent tax on publishers' profits.

And, beyond that, Congress will have put mail transportation at last on a rational, businesslike basis.

INTRODUCING AD FOLKS.

G. Irving Schneeberger, the new assistant manager of the Carney & Kerr Agency's service department in New York, began his advertising career several years ago with the Lesan Agency. From there he became secretary for the Block & Herzberg Agency and for fourteen months previous to appointment to his present position he was with the service department of Carney & Kerr.

G. IRVING SCHNEEBERGER.

Edwin E. Taylor, the new advertising manager of the Acme Harvesting Machine Company, Inc., has been fascinated by the printing and publicity business ever since his thirteenth business ever since his thirteenth year, when he began work as a newsboy in Camden, N. J. He later learned the printing trade and then switched into newspaper advertising on the staff of the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Further progress in his field was effected when he joined the staff of the Howard J. Ireland Advertising Agency, in Philadelphia, as an order clerk and worked up to the post of assistant general manager within three years. He was also associated for a time with the Harry Hornberger Advertising Agency and Blum Advertising Agencies of Philadelphia, spent a short time with the Philadelphia North American and then went to Detroit, joining the advertising staff of the E. M. F. Automobile Company.

Two years on the staff of Lord & Thomas, Chicago, were followed by three years as superintendent of publicity preparation with Montgomery Ward & Co., following which he resigned to go with the Acme organization.

The advertising history of Gayle Aiken, Jr., a recent addition to the Chambers Agency, Inc., New Orleans, has been one of steady progress since his graduation from Tulane University in 1907. Immediately after leaving college, he became connected with the Barron G. Collier Company, San Francisco. He temporarily abandoned advertising three years later to enter a private banking office in New Orleans.

The advertising fever had entered his blood, however, and he returned to the field as advertising manager of the Maison Blanche Company, a New Orleans department store, from which he resigned to make his present connection.

NO MORE RECRUITS.

The recruiting office which has been maintained for several months in the office of the Chicago Herald, has been closed. Captain Grover Sexton, who was in charge, has gone with his regiment on the first step of a long journey to France.

Eddie M. Hafferkamp, a Herald reporter, is also a member of the regiment.

The Greenfield (Ia.) Tribune, established recently by Robert Goshorn, has been sold to a Missouri newspaperman.

WHAT THE A.A.C.W. ARE DOING.

NEW "CLEARING HOUSE" FOR CLUB IDEAS—OFFICERS TO SPEAK—NEW MEMBERS.

Of vast importance to the clubs, it is expected, will be the department soon to be established at the headquarters of the A. A. C. W. at Indianapolis, to be conducted as a clearing house for club ideas and a source for cooperation in club establishment and growth. The work was authorized by the executive committee at St. Louis.

Among the chief problems of local clubs is that of insuring a healthy growth and maintenance of interest among members.

The new educational secretary will provide material aid in this respect, by passing from club to club the plans and methods which have been found successful; and from the headquarters office can be obtained counsel which may prevent the repetition of errors into which other clubs have fallen while pioneering.

Heretofore there has been no well-defined, consistent interchange of experience in this regard, and in consequence the best methods have not always become general knowledge. Many clubs have wasted effort and suffered the same pitfalls that had already been found unprofitable by others.

By means of this new department, it is believed a closer unity of the clubs can be brought about.

A speaker's bureau will be one of its functions, and the services of the department will at all times be at the command of the existing clubs and those organizations of advertising men that desire to become affiliated with the association.

The election, at the St. Louis advertising convention, of six vice-presidents of the Associated Advertising Clubs, situated at various points about the country, it is also expected, will mean much to the local advertising clubs, for there is a definite plan on foot to arrange for these vice-presidents to get in touch with the local advertising clubs.

As often as possible, they will go out and speak to clubs, and at all times, will be near at hand for the clubs in their districts to consult by mail.

Twelve new advertising clubs have been admitted to the Associated Advertising Clubs.

They are, with their officers and number of members:

Alton (Ill.) Advertising Club, president, Carl Harman; secretary, John D. McAdams; fourteen members.

Advertising Club of Circleville, O., president, S. F. Secrest; secretary, E. J. Howenstein; eleven members.

Galion (O.) Ad Club, president, E. P. Monroe; secretary, J. W. Wisterman; sixteen members.

Hastings (Neb.) Ad Club, president, H. Wilson; secretary, Lawrence T. Kohl; nineteen members.

Advertisers Club of Jacksonville, president, C. A. Tutewiler; secretary, B. R. Kessler; 100 members.

Lima (O.) Advertising Club, president, Walter C. Barnes; fifty members.

Advertising Club of Marion, O., president, Arthur F. King; secretary, Jay H. Maish; thirty-one members.

Women's Advertising Club of St. Louis, president, D. E. Nirdlinger; secretary, F. L. Burle; fifteen members.

Advertising Club of Washington, Ia., president, I. Rothschild; secretary, Ralph E. Shannon; nineteen members.

HIS REBEL PEN.

BY JAMES C. McNALLY.

His rebel pen was potent in the fray
When Crisis came, and Freedom faced decay;

It roused a people lulled to fatal ease
By scribbles skilled in smooth hypocrisy;

It wrought a sane unrest from day to day.

While other quills were cynic, sad or gay,

Busy with cant in paper, book and play;
It roared muddling, mischievous decrees—

His rebel pen!

Magnet of malice from the common clay;
Maker of foes of big and little sway;

It lashed the traitorous dollar decrees;

It worked until it won Truth guarantees;

It paved the way for final victories—
His rebel pen!

is an exemplification of what the clever newspaper man can accomplish when he leaves temporarily or for good, his chosen profession—no matter how new or difficult the field.

The idea has occurred to me that I will be doing just the right thing in bringing to the attention of THE FOURTH ESTATE the successful endeavors of a newspaper man in probably the most difficult field on this globe for any man to make good in.

I know from experience that THE FOURTH ESTATE takes particular interest in those of the profession that "make good" either in or out of newspaperdom. Hence my temerity in thus writing you.

Mr. Franklin hails from Troy, N.
Y., having been formerly on the Troy
Record. He has been in the Prison Department only a year, but is daily giving evidence of the adaptability and versatility of the successful newspaper man.

His article exceeded our utmost expectations and we personally (as should the public at large) are greatly indebted to him for his exhibition of the fact that the genuine newspaper man never loses his ability for keen observation nor his facility for base accurate deductions thereon.

WHY A PRESS AGENT IS.

EDITOR THE FOURTH ESTATE.

Sir: Well-intended agitation has been promulgated against the "press agent," or against any man who seeks to obtain on behalf of any commercial industry or institution free mention in news columns.

It cannot be that those who are active in this direction have considered the matter as an issue, as a question that has two sides.

Agreeing that no man has a right to convert public columns into private propaganda, I desire to point out that while the press agent's motives may be self interested, his work is not and cannot be.

The items which he submits are usually of general interest: the fact that they serve his purpose does not remove from them such general interest. In the main, almost any enterprise which can afford a press representative is of magnitude such that selected references to its affairs are of general interest.

It is impossible for any newspaper or all newspapers to "cover" every phase of life and events. Every corporation and individual, on the other hand, is conversant with all the affairs with which it or he has to do.

Therefore, is it not legitimate—is it not even helpful—that intelligent men bring to the newspapers descriptions or discussions of such things as they think may be of wide interest or even importance, and which the newspapers are at liberty to publish or reject as they do or do not agree with that estimate of an item's value?

Commercial press agents have long since ceased to use any sort of pressure. The day is gone when advertising is distributed in return for favors. The day is gone when reporters or editors are entertained by press agents with "direct results." A press agent's expense account these days carries no vouchers for high living corruption or gifts; there are no bribes paid or offered, inferential or actual.

The press agent brings to newspapers very frequently matters of news for which, were he in the employ of the newspaper instead of the corporation, he would be paid. No press agent who cannot find and present such items can survive—you need not bar nor smother him.

And the press agent who does not come forward with such matter as newspapers want and can gracefully set forth as information of public use or interest—why embarrass him? He offends no one and he helps both the commerce he represents and the newspapers he visits.

Now, as never before, has the press agent stepped forth into the light.
President Wilson has just selected a very able newspaper man—Mr. George Creel—to be the government press agent. His Committee on Public Information, I am sure you will all agree, is a wonderful help in gathering and presenting the news of the nation. And let me say, that before long there will be very few good press agents left to supply the papers with corporation news. At the rate they are being commissioned in the army and navy to supply the recruiting and other news of these branches of service to the newspapers, the corporations will be robbing the newspaper offices of your "star" men.

But there is still a bigger reason against any taboo of the industrial press agent.

He it is who helps to maintain in the public prints some sort of stable equilibrium for business—dull, stupid, grey business—in the form as against such lively topics as theatres, murders, scandals, crime, destruction, warfare, politics, baseball and Billy Sunday.

Business runs the universe. It occupies more time and attention in effort and thought than all the other subjects on earth put together, including religion, government and life and death; yet in the news columns it usually gets scant and grudging mention—it is not exciting usually and is not sensational ever.

But it deserves—yet, it demands—at least for its picked and highlighted incidents, a bit of recognition, a trifle of chronicle, a few lines of record.

The press agent seeks to supply this without cost. Nothing that he offers is obligatory in any sense. Are those any reasons to keep him out of an editorial room where any woman who has lost her cat can enter and hold an editor's attention?

Think it over, gentlemen.

The press agent should be welcomed, not snubbed. I maintain, and you may agree with me if you contemplate seriously how many press agents help to serve the newspapers every day, that he is an essential, not an inconvenience and a nuisance.

Among the speakers and their subjects were:

Farm journalism, E. E. Faville. Good newspaper make-up and good job printing, C. A. Whisnant. Does it pay to put life into the editorial page, C. E. Engalla. Foreign advertising, J. G. Kelley. Foreign advertising and rate cards, W. B. Jessup and Phil S. Bates. Cost sheets, etc., Eric W. Allen. Newspapering, a worthwhile profession, George Palmer Putnam. Helping one another, Elbert Bede. Newspaper taxes, Edgar B. Piper.

A. P. ACCEPTS APOLOGY.

This statement has been issued by the Associated Press:

"Respecting the unwarranted interference with the service of the Associated Press during the recent troubles at Bisbee, Ariz., by subordinate officials of the Phelps-Dodge Corporation, the copper mining firm, the officers of the Phelps-Dodge Corporation have apologized and given assurance that the action of their officials was contrary to the policy of the firm and that they must not under any circumstances take part in any like performance in future."

AD BUILDING IDEAS.

The Kingston (Ont.) Daily Standard had an unusual run of "Special Features" in the month of June and the first two weeks of July. In those six weeks it put on a "Play Hall Page," an "Economy Day Page," a "Pioneer's Page," a "Real Estate Page," a "Buy Your Car Now Page" and a six-page section given up exclusively to automobile advertising and news.

These special features, each of which ran twice, naturally stimulated local advertising in other directions, and as a consequence the Standard reports this the busiest summer season in its history.

MAIL TO AND FROM SOLDIERS IN EUROPE.

In order to prevent delay in dispatch and secure prompt delivery of letters, post cards, and printed matter addressed to the United States Expeditionary Forces in Europe, to which the domestic rates of postage apply, it is important that the postage be fully prepaid.

To this end the public is advised to hand in at the post office mail addressed to the expeditionary forces in order that it may be weighed, rated and have the full amount of postage affixed before the sender leaves the office.

Unpaid letters from soldiers in the United States Expeditionary Forces in Europe addressed for delivery in the United States or its possessions are to be rated with postage due at the single rate only to be collected on delivery.

LIBEL SUIT IN NEW ORLEANS.

Suit for $50,000, alleging libel, has been filed in the Civil Court by James M. Thomson, publisher of the New Orleans Item, against the Daily States Publishing Company, and J. Walker Ross, managing editor.

Marshall Ballard, managing editor of the Item, filed a similar suit in the Federal Court. His suit was filed in the Federal Court because he is not a resident of Louisiana. He has his home in Bay St. Louis, Miss.

The Ballard suit asks $50,000 damages because of alleged damages to his good name and $50,000 punitive damages.

The suits are those the Item announced several days before it would file because of an editorial "Consistency," published in the Daily States July 4.

The Thomson suit puts stress on the charge that he and his wife, formerly Miss Genevieve Clark, daughter of Speaker Champ Clark, were greatly mortified and embarrassed.

GETS $21,000 PURSE.

When R. S. White, associate editor of the Montreal Gazette, last week resigned his post as collector of customs of the Port of Montreal, after twenty-one years' service, he was presented with $21,000 and an illuminated address by importers, manufacturers, merchants and representatives of railway and steamship companies in Montreal, in appreciation and acknowledgment of his customs service and courtesies. The presentation was made and addresses delivered before a large representative gathering in the board of trade.

AD METHODS OF SOUTH AMERICA

TO BE STUDIED BY AGENT OF GOVERNMENT BY CHANCE.
FOR AMERICAN AD MEN

For its forthcoming investigation of the advertising methods in vogue in Latin America, the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce, has chosen as its agent J. W. Sanger, an advertising investigator, counsel, and writer of New York.

Mr. Sanger will study all the usual advertising methods in South America, paying particular attention to newspapers and other publications, direct-by-mail advertising, poster, street car and electric-sign advertising, and motion-picture sampling, novelty, and other advertising.

When the investigation is completed his conclusions and recommendations will appear in the form of a bulletin, and his bulletin, as well as his personal services in an advisory capacity when he returns to this country, will be available to any American manufacturer who wishes to promote trade in Latin America by advertising.

Before leaving this country the special agent will devote two months to visiting manufacturers, exporters, advertising agents, and others who desire to learn something about advertising in South America and who have suggestions to make as to the scope of the investigation.

Manufacturers and others who wish to consult Mr. Sanger may address their inquiries to the division of commercial agents, Room 409 Customhouse, New York City.

NATION'S FOUR-MINUTE MEN.

Branches of national service which promise actual fighting have drawn a full quota from the newspaper and advertising professions, with the prospect of the National Army drawing still further on the ranks, but other important fields of patriotic work have not been neglected by newspaper and ad men.

This was shown this week in Washington, where the "Four Minute Men" are being organized at the direction of the President as a department of the Committee on Public Information, with several newspaper and advertising men taking an active part.

At the Washington headquarters of the organization are stationed Keith J. Evans, advertising manager of J. T. Ryerson & Co., Chicago, and Franklin G. Dunham, president of the National Conference of College Newspapers.

Mr. Evans is business manager of the "Four Minute Men" and Mr. Dunham is secretary for universities.

Clarence J. Pyle, business manager of the Wilmington (Del.) Evening Journal, is state chairman of the organization for Delaware and other newspaper men holding similar positions for their respective states are: Edward F. Britton, editor of the Raleigh (N. C.) News and Observer; Royal Daniel, president of the Quitman (Ga.) Daily and Weekly Free Press; and Robert Latham of the Charleston (S. C.) News and Courier.

The work to which these men are devoting their time and brain power is a specialized publicity service, giving four-minute talks by local volunteers at motion picture theaters, following a single standard plan throughout the country.

have been recommended as specially fitted for the work by the state governors, arrange the conduct of all boards within the state, the appointment of local chairmen and speakers, negotiations with motion picture theatres and the enforcement of the rules laid down by the Washington authorities.

The speeches are all on topics of national importance connected with the war plans of the Government and, while assigned from Washington, they are developed by the individual speaker on the basis of the policy, points of emphasis, lines of argument and general information supplied by the department.

So far the Four Minute Men have been used successfully in the campaigns for the Liberty Loan, the Red Cross and for food conservation. They are now cooperating with the State Department, the topic being "Why We Are Fighting."

It is planned to organize Four Minute Men departments in all large universities in the fall.

IN SAN LUIS OBISPO.

C. F. Shoop, for nearly two years city editor of the San Luis Obispo (Cal.) Telegram, has returned to the Pasadena (Cal.) Star-News' city hall beat.

M. A. Magruder, city news editor, is now doing similar work on the Holtville Tribune.

Mr. Shoop's work has been taken on by C. L. Day, the editor and manager, L. B. Roberts, for a year advertising manager of the Telegram, has taken the city news editor's desk, and Walter A. Yarwood, one of the best known small paper advertising men on the Pacific Coast, succeeded Mr. Roberts as advertising manager.

Mr. Yarwood was for ten years advertising manager on the San Bernardino Daily Sun, and three years advertising manager on Long Beach Telegram.

Mr. Roberts was for seven years in charge of department store advertisements on the Minneapolis Tribune.

Quite a coincidence in Mr. Day's employment of Mr. Yarwood is that he succeeded Mr. Day as advertising manager on the Pasadena Evening Star eighteen years ago.

FORMER WORLD OWNER DEAD.

Manton Marble, at one time owner of the New York World, died on July 24 of old age at Allington Castle, near Maidstone, England.

Mr. Marble, who had been living in England quietly for twenty years, began to fail last Christmas.

Mr. Marble was the proprietor and editor of the New York World during the civil war and continued in charge of the paper until 1876. He always took a keen interest in politics and was consulted by the leading politicians of his day. His views were embodied in many state and national platforms of the Democratic Party and he wrote the Democratic State platform of 1874. Two years later he wrote the national platform of his party and he was largely responsible for the platform of 1884.

Mr. Marble was born in Worcester, Mass., on November 16, 1834.

Before his connection with the New York World the publicist was the assistant editor of the Boston Journal for a year, beginning in 1855. He then went to the Boston Traveler and remained there a year as editor. He joined the staff of the New York Evening Post in 1858 and continued in its service until 1860.

Mr. Marble joined the World in 1860, and two years later he became owner and editor. He was one of the last prominent survivors of the journalistic era of the civil war.

rence, died in Lawrence on July 16. He was eighty-nine years old.

AUGUST LEHMANN, publisher of German periodicals and connected with the publishing business for the past twenty-five years, died recently at his home in Holyoke, Mass. He was born in Saxony, Germany, coming to this country a quarter of a century ago. For a time he was manager of the German-American Printing Company of Holyoke, but later devoted his entire time to his printing and publishing plant. He was publisher of Die Bienen, a German weekly, the Teutonia, a semi-monthly, and of the Springfield Vorwaerts, a weekly.

FOR SUN'S "SMOKE" FUND.

Two thousand persons applauded the patriotic speeches and patriotic acts of twenty actors at a benefit performance for the New York Sun's "tobacco fund" in the Winter Garden Sunday night, and then showed that their applause was in earnest by contributing $2,500 for tobacco to furnish comfort for the American soldiers in the trenches.

Beginning with a subscription of $100 voted by the board of trustees, the members of the New York Press Club have contributed $814.50 to the Sun's Tobacco Fund for our soldiers in the trenches. This is the largest club collection that has been forwarded to the fund. With the exception of one it represents the biggest contribution yet made. The $30,000 mark is drawing closer.

No agents or solicitors are employed by the fund.

RYAN & INMAN ENLARGE.

J. C. Henderson and William Mendelssohn have joined the soliciting staff of Ryan & Inman, publishers representatives in Chicago.

For the past fourteen years Mr. Henderson has been active in the newspaper and farm paper field in the western territory. His first experience in the advertising business was with the C. H. Fuller Company. He later joined the Lord & Thomas Agency, from which connection he entered the publishers' representative field.

Mr. Mendelssohn has been covering the Middle-West territory for farm papers and daily newspapers for six years.

ON THE GRAND RAPIDS PRESS

Arthur C. Bond, chief editorial writer for the Grand Rapids (Mich.) Press, has been loaned by the Press management to Flint, his home city, for the duration of the war to take charge of the community's war relief work.

James C. Hitchcock, city editor, becomes editorial writer in Mr. Bond's place. Mr. Hitchcock was formerly owner of the Crawfordsville (Ind.) Review and was later with the Kalamazoo Gazette, the Marquette Mining Journal, the Lansing Republican and the Lansing Journal.

Charles R. Angell, an employee of the Press since 1906, except for intervals with the Cleveland Plain Dealer and the Detroit Free Press, becomes acting city editor.

J. A. Gary, state news editor, becomes assistant city editor in the place of Bert F. Post, who has taken charge of the "bull-dog" edition of the Press.

N. Y. POST BUYS AMBULANCE.

A base motor ambulance, to be purchased by a fund of $1,100 raised by employees of the New York Evening Post, will serve the United States Government and the cause of humanity on the battlefields of France. It is possible that it will be driven by an Evening Post employee, who has announced his desire to serve in that capacity.

The Columbia (Mo.) Daily Times has been sold to Ira T. G. Stone, cashier of the Central Bank, who is now acting as its publisher.

Sam Y. Gordon has leased the Inter Lake Tribune, of Brown Valley, Minn., to Van Gordon.

THE NEWS PRINT SITUATION.

turn may prove the sharpest thorn of the publisher's dilemma.

THE CANADIAN SITUATION AND NEW PRODUCT.

The Canadian situation simmers with no prospect of price developments before September 1, to which date the 2.50 price has been continued.

U. S. Government officials are watching with interest the Canadian developments, but they make no secret of the fact that inasmuch as Canada is now our nearest and closest ally, and dependent on the United States for a good many favors in addition to moral support, they take it with ill grace that the Dominion Government should restrict its paper producers to a price of 2.50 for domestic consumption and allow them to shake down American publishers for any price from 3.50 up.

However, it is realized that somebody must provide the "excess profits" that the Dominion Government is taxing so tartly.

During the past week United States Government officials have been at some pains to ascertain how newspaper publishers are coming on with their various projects for gaining relief by the establishment of their own paper mills.

It is found that here, too, snags have been struck, owing to the abnormal conditions which the war has provoked on every hand. Publishers with the news print bee in their bonnets are finding it virtually impossible to contract for paper making machinery with any expectation of early delivery.

Machinery manufacturers are otherwise occupied and, anyway, they declare that they cannot get the steel required. The present outlook is that it will be late in 1919 before the first of the publishers' new mills is ready to begin production, and even later dates are mentioned for the other new plants.

The meeting was attended by thirty Wyoming publishers and continued for three days. There was an automobile trip Sunday through the new dry farming district in East Cheyenne and a lunch at the Government experimental farm at Archer. In the evening the members were the guests of the Cheyenne Industrial Club at a dinner. The rest of the week the publishers were the guests of the city of Cheyenne at its "Frontier Days Celebration" and the "Cheyenne Semi-Centennial."

JUDGE IN MENTAL ANGUISH.

An action was begun July 26 in the Supreme Court by Magistrate Paul Krotel against the Press Publishing Company (the New York World) for $100,000 damages, alleging a libelous article was published in the New York World on June 1, 1917, entitled "Krotel Sides with Marine's Insult."

As the result of the article Magistrate Krotel declares he has been subjected to scurrilous attacks by persons and his reputation has been injured grievously among his friends. He states the article has reflected upon his character to the extent of causing mental anguish.

Ambassador Gerard Tells the Whole Truth About Kaiserism

IT MAKES a sensational story, stranger and more dramatic in its episodes than fiction. It exposes the unscrupulous intrigues of the Prussian court—intrigues that caused and are protracting the war.

It explains many things about which Americans have wondered—discloses amazing facts hitherto sealed in secret archives and provides the most conclusive of all answers to the query "Why must we fight?" Its revelations are of international importance, and will be read eagerly in every capital in the world.

As the result of an arrangement made by Cyrus H. K. Curtis, Mr. Gerard has granted the privilege of first publication of his book, as a serial, HARMSWORTH NEWSPRINT FOR U.S. PUBLISHERS.

CONTRACT CLOSED BY THE A.N.P.A. FOR 1,000 TONS A WEEK FOR WAR PERIOD —UNIQUE FINANCING PLAN.

At 7 o'clock in the morning of July 28, the Harmsworth paper mills, in Grand Falls, New Foundland, started making paper for the paper committee of the A.N.P.A.

The contract made with the representatives of Sir Alfred Harmsworth (Lord Northcliffe, owner of the London Times and Daily Mail and associated publications, who is now in the United States as head of the British War Mission) involves an aggregate of at least $7,000,000 and may run into double and triple that amount. Most careful and thorough estimates indicate a price to consumers at an average well below 3 cents per pound, delivered.

This is a milestone in the history of the A.N.P.A., as marking the beginning of a new era in the relation of the news print paper committee to not only the A.N.P.A. but also to very many of the smaller newspapers not now members of that organization.

It will be recalled by readers of THE FOURTH ESTATE that several months ago there were negotiations between the Federal Trade Commission, the A.N.P.A. paper committee and the Harmsworth interests, with every reason to believe that arrangements mutually satisfactory would be consummated.

THE FOURTH ESTATE was told by a member of the Federal Trade Commission that he was confident failure of these negotiations was due to their having been given publicity, which had started activities in certain direction, not in sympathy with the proposed arrangements, and that such activity succeeded them in arresting the whole matter.

Later on, the matter was again taken up along somewhat different lines and brought to a successful conclusion in the form of a contract which became operative last Saturday.

The Harmsworth mills at New Foundland have on hand mill supplies of all kinds sufficient to meet manufacturing conditions over a period of 12 to 15 months, with the exception only of sulphur needed in the manufacture of the sulphite pulp.

There is no necessity for any apprehension on account of the sulphur, for the reason that the stock of manufactured sulphite turned in at the mill is sufficient to meet its maximum demands over a period of 17 months, even if the sulphite mill is not operated during this time.

The paper committee, however, is assured of all the sulphur it may find it desirable to use.

William Scott, the managing director of the Anglo-New Foundland Company, will operate the mills under the direction of A. G. McIntyre, the special representative in the employ of the paper committee of the A.N.P.A.

That is to say, the ground wood pulp, sulphite and paper will be made as directed by Mr. McIntyre, who will have a representative continuously on the ground at the mills in New Foundland—all for the purpose of providing the particular type and kind of news print paper that best satisfies publishers of this country.

The contract is practically the equivalent of a rental on a tonnage basis. That is to say, the materials on hand will be charged up at cost, all having been purchased prior to the advances since the war began. This, plus the labor cost and an agreed amount above this, will constitute the cost to the paper committee.

There are five paper machines at these mills with varying widths, which enable them to economically meet all the requirements for rolls and sheets in their many sizes.

The contract provides for 1,000 tons per week, plus any additional amount turned out by the mills in excess of that which the Harmsworth publications desire for their own use.

Time charters have been arranged by an old and experienced deep-sea traffic manager, and there is every reason to believe that these charters will be in no way interfered with by the United States Government if it should, later on, requisition ships for war purposes.

The contract covers one year as a minimum, and is so drawn that beyond this it continues during the length of the war, plus three months thereafter, and is guaranteed by a group of publishers entirely satisfactory to Harmsworth interests.

To operate this contract and to distribute the paper contracted for there is organized a corporation known as the Publishers Paper Company, Inc., which will have its offices in the New York World Building.

The capital stock of the Publishers Paper Company, Inc., will be held in the names of the members of the A.N.P.A. news print paper committee.

The general manager of the company will be Mr. McIntyre.

In order to take care of the small publishers throughout the country, so far as it may be found necessary, the mill will turn out approximately 40 tons per day of sheet paper.

This proposition is not to be operated for the purpose of making a profit to the company itself, any members of the paper committee or the guarantors of the contract, except only as users may profit by its operations through getting their paper supply at a lower price than they otherwise could secure it.

There is at the present time at the mills in New Foundland 15,000 tons of dry weight of ground wood pulp, which are taken over by the Publishers Paper Company, Inc., at cost and which will be placed with manufacturers of this country to the best advantage for the interests of the A.N.P.A. membership.

It is fair to say that the consummation of the foregoing has been due to the activities of the Federal Trade Commission, together with some of the other departments of the Washington Government, coupled with the personal efforts of Roy Howard, president of the United Press, through his intimate acquaintance with the owner of the Harmsworth mills (Lord Northcliffe); the members of the news print paper

HURRY THE WAR TAXES.

INDECISION BY CONGRESS HINDERING BUSINESS, SAYS A.N.P.A. PRESIDENT.

Hopewell L. Rogers, president of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, has issued a statement on behalf of that association saying that a prompt and proper excess profits tax would do much to adjust business conditions—for the newspapers as well as for every other industry.

Mr. Rogers says:

"One of the first lessons learned by England at the beginning of the present war was the necessity of the conduct of business in as near the usual and regular manner as possible, and it took special pains to warn all its colonies on this point.

"Under ordinary legislative conditions business adjusts itself to the laws or rules laid down in a regular and orderly manner, and the prices of goods manufactured are fixed in relation to the laws passed.

"The fixing of taxes, however, affects business more seriously than any other form of legislation, and in any attempt to raise unusual or excessive amounts of money for any special purposes as the carrying on of a war, the legislators should use every care to see that there is as little disturbance to business as possible.

"In the serious task Congress has before it in its effort to raise money for the proper conduct of this war, greater judgment is necessary than ever before in the financial history of this country.

"The war is being conducted for the benefit of posterity, and the entire burden should not be put upon the present generation. Especially the Government should not attempt to have too much of the burden carried by the people within the next two or three years.

"If Congress had adjusted its taxes immediately upon learning that additional revenue was necessary and had apportioned one-tenth or one-twelfth of the total amount to be raised each year and had immediately started to tax the people for the current year, business would have been fairly well adjusted to the new conditions by this time.

"But they make the mistake of dragging the matter out until a second call for money is made, and then give the public a greater shock in an effort to adjust themselves to a much larger change in the method of doing business to meet the much greater increase in the initial change in taxes.

"Thus do they keep the business interests of the country in doubt as to how much they ultimately will have to pay, and cause them to add excessive profits in order to protect themselves against this unknown quantity.

"Congress must really endeavor to make as little change as possible in the conduct of business, and war profits must bear the greater portions of this burden.

"The Chamber of Commerce of the United States has gone into this question very thoroughly and has suggested a reasonable and practicable form of taxation which would remove the necessity of taxation of any special industry, and at the same time would place the greater burden on those many businesses which are making special profits due to war conditions.

"Congress seems unwilling to consider this fair method of taxing, but is apparently endeavoring to tax in a hand-to-mouth fashion by putting a special fixed tax on munition and certain other businesses in addition to other taxes on profits, making more or less of a muddle of the whole matter.

"This muddled condition possibly applies more particularly to the newspaper business than to any other line. It is not necessary to say that the newspapers are willing and glad to stand their full share of this burden. But the business has been particularly hard for the last year or two, and the haphazard method of Congress seems to be an endeavor to punish them, or the public through them, with several special discriminatory taxes in spite of, or in addition to, this otherwise unfavorable condition.

"A prompt and proper excess profits tax would do much to adjust business conditions."

MASSAS CASE HEARD.

Federal Judge Charles M. Hough of the Circuit Court of Appeals went to Windsor, Vt., on August 2 from his summer home at Hanover, N. H., and heard argument on a motion by the Government to make permanent the order he issued at New York, July 20, staying Federal District Judge Learned Hand's injunction restraining Postmaster Thomas G. Patten of New York from barring the August issue of the Socialist paper, the Masses, from the mails.

Judge Hough reserved decision, but will have it ready for today, it is said. If he continues his stay it will hold up the August number at least until October, when the full Circuit Court of Appeals hears the case.

EXAGGERATION BY CENSOR CREEL

SHOWN BY OFFICIAL STORY OF ADMIRAL GLEAVES ON CONVOY'S TRIP.

The official story of the experience which the American transports carrying the Pershing expeditionary force had with submarines on their way to France, in the form of a report by Rear Admiral Gleaves, who commanded the convoy of American destroyers, justifies the charge of naval officers that the account of the "battle" which George Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information, wrote in the form of a Fourth of July announcement by Secretary of the Navy Daniels, was an elaboration and was not in accordance with the facts.

It shows why Admiral Sims, commanding American naval forces in European waters, repudiated the story on the ground that it tended to make the American Navy ridiculous.

Secretary Daniels made the Gleaves report public, with certain military information deleted, after he had sent an uncensored copy in confidence to the Senate Naval Committee, members of which recently inquired as to the truth of charges in the Senate that the official account of the attack given out on July 3 was greatly exaggerated.

Instead of an "attack in force" by submarines and a "battle in which torpedo discharge by the enemy forces became increasingly scattered and inaccurate under heavy gun fire of the American ships," Rear Admiral Gleaves reports that one enemy submarine was sighted on this occasion and one of his officers believes there may have been two.

Instead of the Creel statement that one submarine was certainly sunk and "that there is reason to believe that the accurate fire of our gunners sent others to the bottom," Rear Admiral Gleaves makes no mention whatever of any submarine having been hit by a single shot from any of the guns and indeed makes it clear that on this first occasion the submarine was not sunk, for one of the destroyers, which is designated as destroyer B, reported the presence of this U-boat or possibly two astern after the transports passed.

The second attack, to which Mr. Creel referred as a battle resulting in favor of "American gunnery," consisted in sighting first one submarine and then another two hours later.

Not a shot was fired, but one of the destroyers saw a mass of bubbles which were presumably coming up from the wake of a periscope and let go a depth charge just ahead. Several pieces of timber, quantities of oil and debris came to the surface, which was regarded as evidence that a U-boat was at least damaged.

Admiral Gleaves reports a third experience where it was believed a submarine had been sighted, but this was not referred to in the Creel statement.

Comparison of the Creel statement with the report of Admiral Gleaves explains why the Associated Press account from abroad and other accounts of eye-witnesses failed to bear out the picturesque statement purporting to describe the "battle" and bearing the signature of Secretary Daniels.

Referring to the first attack, at 10.30 p. m., June 22, the Daniels announcement written by Mr. Creel said:

"The attack was made in force, although the night made impossible any exact count of the U-boats gathered for what they deemed a slaughter."

The Fourth of July statement was prepared personally by George Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information, in the presence of Secretary Daniels and Admiral Benson, chief of naval operations, and has been much criticised in the Senate and the press on the ground that it exaggerated what occurred.

It has just become known that the Navy Department is making an investigation to ascertain the responsibility for statements contained in an Associated Press cable dispatch from the British base of the American naval force in European waters, quoting an unnamed American naval officer as denying that there had been any such encounters as were described in the communication given to the press on the evening of July 3, by the Committee of Public Information.

There have been hints that the author of this statement is known and that the investigation might be followed by his relief from duty and possibly court martial proceedings.

The Navy Department declines to make any statement on the subject, but it is known that Secretary Daniels and other officials of the Government were very indignant over the practical denial of the report from Admiral Gleaves that warships under his command had encountered German submarines while convoying American transports across the Atlantic.

GROWTH AHEAD FOR N. E. A.

President H. C. Hotaling, newly elected president of the National Editorial Association, has ambitious plans for the organization. In an interview given out just after his return from a Canadian trip, he said:

FINE WORK IN NEWARK.

The Newark (N. J.) Star-Eagle handled the names of the men drawn in the military draft pool, on July 20 and 21, in a manner that has brought it the highest of compliments.

On July 20 the paper printed, in the order in which they were called, the names of two-thirds of the 6,500 men summoned in 23 districts, and on July 21 it gave complete the names of twice the quota for each district.

The Star-Eagle had a harder task than most papers that handled the names because its territory takes in 23 municipalities in Essex County and four in Hudson County. It did the job by getting all the names and handling them practically as did the Brooklyn Eagle, whose system was described by THE FOURTH ESTATE last week.

And the modest credit taken by Managing Editor J. P. Coakley is: "It was to us simply another instance of the policy of our publishers to prepare for big news and cover it thoroughly."

What the Brooklyn Eagle did for the territory east of New York City, the Newark Star-Eagle did a couple of jumps to the west of the Hudson River.

CHEMIST CENSORS MEDICAL ADS.

DETROIT NEWS DETAILS STAFF EXPERT TO PASS ON ALL DOUBTFUL CLAIMS.

Proprietary medicines advertised in the Detroit News are now analyzed by a member of the staff, George J. Elliott, pharmaceutical chemist, when their character or the claims made for them are questionable. This check upon the occasional advertiser of doubtful ethics has just been undertaken by the News with a view to the safeguarding of its readers and the enhancement of the value of its advertising columns for the careful merchandiser.

Following is the News' explanation of its innovation:

"In fulfillment of its obligations to the reader, the News feels it must also serve the advertiser by acquainting him with its basis for doubt, when doubt occurs, however infrequently.

"For one reason or another the proprietary medicines have been for a number of years under fire, suspicions being voiced by nearly all classes, including the very manufacturers and newspapers themselves. Some have been rightly indicted; perhaps the majority of advertised medicines have been meritorious, in themselves; but the advertisers have often erred in their manner of presenting their wares to the public.

"The News purposes to assure itself, so far as it is able, that testimonials are legitimate and truthful; that the merits of the medicines are honestly proclaimed; that the advertising 'copy' will serve and not offend or hurt the reader.

"The News believes the time ripe for the extension of its watchfulness in the public interest and plans to increase its power to safeguard its readers. With this in view it has availed itself of the exceptional qualifications of Mr. Elliott, who will devote himself to analysis of the pharmacological and therapeutic properties of proprietary medicines advertised in the paper. He is an experienced pharmaceutical chemist and has been with the News for two years.

"The News believes its enterprise in this direction will be greeted cordially by the enlightened manufacturer, and with question by none. It seeks no notoriety because of the unusual character of the work in hand, feeling merely that it is obeying the constant impulse to serve the people in its capacity as a public institution, and the advertisers who are its patrons."

CHICAGO TRIBUNE'S PARIS EDITION FOR TROOPS.

The Paris edition of the Chicago Tribune has just made its appearance in Chicago. It is a four-page paper full of "home" news, including regular Tribune features by John T. McCutcheon, Ring Lardner, B. L. T. Sidney Smith and others. Edward Pierson, editor of the Paris edition, reports that it was favorably received by the boys at the front.

The Tribune has announced that friends or relatives of the boys at home may subscribe for the Paris Tribune through the Chicago office and the paper will be delivered direct to any man in service at the front.

REAL NEWS FROM HOME.

Uncle Sam has taken official steps to see that the boys at the front receive news from home. The Home Service League, which has been given official sanction, will supply those in military and naval service with newspaper clippings from their home town papers.

WINDOW DISPLAY WEEK.

The American Newspaper Publishers Association's Bureau of Advertising will hold its annual Window Display Week, throughout the United States and Canada, from October 8 to 13 inclusive.

AN I.P. DIVIDEND DEMANDED.

TWO STOCKHOLDERS BRING SUIT—COMPLAIN OF MANAGEMENT.

A suit has been brought in the New York Supreme Court to compel the International Paper Company to pay to stockholders long deferred dividends. The plaintiffs are Ernest F. Turnbloom and Delevan A. Holmes, holders of common stock.

The plaintiffs allege that individual defendants—directors and officers of the company—are responsible for the "oppressive, arbitrary and illegal manner" in which the affairs of the company have been conducted. The plaintiffs also ask that these officials be ousted and a board of directors elected to represent the shareholders.

It is alleged that the company, although a profitable business was done, ceased in 1908 to pay in full the dividends on the preferred stock and that in 1915 the arrearage amounted to 33½ per cent on the total value of the preferred stock of $7,506,244.

Turnbloom and Holmes say that at the annual stockholders' meeting in April last two resolutions were introduced providing for the payment of the deferred dividends, but that one was tabled and the other was rejected through the influence of a member of the Stock Exchange.

It is further mentioned that Congress now threatens to take over and assume the management of the paper company, although the plaintiffs say they are not informed as to the violation of the Federal anti-trust law by the defendants.

The defendants it is alleged, have been interested in the Newsprint Manufacturers' Association for the purpose of suppressing competition. It is alleged that while proceedings by the Federal Government were pending the defendants agreed with the Federal Trade Commission to reduce the price of news print paper from $3.10 to $2.50 a hundred pounds, although the company had contracts that called for the higher price.

It is set forth that the capital stock of the International Paper Company was $45,000,000 in 1898 and 1899, which was largely issued in acquiring properties of approximately twenty-five different companies. On November 1, 1898, after two quarterly dividends had been paid on the preferred stock, the net surplus amounted to $814,908.

Business continued highly profitable, it is said by the plaintiffs, and the dividends were paid until 1908, when they ceased.

The balance sheet on December 31, 1916, showed a surplus net earning for the year of $3,836,492, which, with the net surplus already on hand, gave a total of $16,238,743.

Notwithstanding this favorable showing, the plaintiffs complain, the defendants failed and refused to declare a dividend.

PRESS REGULATIONS AT THE ARMY CAMPS.

The distribution of correspondents' forms to the newspapers discloses that the War Department will enforce a strict censorship over all dispatches sent from camps of the National Army.

This regulation of the press will be extended to photographers and motion-picture operators, who will be required to obtain a special license from the War Department.

During last summer's Mexican border mobilization no attempt was made to dictate what could be sent, because, although the troops' Federal status was the same as now, there had been no formal declaration of war.

CANADA'S "DOUBLE SPREAD" LAW.

PROTESTED BY NEWSPAPERS AS UNREASONABLE AND LIMITING INCOME.

There has been forwarded to the Canadian Postmaster-General a resolution, passed at the fifty-ninth annual meeting of the Canadian Press Association, requesting the Post Office Department to amend the second class postal regulations to permit the mailing at second class rates of issues of newspapers containing double-page advertisements, but otherwise entitled to second class mailing privileges under the postal regulations.

The resolution points out that some time ago the Post Office Department ruled that issues of newspapers containing a double-page spread advertisement could not be carried at second class rates under a clause requiring that "all pages of a publication mailed at second class postal rates shall be of the same size, form and make-up."

The C. P. A. maintains that this interpretation does not seem to be a reasonable one and was not contemplated when the clause was adopted; that the prohibition does not serve any public interest to a degree sufficient to compensate for the loss in advertising revenue to the press of Canada; and that it is particularly desirable at this time of stress, owing to the war, that there should be no unnecessary limitations upon the newspapers.

LIVE NEWSPAPER FOR FUTURE ARMY OFFICERS.

The boys in training for officers' commissions at Fort Sheridan have a combination weekly newspaper and text-book, written in live, interesting style and so put together that it is easy to look at, under the title of the Fort Sheridan Reveille.

It is edited by E. B. Lockwood and is distributed free to every man of the 5,000 student officers at the camp, its support coming from advertising revenue, which, from the appearance of the paper, seems to be more than ample. Mr. Lockwood bears out the testimony of the advertising columns by the statement that the Reveille has made several contributions to the mess fund at the camp.

Officers and instructors at the fort have contributed articles on the technical side of the training in almost every issue and in the last number appeared an article on "Field Physical Training" by Major Herman J. Koehler, master of the sword and instructor in gymnastics at West Point. This will be the text of official physical training regulations at the training camps of the National Army.

Other features which have made a hit at the camp are the cartoons and correspondence of Lew Merrill, touching on prominent officers and students and on humorous points in the life of the camp.

Advertising is being handled by B. F. Rolfe, who has succeeded in securing liberal support from Chicago merchants and from national advertisers.

CHICAGO HITS FALSE ADS.

Chicago's first prosecution under a new ordinance against "untrue, deceptive and misleading" advertising has just been filed by City Prosecutor H. B. Miller, against Samuel Bezark, a milliner. Window advertising for a special sale is the point of attack.

NEW WAR NEWS RULES ARE ISSUED.

AMERICAN TROOPS' ARRIVAL IN EUROPE MUST NOT BE PRINTED WITHOUT WAR SECRETARY'S SANCTION.

Publication on July 28 of news of the arrival of American soldiers in Europe resulted in the issue on July 30 of new Government rules for the voluntary censorship of the American press. The rules, made public through George Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information, set forth the kinds of military information which the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are anxious that the press shall refrain from publishing unless authorized by the War or Navy Departments.

As there is no legal censorship the rules take the form of "specific requests" to the press. The new regulations contain the first general request that there be no published mention, without the War Secretary's authorization, of the arrival of American troops at European ports, replacing in that respect an express authorization in the old rules for use of any cable dispatches passed by the European censors.

Other sections of the old regulations are made more severe by specific stipulations, in place of the more general language employed in the rules in force until now. Information which the Government considers might reveal military movements or policies is described in great detail.

After the issuance of the regulations Director Creel of the Bureau of Public Information recommended to President Wilson that the official vice of war news be abandoned and the censoring be left strictly up to the newspapers.

In making his announcement of the new rules Mr. Creel said the overwhelming majority of newspapers have given "unselfish, patriotic adherence to the voluntary agreement."

THE RULES.

The text of Director Creel's announcement setting forth the new voluntary censorship rules follows:

"The desires of the Government with respect to the concealment from the enemy of military policies, plans, and movements are set forth in the following specific requests. They go to the press of the United States directly from the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, and represent the thought and advice of their technical advisers.

"For the protection of our military and naval forces and of merchant shipping it is requested that secrecy be observed in all matters of:

"1. Information in regard to the train or boat movements of troops. Such information is at all times and under all circumstances dangerous and should be scrupulously avoided.

"2. Information tending directly or indirectly to disclose the number or identity of troops in the expeditionary forces abroad.

"3. Information tending to disclose the names of line officers in expeditionary forces and reference to individual units of these forces. Only names of staff officers are permissible.

"4. Information calculated to disclose location of the permanent base or bases abroad.

"5. Information that would disclose the location of American units or the eventual location of American units or the eventual or actual position of the American forces at the front.

"6. Information of the movement of military forces toward seaports or of the assembling of military forces at seaports from which inference might be drawn of any intention to embark them for service abroad; and information of the assembling of transports or convoy, and information of the embarkation itself.

"7. Information of the arrival at any European port of American war vessels, transports, or any portion of an expeditionary force, combatant or non-combatant, until announcement is authorized by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy.

"8. Information of the time of departure of merchant ships from American or European ports or information of the ports from which they sailed.

"9. Information indicating the port of arrival of incoming ships from European ports or, after their arrival, indicating, or hinting at, the port at which the ship arrived.

"10. Information as to convoys and as to the sighting of friendly or enemy ships, whether naval or merchant.

"11. Information of the locality, number, or identity of warships belonging to our own navy or to the navies of any country at war with Germany. Papers published in ports should with especial care refrain from giving information to enemy agents in regard to ships stationed or calling at such ports. Because dangerous news is known locally, it does not follow that it can be safely published. Non-publication of dangerous news obliges the enemy to rely on spies actually in the localities concerned, thus adding difficulties and delay in its transmission.

"12. Information of the identities of American merchant vessels defending themselves against submarines, and the identities of their captains, their gun crews and crews. No matter from which side of the ocean comes the news, it is asked that this information be withheld from publication. Editors will appreciate the importance of cooperation to withhold from the enemy such information as might expose the officers and men of merchant vessels to the danger of cruel and outrageous reprisal.

"Information of the coast defenses of the United States. Any information of their very existence, as well as the number, nature, or position of their guns is dangerous.

"14. Information of the laying of mines or mine fields or of any harbor defenses.

"15. Information of the aircraft and apparatuses used at Government aviation schools for experimental tests under military authority.

"16. Information of all Government experiments in war material.

"17. Information of secret notices issued to mariners or other confidential instructions issued by the Navy or the Department of Commerce relating to lights, lightships, buoys, or other guides to navigation.

"18. Information as to the number, size, character, or location of ships of the navy or of the merchant marine ordered laid down at any port or shipyard, or in actual process of construction, or information that they are launched or in commission.

"19. Information relating to dry-docks and to all classes of work, repairs, alterations, or construction performed in connection therewith.

"20. Information of the train or boat schedules of traveling official missions in transit through the United States.

"21. Information of the transportation of munitions or of war material.

"Photographs conveying information specified above should not be published.

"Repeated and serious violations of the voluntary censorship have been attempted to be excused on the score of misunderstanding or lack of positive information.

"Pains have been taken to make this restatement of necessary secrets so complete and explicit as to leave no room for honest ignorance or dishonorable evasion.

"Neither do the requests go forth with any time limit. Their application covers the period of war.

"At no point do they touch opinion or criticism, being concerned entirely with the protection of the lives of America's defenders and the success of military plans.

"These requests go to the press without larger authority than the necessities of the war-making branches. Their enforcement is a matter for the press itself. To the overwhelming proportion of newspapers who have given unselfish, patriotic adherence to the voluntary agreement, the Government extends its gratitude and high appreciation."

WHAT OFFICIALS SAY.

When Secretary Baker and Mr. Creel were asked by a representative of the Associated Press whether they subscribed to the language in the paragraph discussing alleged violations, Mr. Baker said he approved the whole statement, although he had not written it.

Mr. Creel said that Secretary Daniels also had approved the statement before it was issued.

Mr. Baker authorized the statement that he had in mind, in relation to the strong language employed by Mr. Creel, no specific newspaper or press association. In the harsh language used, he insisted, the purpose had been to do what many press representatives asked be done, to "scold" offenders.

The secretary said he had received a report from the War College showing nine separate items published in American papers of recent date which the officers of the college regarded as furnishing valuable information to the enemy.

Mr. Creel said he agreed in what the secretary said. He declared that the purpose of the paragraph referred to was general, not directed at any specific case or cases.

In this view, Mr. Creel added, he felt certain that he spoke for Secretary Daniels also.

The whole purpose of the new regulations, both Mr. Baker and Mr. Creel insisted, was to make impossible any future misunderstanding of what was desired.

Assurances have been given by Navy and Army officials that disasters will not be hidden under the veil of this censorship, and presumably under the new regulations also, the American people will be expected to understand that no news is good news in this respect.

It is reported as possible that a system of regular official announcements by the War Department on the military situation will soon be initiated.

The secretary is known to have some such plan under consideration.

CREEL WOULD ABANDON NEWS VISE.

After the new regulations were issued Chairman Creel of the Committee of Public Information recommended to President Wilson and Mr. Creel's committee associates that no further effort be made to organize or conduct a voluntary press censorship.

This means that Mr. Creel proposes that the Government abandon all connection with passing upon the property of publishing news dispatches relating to the war, leaving to the newspapers and press associations themselves the matter of demonstrating whether certain classes of war news should be published.

In taking this course, Mr. Creel has asked in effect that the Committee on Public Information be relieved of the duty of vicing press dispatches. His recommendation is the outcome of the series of incidents that led to misunderstanding and some feeling between the Creel committee and the press.

After both houses of Congress had rejected the several press censorship provisions offered, newspapers adopted the practice of asking the Committee on Public Information if there was objection to the publication of this or that item of news relating to the war. So many arbitrary decisions were rendered that misunderstandings were frequent, and it became apparent to observers that the censorship could not be maintained under present conditions.

It is in recognition of this condition that Mr. Creel has recommended that the Committee on Public Information be relieved of any connection with censorship matters.

In his recommendation to the President and the other members of the Committee of Public Information, Mr. Creel takes the ground that as the Government is without authority to make a press censorship effective it should not attempt to exercise any supervision over the publication of press dispatches, and to this end should decline to advise or admonish newspapers concerning the use of news matter relating to the war.

If President Wilson should approve Mr. Creel's suggestion, the Committee on Public Information would abandon its Division of Vice as an active branch. Newspapers would then be obliged to decide for themselves whether news items should be printed, but the Committee on Public Information would expect them to conform to the rules contained in the statement given out on July 30 by Mr. Creel.

It is understood that Mr. Creel would be willing that this committee should give its opinion when asked as to the advisability of printing any piece of military news, but the advice would be informal and the committee would not insist that it be binding.

Furthermore, the committee would not take it upon itself to notify other newspapers or press associations that this particular piece of news should be kept out of print or admonish any newspaper or press association for going contrary to the committee's opinion.

Mr. Creel is said to be hopeful that the newspapers will adopt their own means of meeting failures to abide by the suggestions as to objectionable news laid down in the latest rules given to the press.

WOULD STOP ADS IN NEWSPAPERS.

C.P.A. OPPOSES A BILL THAT WOULD LIMIT LEGAL ADS TO GOVERNMENT PAPERS.

A proposed amendment to the Canadian Federal "Companies Act" aims to eliminate advertising in the local newspapers and is being protested in Parliament by the Canadian Press Association.

The present Federal "Companies Act" requires that the Letters Patent: incorporating a company and any supplementary Letters Patent varying the company's power or capital, shall be published twice in the Canada Gazette and four times in a newspaper published in the city or county in which the head office or chief agency of the company is located.

Bill Q2, which is now before the Senate of Canada, proposes to substitute one insertion in the Canada Gazette for the publication required under the present act as described above.

Manager J. M. Imrie of the C.P.A. on July 18 appeared before the Senate Committee on Banking and Commerce to urge the retention of the clause requiring publication in a local newspaper.

Mr. Imrie said the provision for publication in the present act very properly recognized:

(a) The right of the general public to know what powers are given to a corporation by the Government as the representative of the people.

(b) That there is a certain suspicion in regard to the granting of wide powers to corporations, particularly to those with large capital, and that publicity in regard to the powers granted would tend to allay suspicion in most cases.

(c) That while publication in the Canada Gazette might be necessary to complete the official record, that publication did not give the desired publicity to the general public.

Mr. Imrie argued that the events of the eleven years since the present act was passed emphasized the right of the public to know what powers were granted to corporations and the wisdom of giving that publicity in order to prevent unjustified suspicion.

Mr. Imrie said he understood the limiting of the publicity to a notice in the Canada Gazette had been proposed by the promoters of companies. It was easy to understand that there might be cases in which general publicity would not be in their interests, but the public interest was paramount and should receive first consideration.

To show that the tendency is toward a large measure of frankness by corporations in dealings with the public, Mr. Imrie quoted a statement of George W. Perkins, partner of the late J. Pierpont Morgan, that whereas it was for years the policy of the corporations with which he was connected to ignore the public's right to a more intimate knowledge of their affairs, these corporations had spent millions of dollars in recent years to inform the public upon matters of importance concerning their affairs. He further quoted from Mr. Perkins as follows:

"We Americans are not afraid of things simply because they are big, provided they are big in the open, above board; but we are afraid of large aggregates of secretive blind-pool methods. And it is largely because of secretive blind-pool methods that our people have been afraid of large aggregates of capital under what is known as corporate control."

Mr. Imrie urged that the elimination of the requirement for publicity in the local newspaper would be a retrogression toward the old policy of secrecy and would tend to increase suspicion of corporations. A Senator pointed out that under the present act the publication required is after the granting of the Letters Patent, and suggested that it would be more beneficial if the publication were before the application for incorporation was granted.

Mr. Imrie said that plan would be quite satisfactory to the press.

Thomas Mulvey, Under Secretary of State, said it would be impracticable, as in many cases incorporation was required on very short notice.

Senator Lynch-Staunton suggested that instead of the long notice giving in full the powers granted, there should be published in the local newspaper a short notice of the incorporation and a reference to the issue of the Canada Gazette in which the full powers were given.

In answer to a question by Sir Mackenzie Bowell, Mr. Mulvey said the amendment had been proposed by the promoters of companies and the lawyers. It was claimed that the publication in a local newspaper involved a considerable expense and served no substantial purpose.

It was decided to leave the matter of the proposed amendment open for further discussion at a later meeting.

Newspaper publishers of Canada say this is another instance of the tendency to substitute publication in an official publication of a government for publication in the local newspaper.

In several provinces publication in the Provincial Government Gazette has been substituted for publication in the local newspaper.

In one province in which that change was made recently, such strong opposition to the change developed that the provision of publication in the local newspaper was restored.

The publishers say it is an incontrovertible fact that the general public does not read the Canada Gazette or the official publications of the various Provincial Governments, and that notices of incorporations, tax sales, etc., that should reach the general public should be inserted in the press. Many of them had taken up the matter with the Senators and members of the House of Commons representing their respective constituencies.

TRADE AND CLASS PRESS.

Paul B. Findley, editor of the Electrical Age, New York, has gone with the Westinghouse department of publicity at East Pittsburgh, Pa.

His successor as editor is George A. Wardlaw, formerly with the American Institute of Electrical Engineers and editor of the Electrical Record.

The Associated Business Papers, Inc., has elected the Rubber Age, published by the Gardner, Moffat Company, 120 West 32d street, New York, to membership.

A. W. Peterson, instructor in machine and forge work in the Springfield (Ill.) high school, has resigned to become editor of the American Forge Dropper, Pittsburg.

D. H. Hauenstein has been added to the advertising staff of the National Grocer, Chicago, after service with the Periodical Publishing Company of the same city.

E. C. Chamberlain is the new New England manager and Sydney A. Hale is the new Western manager for the American Cutler, New York.

W. A. Patterson will establish an advertising agency of his own in New York about September 1.

MR. SANGER OUTLINES PLANS FOR TRADE INVESTIGATION IN SOUTH AMERICA.

J. W. Sanger, the Los Angeles and New York advertising man who has been appointed a special agent of the Department of Commerce to survey Latin-American trade conditions as related, actively or potentially, to American commerce, gave the following outline of his plans to THE FOURTH ESTATE this week:

First. A preliminary two months' tour of the principal cities of the United States, meeting with and learning at first hand from manufacturers just what are their most perplexing problems in promoting trade with Latin America (particularly South America) through advertising.

By "advertising is meant that phase of selling or influencing sales through newspapers and other publications, direct-by-mail advertising, poster, street car and electric sign advertising, commercial motion pictures, novelties, sampling, catalogs, etc.

Second. A year or year and a half in Latin America, (concentrating largely on South America), studying the people intimately at first hand; studying the consumer and the merchant individually and in relation to each other; endeavoring to establish if possible certain broad fundamental principles, as, for instance, the relative importance of merchant vs. consumer in making an advertising appeal.

A study of advertising media as indicated above; a definite attempt to gather reliable data concerning their own publications in regard to circulation, rates, character of readers, prestige, advisability of placing advertising direct or through American advertising agencies or through local agencies, etc.

A study of certain factors to which the South American is supposed to be particularly susceptible, such as trade-marked goods in trade-marked packages, etc.

Third. After returning to the United States he will prepare a bulletin (available at a very nominal cost) containing conclusions and a survey of the field and definite recommendations wherever possible.

Following this he will again spend two months traveling about the United States, visiting the most important cities, and personally advising with manufacturers, as special agent of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, regarding actual facts which the investigation has brought to light.

For the past five years Mr. Sanger has conducted an advertising service agency in Los Angeles, acting for manufacturers and merchants as counsel, investigator and writer. He is a director of the Los Angeles Advertising Club and is chairman of its better business bureau.

Manufacturers and others who wish to consult Mr. Sanger may address inquiries to the division of commercial agents, Room 409, Custom House, New York.

Mr. Sanger outlined his plans to a meeting of the export division of the New York Advertising Club on July 31, with nearly 100 members present. Benjamin La Bree of the Parsons Trading Company, chairman of the division, presided.

It was suggested by members that Mr. Sanger take up the matter of advertising rates with South American dailies, one advertising manager stating that he could quote twenty different rates on the same copy from one paper in a certain South American city.

He was also requested to look into the mechanical equipment of printing and publishing concerns in Latin America, with a view to determining whether they possess the facilities and willingness to do business along up-to-date American lines.

The Association of National Advertisers is urging its members to help assist in making the investigation to be conducted by Mr. Sanger really profitable.

A request sent out to the membership by Secretary Sullivan says: Will you please write the A. N. A. office, at 15 East 26th st., New York, stating specifically the kind of information you want about advertising in Latin America. We will collate all replies and give Mr. Sanger a digest of the material as part of his marching orders."

OLD NEWSPAPER SELLS HIGH IN EL PASO.

Old newspapers have been selling in El Paso, Tex., recently for 3, 4, and 5 cents per pound, but the average price that the El Paso Times has received has been 4 cents, which it is now getting. The demand for old newspaper was so great at 4 and 5 cents per pound that the Times bought up from its country dealers all it could and had the paper shipped to El Paso.

For six weeks the market could not be supplied, but at present there is a little slump, although not enough to cut the price below 4 cents per pound.

GENERAL H. G. OTIS DIES SUDDENLY.

VETERAN WARRIOR-EDITOR OF LOS ANGELES TIMES
ACTIVE TO END.

General Harrison Gray Otis, president and general manager of the Los Angeles Times, soldier and noted foe of labor unionism, died on July 30 of heart disease in the Los Angeles home of his son-in-law, Harry Chandler. Although he had suffered occasional attacks of illness recently, General Otis, who was in his eighty-first year, had been at his desk in the Times office every day for the last few weeks.

Death took place while General Otis was about to eat breakfast in his bedroom. He apparently felt the attack coming as a maid entered the room. "Take away the tray; I am gone," he said.

He died before either Mr. or Mrs. Chandler, who were in another part of the house, could be called to his side.

General Otis was a veteran of three wars and was distinguished also as a citizen. He was born in Marietta, Ohio, January 10, 1837. He was educated at the public schools, and at the age of fourteen became a printer's apprentice, working in various offices in Illinois, Iowa, Ohio and Kentucky.

While a resident of Louisville, Ky., in 1860, he was elected a delegate to the Republican National Convention at Chicago, which first nominated Abraham Lincoln for the Presidency.

Five years of General Otis' life were passed as a volunteer soldier of the United States. In 1861, at the age of twenty-four, he enlisted in the Twelfth Ohio Volunteers, and was promoted through all grades to captain in 1864.

In that year a consolidation of regiments placed him in the Twenty-third Ohio Veteran Volunteers, his colonel and captain being, respectively, Rutherford B. Hayes and William McKinley.

Altogether, he saw forty-nine months of actual service in the Civil War, was twice wounded and received seven promotions.

With the outbreak of the Spanish-American War in 1898, Major Otis then sixty-one years old, volunteered his services to President McKinley and was made a brigadier general of volunteers. He was assigned to duty, first at Camp Merritt (Cal.) and then to the Philippines, where, at different times, he commanded various divisions of the Eighth Army Corps in the campaign for pacification of the native revolt.

He led a brigade in person in the assault on Calocan and participated in the capture of the Filipino capital.

He resigned his command in April, 1899, returning to the United States. Upon discharge he was brevetted major general for "meritorious conduct in action."

HIS CIVIL ACTIVITIES.

General Otis went to Los Angeles in 1875. He had resumed after the Civil War his trade of printer. His first venture as a newspaper proprietor was in Marietta, Ohio, in 1865. He became editor and publisher of the Santa Barbara Press in 1876.

In 1882 he purchased an interest in the Los Angeles Times. Previous to that he had served for several years as foreman of the Government Printing Office at Washington.

It was not long before he became the controlling factor in the management of the Times. The paper and its editor were a potent force in the growth of Los Angeles from a small town to the foremost city of southern California.

It was the Times that secured a sewerage system and won a battle for other improvements, and it was the Times which bore the brunt of the contest for the right of the city to the harbor of San Pedro.

In recognition of this achievement the people of Los Angeles have set in the granite walls of the Times Building a marble tablet acknowledging their debt—a unique episode in the history of American journalism.

FOR TO ORGANIZED LABOR.

General Otis became early a foe to unionism. In 1894 the Times opposed the great Pacific Coast railroad strike of that year—the only paper on the coast to assume such an attitude. The strikers talked of lynching General Otis and dynamiting the Times Building. Some of his friends, alarmed for his safety, went to his office to persuade him to take precautions. He refused to leave the desk where he was turning out strong editorials on the situation, saying:

"My heart is here; my work is here. If they must dynamite the building I do not know what better grave I could have than under these stones."

Sixteen years of bitter struggle against unionism in California followed, and on October 1, 1910, the threats made in 1894 were carried into effect by the destruction of the Times Building with the resultant death of twenty-five employees and the injury of nineteen others. A time bomb concealed in a suit case was found the same day against the wall of General Otis' home.

Both before and after this attempt General Otis' life had been threatened, but he never appeared to consider his danger and traveled about the country unarmed and unguarded.

GENERAL OTIS WAS PREPARED.

General Otis, as a soldier, was probably familiar with the dictum of Frederick the Great that a soldier may excusably be defeated, but never surprised. At any rate, he so arranged matters that the destruction of his plant would not affect the publication or existence of his newspaper and he foresaw the plans of the wreckers by more than a decade.

Thirteen years previous, fearing that vengeance would be wreaked on his plant, General Otis started arrangements in secret to equip a duplicate plant, even duplicating his force.

When the old plant was demolished, the new plant was started, the metal in the stereotyping plant was burning and the rolls placed on the presses before the bomb exploded, destroying the old structure.

Selecting a site a mile distant from the original plant General Otis announced that he would start a school for linotype operators. Twenty machines were installed, and as many young men were set to work learning the trade.

Unmindful of this enterprise, no attention was paid to the purpose for which it was opened—to serve as a duplicate for the original linotype room of the Times.

When the school opened on the fatal morning there was no commotion. It was announced that the program would be to get out the Times and the waiting operators took their tasks, assisted by those of the original force who were able.

In another building down the street two modern presses, carefully concealed from observation by drawn blinds and covered with great canvas cloths, were in readiness. Everything was oiled and in place, even down to the newest felt rollers.

Pressmen, taking their orders, walked in, threw back the covering, and started the giant presses to humming. Everything went just as planned years before—no hitch any place, running smoothly and capable of turning out thousands of papers per hour.

To provide against all contingencies that might arise General Otis had 60 car-loads of paper stored away in a warehouse. This supply was rushed out to the new presses to the amazement of the people of Los Angeles, who were unaware of its existence.

That no detail was neglected in the wonderful duplication of a large newspaper office was shown by the excellent condition in which the old force found their new stereotyping plant, located in another place.

Here the genius of the whole plan was illustrated in a striking manner. When the force stepped in the quarters they found metal in the pots, with a fire alumbering away ready for the work of the operators.

In the comprehensive arrangements the same detail was followed out in duplicating the editorial rooms. A large space, supplied with telegraph instruments, desks, copy paper, typewriters and other necessary paraphernalia, was kept, away from where it would arouse suspicion of those who planned the destruction of the Times.

GAVE MEN THEIR HOMES.

Perhaps the greatest surprise to those not on the inside were the arrangements made for duplicating the force and staff of the paper in the event of the long expected catastrophe. Men were brought to Los Angeles, given homes, and held there by a system of paternalism, offering more inducements than could be found elsewhere.

Many of these were not known to be in the employ of the Times. After the explosion an investigation made of those at work showed numerous new faces in the offices of the Times. Although the thirteen years' war was believed by General Otis to have lagged in its intensity six years earlier, he was determined not to be caught napping—and he kept his promise to get out the biggest Sunday edition in the world from his new plant.

General Otis acquired a large fortune, his interests aside from publishing being extensive. In politics his paper always reflected the attitude of its editor—aggressive, uncompromising Republican, his connection with that party dating back to 1860.

Aside from those mentioned, General Otis held numerous governmental positions. He was prominent in the Grand Army of the Republic and numerous other patriotic orders and a member of the American Academy of Sciences.

The bride of General Otis' young manhood, Miss Eliza Wethersby, was associated with him constantly in journalism and literature until her death in 1904.

HARRY CHANDLER LIKELY TO SUCCEED GENERAL OTIS.

Harry Chandler, son-in-law of General Otis, is considered as his logical successor as head of the Los Angeles Times-Mirror Company, of which he has been assistant general manager and treasurer for many years.

Mr. Chandler was born in Lisbon, N. H., at about the close of the Civil War and went to California for his health in 1882. He became identified with the Los Angeles Times in 1885 and subsequently married Marian Otis, daughter of General Otis and herself a well-known writer. They have eight children.

Mr. Chandler is one of California's largest land owners and is a director of a number of corporations. He is active in the American Newspaper Publishers Association, serving as a director and as a member of the Advertising Bureau committee. His associates say that his working day regularly covers from 14 to 16 hours.

A. S. Pettit has taken charge of the Carter (Mont.) Herald, for which new equipment has been purchased throughout.

MAGAZINE NOTES.

Outdoor Life has appointed W. B. Conant to be its Western manager. He formerly held the same position for Current Opinion and the International Studio.

Earl Wilson has been appointed manager of the New York office of the Curtis Publishing Company. He has been in charge of the main office in Philadelphia. Mr. Wilson succeeds W. A. Patterson, who is going into the advertising agency business. J. B. Woodward has also resigned from the New York office staff.

F. A. Leland, late of House and Garden, has become connected with the advertising department of Arts and Decoration.

J. S. Flynn has been appointed assistant to the business manager of the Cosmopolitan Magazine, New York. Stanley V. Gibson, late of the Butterick publications, now has the Cosmopolitan's Southern and Philadelphia advertising territory, succeeding J. J. Barnett, resigned.

Edward H. Harris is the new advertising manager of Oak Leaves, Forest Leaves and the Austinite, published by the Donaldson Company at Oak Park, Ill.

William E. Cox, the new advertising manager of the Canadian Courier, Toronto, has had no previous publication experience, but has been connected with the sales organization of a large Canadian manufacturing firm.

WILLIAM E. COX.

He has also been a retail merchant and for a short time was in the engraving business.

The Marshalltown (Ia.) Tribune may shortly become a daily.

U. S. APPEALS FOR STORAGE.

AIM IS TO REDUCE BURDENS ON RAILROADS—POSSIBLE EFFECT ON NEWS PRINT.

News print storage as an issue for the newspaper publisher may take on a new lease of life as a result of developments at Washington this next week.

A special committee of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, acting in conjunction with the storage committee of the Council of National Defense, has issued an appeal to the business men of the country to create additional storage space as a means of relieving the strain on the railroads.

The paper committee of the A.N.P.A. has up to this time taken the stand of advising publishers not to store news print on account of its effect on paper prices, in view of which a Washington man, who has made a study of the freight problem and is well acquainted with its news print phase, explained the viewpoint of the Council of National Defense and the United States Chamber of Commerce in making their storage appeal as follows:

"So long as paper storage was presented to newspaper owners merely in the guise of insurance against sudden jolts in news print prices and supply, there were plenty of good and sufficient reasons why the majority of publishers did not enthusiastically embrace the idea. The question of the hour is whether, now that the policy of storage is presented as a sort of patriotic duty, these publishers will view the matter in a different light.

"Up to this time there has been virtually no news print storage as a means of making things easy for the railroads.

"Such newspapers as have tried to keep from a fortnight to a month ahead in their paper supply have 'hoarded' only such margin of paper as they thought wise to protect them in the event of strikes, fires, wash-outs on railroads or other emergencies of a supposedly brief tenure.

"Even within the past year, when there has been so much outcry over car shortage and freight congestion, most publishers have been slow to attempt storage. The railroads always have managed to get news print through pretty much on time in the past and most publishers have an abiding faith in the ability of the roads to keep up this record for deliveries.

"Now comes the Council of National Defense, backed by the National Chamber (in which latter body are many practical publishers), and insists that the development of storage facilities is one of the big needs of the war period and one failing the realization of which there may be the deuce to pay.

"What is demanded is the cultivation of the storage habit all along the line. As applied to the paper-making and publishing industry, this means storage of fuel and raw material at the mills and storage of paper at the points of consumption or convenient distributing points.

"This stampede for storage is, of course, a general propaganda. It is not known what answer the advocates of the storage habit will make to publishers who object on the ground that paper deteriorates in storage nor what they will have to say to publishers who point out that however much they would like to store surplus news print, it has been absolutely impossible, this past year or more, to get at any time any supply in excess of actual current needs.

WASTE IN FREIGHT CARS.

"One reason why the experts at Washington are so strongly recommending storage as a general proposition is found in the theory that hand-to-mouth ordering and 'rush' shipments are apt to involve more or less waste or economic loss—freight cars not loaded to capacity, etc.

"A second reason for prescribing storage for all interests at this stage is found in the theory that the operation of adequate storage systems, with the incidental provision of ample storage facilities, will create conditions under which railroad cars will not be used temporarily for storage purposes but will be unloaded promptly.

"That it will be easier today to win over publishers to the idea of news print storage than it would have been a couple of years ago is a factor not to be ignored in connection with the situation precipitated by the appeal from the headquarters of the Council of National Defense.

"Up to a couple of years ago virtually the only publishers who indulged in storage were the owners of metropolitan dailies, notably in Chicago, who had been addicted to the practice for some time previously.

"Within the past year or two, however, a considerable number of the smaller publishers have 'plunged' on the storage proposition. These were the publishers who saw the rise in news print prices coming and who were shrewd enough to take time by the forelock and stock up.

"An opportunity for conjecture in connection with the present organized effort to promote storage has to do with the effect of such a move, if it be successful, upon the business of news print jobbers and brokers.

"There is no question but what the great mass of small publishers who buy in less than carload lots have remained closely tied up to jobbers because the latter carry on paper storage and are enabled to supply requirements from their warehouses at short notice.

"Now the question arises whether, if publishers of this class go in for more extensive storage on their own hook, they will be held less closely to the jobbers.

BUYING BY CARLOAD.

"To go a step farther it may be questioned whether the whole trend in the transportation world is not calculated to loosen the grip of paper jobbers and sales agents upon the smaller publishers whom they have previously had 'sewed up.'

"Not only is the Government and Uncle Sam's 'business annex' at Washington, in effect, advising publishers to store paper, but paralleling this propaganda is another to the same end—namely, helping out the railroads by persuading all purchasers to buy in car lots.

"Translated into terms of the pub-

THE PRINGLE INQUIRY AND THE NEWSPAPERS.

THE FULL TALE OF HOW COMMISSIONER WOULDN'T HEAR OF PAPER MAKERS' DEALINGS OUTSIDE CANADA.

Commissioner Pringle, who has been conducting the Government inquiry into news print prices and conditions in Canada, now takes the position that his ruling that led to the withdrawal of the daily and weekly newspapers from the proceedings of the Royal Commission on news print paper was that he would not go into the question of an alleged combination "in the United States of America." The commissioner states also that the more he considers his ruling the more satisfied he is that "it was a proper ruling in all the circumstances."

In view of the foregoing the Canadian Press Association has deemed advisable to publish certain extracts from the official record of the evidence that will show the positions taken by Commissioner Pringle in regard to the scope of the inquiry, his attitude toward the question of a combination among the manufacturers, and his exact ruling that led to the withdrawal of the daily and weekly newspapers and their counsel, W. N. Tilley, K. C.

Supplementing its report on the relations of the Canadian Export Paper Company with the Canadian news print industry and with George H. Mead & Co., of Dayton, Ohio (printed in THE FOURTH ESTATE last week) the Canadian Press Association further says:

The Order in Council provided for "an inquiry into and concerning the manufacture, sale, price and supply of news print paper within the Dominion of Canada."

This may be properly interpreted as an inquiry: (1) into the "manufacture" of all the news print paper within the Dominion of Canada; (2) into the "sale" of all the news print paper within the Dominion of Canada; and (4) into the "supply" of all the news print paper within the Dominion of Canada.

Commissioner Pringle apparently intended, at the beginning, to go into the question as to whether there was any combination among the manufacturers. He apparently considered the Order in Council authorizing the investigation justified an inquiry along that line. The questionnaire which he sent to the news print paper manufacturers immediately after the first hearing on May 8 contained the following question:

"Was there any agreement or understanding verbal or otherwise, between the manufacturers as to selling price? If so, what was the agreement?"

At the first hearing Commissioner Pringle referred to the Order in Council authorizing the investigation as being "in fairly broad terms."

At the second hearing, he said:

"We are going into the whole paper industry, from the tree to the finished article."

At the second hearing, in answer to an argument by George Montgomery, K. C., counsel for the news print section of the Canadian Pulp & Paper Association, as to the purpose of the inquiry, Commissioner Pringle asked:

"If there were a market monopoly, and advantage were taken of that market monopoly to unduly enhance the price of paper, what would you say as to that?"

"I am not insinuating that there is a monopoly, but, suppose there is, and you have only some seventeen manufacturers of paper in Canada and only a limited number in the United States; and suppose that these manufacturers (seeing that imports are shut off from foreign countries owing to the war, and an increasing demand in the United States of America, owing to the great prosperity in 1916) get their heads together and say: 'Now, we are only getting $40 a ton for our paper; here is an opportunity to raise this price to double that figure.'"

"And suppose it were established that the increased cost to them was a matter of $1 or $1.50, or $2 or $3. whatever it may be, per ton?"

"Would you not say that the matter should be regulated during the war, until the conditions became normal?"

Commissioner Pringle again referred, at the third hearing in Calgary, to the breadth of the Order in Council authorizing the investigation. He said:

"This question, to my mind, is assuming a pretty big aspect, and I am going to take it upon myself to say that the Order in Council is broad enough, in view of the fact that the word 'supply' is used, to have me investigate the conditions that exist throughout this Dominion, in regard to the whole pulp and paper situation."

AVOIDING DISCUSSION OF QUESTION OF A COMBINE.

But at the first reference by a publisher to a combine among the paper manufacturers, Commissioner Pringle took steps to avoid any discussion of that question. This was at the Calgary hearing, which was the first hearing at which the publishers were represented.

R. L. Richardson, Winnipeg Tribune, in the course of a lengthy statement mentioned incidentally that it was believed "that the publishers of Canada are dealing with a combination in restraint of trade that has existed among the manufacturers of news print."

Commissioner Pringle at once interrupted Mr. Richardson to state that "there is no use going into that, because if you believe a combination in restraint of trade exists in the manufacture of news print, you can proceed under the Combine Act and lay an information."

However, later on in the Calgary hearing Commissioner Pringle returned to the idea of a fearless inquiry when he said:

"So far as I am concerned, there is only one thing that can convince me, and that is evidence. It won't make any difference where chips fall, I will bend to the line. I will decide the matter on the evidence. The publishers may not be satisfied, and the manufacturers may not be satisfied, but that is not material so long as I am satisfied. I will decide the matter on evidence."

The publishers felt that if Commissioner Pringle would allow all the facts bearing on the situation to come out, and would base his report on all of the facts thus brought out in the evidence, and without regard to where the chips might fall, their interests would be protected. Unfortunately the hope that Commissioner Pringle would allow all the facts bearing on the situation to be brought out was not realized.

Again in the course of the Calgary hearing Commissioner Pringle returned to the idea of a full inquiry. In response to the expression by two publishers of a desire to know that the price was fixed for a definite period Commissioner Pringle said:

"It cannot be fixed for any long period, because the very object of this investigation is to get at all the facts, and therefore if the facts justify me in making a report which will warrant the Government in fixing a price until the termination of the war, that then will be the responsibility of the Government."

NOT INTERESTED IN QUESTION OF COMBINE.

On June 19, at the fifth hearing, held in Ottawa, during a discussion in regard to claims as to the net earnings of one of the companies that were made in a certain prospectus—a discussion in which the question of the existence of a combine had not been raised—Commissioner Pringle said:

"I may say here that I am not at all interested, nor am I in any way going into any question as to whether or not there was a combine between the manufacturers of news print."

"I do not think that comes within the scope of my inquiry."

"I am here solely to inquire as to the cost of production, supply, price, etc."

"If there is a combine then there is another remedy, and any person who considers that a combine exists, has the courts open to him, and he can go and lay his information and proceed in the regular way."

"The object of this inquiry is not to investigate as to whether or not a combine existed. What I want to get at is the price, and I want to get at it as soon as I possibly can."

"Insofar as this prospectus is concerned it will not influence my mind a particle."

Subsequently, in the course of the same discussion, Mr. Tilley, counsel for the daily and weekly newspapers, explained his question in regard to the prospectus as follows:

"My question may seem to touch on matters connected with combines, but I do not want to be prohibited from asking the question about prices—I do not wish to be prohibited from asking questions as to how prices are arranged—merely because it might disclose a transgression of the Combine Act. I want to get at the cost, and whether it is artificial, and I want to get at the selling price and see whether it is in any way artificial. That is the object of my question."

FIRST RULING ON CANADIAN EXPORT PAPER COMPANY.

At the hearing on June 20 W. H. Bierman, manager of Belgo-Canadian Pulp & Paper Company, Ltd., told Mr. Tilley that his company was one of the stockholders in Canadian Export Paper Company, Ltd., and that it was composed of "the paper makers."

Asked as to whether it was all or some of them, Mr. Bierman answered "some of them."

"In reply to a question as to which manufacturers were stockholders, Mr. Bierman had mentioned the name of only one firm, the Laurentide Company, Ltd., when Mr. Montgomery, counsel for the manufacturers, objected on the ground that the question had nothing to do with the Canadian business and was not relevant to the inquiry."

Mr. Tilley pointed out that evidence was being submitted right along as to the price that could be secured in the United States, and that it was being suggested that the market price in Canada should be somewhat governed by the price the manufacturers could get in the United States. A great deal had been said about the law of supply and demand.

Mr. Tilley wished to know how the demand price was created. He argued that the inquiry should not be limited to the 11 per cent of the Canadian production that is consumed in Canada—he could not see how it would be possible to get along without inquiring into the price of the 89 per cent of the Canadian production that is exported from Canada, which affects the price in Canada.

Commissioner Pringle said he would not be influenced by the price charged in United States. The information he wished more particularly was as to the actual cost of manufacturing news print paper in Canada. He was not interested in inquiring into any arrangement that the manufacturers might have in regard to a supply of paper in the United States, nor with the manner in which they were selling their paper. It was true that they had exported some 480,000 tons of paper to United States, but he could not see how it was going to help to inquire into the arrangements under which that paper was sold or the price at which it was sold.

Mr. Tilley pointed out that it had been brought out in the evidence that two Canadian manufacturers, producing about one-third of the total Canadian production, pool their entire product through George H. Mead & Co., of Dayton, Ohio; that both of these companies allow to the Mead Company a flat price per ton as a selling commission on their production, both for the Canadian market and for the American market; and that the commission allowed in the case of one of those companies was $1.50 per ton.

It was admitted that the Canadian Export Paper Company, Ltd., handles the export product of the Belgo-Canadian Pulp & Paper Company, Ltd., and other Canadian paper manufacturers, and that it was composed of the manufacturers themselves.

It was a company that disposed of a large bulk of the Canadian production. The inquiry was into the full 100 per cent of the Canadian production. Evidence was being submitted by the manufacturers to show what they could get for sulphite and news print paper in United States. Mr. Tilley further said:

"The evidence will disclose, or so I am informed, that publishers are told that they cannot get this news print paper because the supply is sold through the Canadian Export Paper Company, that it is disposed of."

"Now I want to know whether that Canadian Export Company is a company independent of the manufacturers or whether it is a means they have of passing goods into the United States on an artificial basis and which creates an artificial condition, and whether the result of that is reflected in the price and conditions prevailing here, both as to our supply, our possibility of getting a supply of paper, and the price we are to pay for it."

Mr. Tilley quoted the statement of Commissioner Pringle at the Calgary hearing, as follows:

"There is a very old law of supply and demand; the manufacturers of paper over the whole continent have gone through many difficult years in establishing their industry. They were not all fat years, but there were many years that were very lean, and in fact it is only now that they are beginning to get some good ones."

"At present, according to the law of supply and demand, there is a chance for them to make a good profit, but they are only getting a portion of that profit at the present time."

Mr. Tilley said he wished to show that the law of supply and demand that had been mentioned as creating a condition in which the manufacturers should get a good profit was an artificial condition. He said (referring to the evidence of the use of arbitrary figures in the statements of cost, profits, etc., to Commissioner Pringle):

"We have been examining into artificial conditions as to cost, and now I want to examine an artificial condition as to selling prices."

Mr. Montgomery, counsel for the manufacturers, said he would like to ask Mr. Bierman whether the Canadian Export Paper Company, Ltd., had anything to do, either directly or indirectly, with the sale of paper to the Canadian customers of the Belgo-Canadian Pulp & Paper Company, Ltd.

Commissioner Pringle said that question might be asked.

Mr. Bierman answered the question in the negative.

Mr. Tilley said: "Now, Mr. Commissioner, I simply take that question and answer as the foundation upon which I want to follow up this inquiry."

Commissioner Pringle said:

"My inquiry, as I take it, is to investigate the manufacture, sale, price, and supply of news print paper in the Dominion of Canada, and to take such steps or make such report as I deem necessary after hearing the evidence as to the supply to the newspapers of Canada, and as to the price to be charged, having regard to the cost of manufacture, etc."

"Now, I am not influenced in the slightest as to any arrangement that the manufacturers of Canada had in the past or have at the present time, in regard to the supplying of customers in the United States of America, and it does not interest me in the slightest as to the price they are charging there."

"What I am endeavoring to get at is the actual cost of manufacture in this country, and as to the necessary supply to protect our newspapers."

Mr. Tilley pointed out that the inquiry was not limited to the cost. He said, also:

"Now, Mr. Commissioner, we have a supply here in this country that we will describe as a supply of 100 per cent. We find that of this supply only 11 per cent is marketed here, and we are asked to fix prices or to adjust prices on the basis of what may be described as the law of supply and demand in Canada, or in any private field, having regard to that 11 per cent. I desire to be allowed to go on with my inquiry."

Commissioner Pringle said:

"Let me put this to you: Supposing, for instance, you were able to establish beyond any question that owing to some combination of the manufacturers they were able to curtail production or were able to bring about a fictitious price, I do not see how that is going to influence me in the prices."

"As I said, a moment ago, it is a War Measure Act and I am going to get at the actual cost, if I can get at it, of the manufacture of this paper, and having got at it, then I am going to endeavor to make an order which will assure to the publishers of this country an ample supply of news print at a reasonable price."

"Now that is the position I take, and that is the whole thing. I do not care if it were brought out here by abundant evidence that there was a combine."

Mr. Tilley said he was not putting it that way. He said:

"Simply because my evidence may prove that these people are guilty of a crime, surely that does not at all preclude me, or is no reason why I should not go on while I am within the proper limits of this Order in Council. Surely that cannot be raised against me."

Mr. Tilley further explained that he wished to find out:

"Who the members of this company are, and how much of the price that the paper is sold for comes back to the manufacturers through the medium of dividends from the Canadian Export Company."

"I do not know what these things will lead to, but so far as your honor speaks of where this commission will end, all I can say is that we are just starting, and we need not be so much concerned now with ending it as getting it properly started."

Commissioner Pringle said he would allow Mr. Tilley to ask Mr. Bierman what was paid to the Canadian Export Paper Company, Ltd., for the sale of the paper. Mr. Tilley replied that he preferred to find out, first, who the company is and where it was incorporated.

Commissioner Pringle said all those things could be found out from the letters of incorporation. Mr. Tilley replied that he wished to find out what the witness could tell him.

Commissioner Pringle then asked Mr. Bierman whether he knew ALL about the Canadian Export Paper Company, Ltd. Mr. Bierman replied in the negative. Commissioner Pringle then ruled as follows:

"Then I will say to this witness who says he does not know ALL about this company, that he is not bound to answer."

(Note—The question was as to which of the manufacturers composed the Canadian Export Paper Company, Ltd. Mr. Bierman is one of the four directors of that company.)

SECOND RULING ON CANADIAN EXPORT COMPANY.

The first ruling in regard to the Canadian Export Paper Company, Ltd., was given on June 20. Mr. Tilley did not withdraw from the case following that ruling. A second ruling was given on the next day, and it was following that ruling that Mr. Tilley withdrew.

J. A. Bothwell, general manager of Brompton Pulp & Paper Company, Ltd., was asked by Mr. Tilley how many companies were in the Canadian Export Paper Company, Ltd.

Mr. Montgomery, counsel for the manufacturers, objected to that question and claimed it was covered by the commissioner's ruling on the previous day.

Mr. Tilley argued, and Commissioner Pringle agreed, that that ruling had related to the particular witness then under examination. In regard to Mr. Bierman, Commissioner Pringle said:

"If Mr. Tilley can bring out anything which shows the control of prices in Canada, from this witness, he is at perfect liberty to do it."

Mr. Tilley said he proposed to go further than that. He said:

"I say that the control of prices in Canada means the control of prices of the output of the Canadian companies. I say that the inquiry is not limited to the price of goods used and marked for use in Canada."

Commissioner Pringle answered that the inquiry was limited to the supply, the price and the production in Canada. Mr. Tilley argued that the paper sold by the Canadian Export Paper Company, Ltd., was a part of the production in Canada. He said:

"This is the production in Canada, and it is sold by a Canadian agency and the inquiry is not limited, as I read it, to the goods that are consumed in Canada. It is 'produced in Canada,' not 'consumed' in Canada."

The question your honor was asked a few minutes ago: 'How do you get at this price of $61.13 in the United States?'

"Your honor asked that question of the witness. You also asked him what price he would get for this commodity in the United States. Every thing that is sold by a Canadian company affects its price and affects its supply."

Commissioner Pringle asked Mr. Bothwell whether he knew who were in the Canadian Export Paper Company, Ltd. Mr. Bothwell said he did.

Mr. Montgomery, counsel for the manufacturers, said there was no objection to giving the number, but he did not know about giving the names. He said Mr. Tilley's question was leading up to an inquiry into the business of Canadian Export Paper Company, Ltd., and how that business was conducted. That, Mr. Montgomery said, was outside of the scope of the inquiry.

Commissioner Pringle, following Mr. Montgomery, said:

"I think I said yesterday that I was not here to hear anything that might lead to information in regard to the existence of a combine, if there be one. I am not here to deal with that question at all."

Mr. Montgomery argued that if Commissioner Pringle were satisfied that there was a sufficient supply of paper in Canada, his duty was to determine what was a fair price for that supply to the newspapers of Canada, and that the question of what was exported could have no bearing on the object of the inquiry.

Commissioner Pringle said:

"I understand that the object of the order appointing me as commissioner is to make an inquiry for the purpose of insuring to the publishers of newspapers an adequate supply of news print paper at a reasonable price. (Mr. Tilley: 'Yes.') Then an Order in Council has been passed which insures to the publishers of newspapers in the Dominion of Canada an adequate supply of news print, and what I am more particularly interested in at the present time is to get at the cost of manufacturing so that I can make a recommendation as to what would be a fair and reasonable price to the manufacturers and to the newspapers."

To this Mr. Tilley replied as follows:

"I am prepared to go on with the inquiry under this Order in Council, but I am not prepared to go on with any other inquiry except this inquiry which has been so authorized."

Now the part of the Order in Council your honor read was the recital:

"The Committee of the Privy Council have before them a report from the Minister of Finance that he considers it advisable that action should be taken to insure to the publishers of the Canadian newspapers an adequate supply of news print paper at reasonable prices."

"That is why this Order in Council was passed. It does not then go on to say that you are appointed a commissioner to ascertain what is a reasonable price, or to make any recommendation with regard to it. It simply directs that an inquiry be put on foot into and concerning the manufacture, sale, price and supply of news print paper."

THE CONTROLLING WORDS.

Commissioner Pringle added to Mr. Tilley's statement the words "within the Dominion of Canada." Mr. Tilley repeated those words after Commissioner Pringle, and two of the counsel for the manufacturers said with one accord "These are the controlling words."

Commissioner Pringle said:

"So far as I am concerned, I am not going into all these questions of the Canadian Export Sales Company or of Mead & Co., or of other selling agents of the manufacturers. I said yesterday that it did not make one particle of difference to me if there was a combination. What I am going to get at is the cost of production in Canada."

In reply to this Mr. Tilley said:

"Now, your honor, I propose to take my stand with regard to this. Your honor says that we are not going to examine the Canadian Export Sales Company, that these things are not to be investigated in the inquiry and that evidence is to be excluded because it points to a combination; not that we are attempting to prove a combination exists, because this is not the tribunal for it, but because it points in that direction. If that is the ruling, so far as I am concerned, I shall retire from the case."

Mr. Tilley again pointed out that the inquiry was not merely to ascertain the cost. If that were the case the Government could have appointed an accountant or expert to go over the books of the manufacturers. The inquiry was intended to be broader than an inquiry into cost, as was defined in the Order in Council.

After considerable objection by the counsel for the manufacturers, Mr. Tilley was allowed to read the following letter from the St. Maurice Paper Company, Ltd., of Cap de la Madeleine, Que., to a Canadian publisher:

"Your letter asking for a quotation on 100 reams of news print paper monthly, 44 x 64 x 120, has been forwarded to our sales department, the Canadian Export Paper Company, Ltd., Canada Life Building, Montreal, P. Q. They will probably take the matter up further with you."

Commissioner Pringle asked Mr. Tilley whether, if he wrote to the Dominion Iron & Steel Company, asking for price on certain of that company's products, the company would not refer him to its sales agents.

Mr. Tilley replied:

"And if I was having an inquiry into the selling and producing and manufacturing of the products of that company, I would say that one of the most important avenues of research would be with regard to their sales agents, particularly when you find out that the sales agent is a company formed of the manufacturers themselves, that it is really a group of the manufacturers."

Commissioner Pringle then said:

"I may be absolutely wrong in my view, but I hold that view which I have expressed. I came into this matter subsequent to the 10th of April. I came into it at a time when the price had been fixed by the Government at $9.50 f. o. b. at the mill. I came in at a time when the Government had taken steps to absolutely insure to the newspapers of this country an adequate supply of paper, and I came for the purpose of making an inquiry as to whether the price fixed by the Government is a reasonable price. (Mr. Tilley: 'I object to that.') and also as to the question as to whether there is an adequate supply in this country to meet the requirements of the press of this country."

"Now there is no doubt that it goes without saying from what we have heard already, that there is an adequate supply. The manufacturers are turning out 400,000 tons odd a year of news print paper, and only 11 per cent of that is being used in the Dominion of Canada. It seems to me that the vital question in this for me to consider is what is a reasonable price at which this news print shall be supplied to the newspapers of Canada."

MEMBERS OF EXPORT COMPANY.

Commissioner Pringle then allowed Mr. Tilley to ask the witness (Mr. Bothwell) which companies were in the Canadian Export Company, Ltd., and who were the officers of that company.

Mr. Bothwell said the constituent companies were:

Laurentide Company, Ltd.;
Price Brothers & Co., Ltd.
Belgo-Canadian Pulp & Paper Company, Ltd.;
Brompton Pulp & Paper Company, Ltd.

He listed the officers of the Canadian Export Paper Company, Ltd., as follows:

President, J. M. McCarthy, vice-president of Price Brothers & Co., Ltd.; vice-president, J. A. Bothwell, general manager of Brompton Pulp & Paper Company, Ltd.; directors, W. M. Bierman, manager of Belgo-Canadian Pulp & Paper Company, Ltd.; and J. H. A. Acer, treasurer and sales manager of Laurentide Company, Ltd.

Commissioner Pringle asked Mr. Bothwell whether the Canadian Export Paper Company, Ltd., had anything to do with the fixing of the prices of news print paper in Canada.

Mr. Bothwell answered "No."

Commissioner Pringle then asked whether that company "had anything to do with the fixing of prices of news print paper in the United States of America which would reflect in any way on the price in Canada."

Mr. Bothwell answered that to the best of his judgment and knowledge it had not.

Commissioner Pringle asked whether the company was simply selling agent for the purpose of selling, and Mr. Bothwell answered "for the purpose of selling."

In answer to a question by the counsel for the manufacturers, he added: "Not in Canada, for export only."

Mr. Tilley then asked Mr. Bothwell the question: "What business do they carry on?"

Counsel for the manufacturers at once objected to this question as being irrelevant.

Commissioner Pringle suggested that the company was carrying on a sales business.

Counsel for the manufacturers said: "That is all it is."

Commissioner Pringle asked why there was this difficulty and delay if the company was simply carrying on a sales business. The argument continued, and the question was not pressed for the moment.

In answer to another question of Mr. Tilley, Mr. Bothwell said the Canadian Export Paper Company, Ltd., in addition to handling the export business of the four constituent companies, handled the entire product of another Canadian company, the St. Maurice Paper Company, Ltd.

Mr. Tilley asked Mr. Bothwell:

"What is the arrangement between the four companies as to your supply?"

Counsel for the manufacturers objected to this question and insisted on a definite ruling.

At this stage there was renewed a hope of the publishers that Commissioner Pringle would permit the full facts to come out. He said:

"If these arrangements in any way affect the supply of paper in Canada."

"If these arrangements in any way affect the supply of paper in the Dominion of Canada, and the price in the Dominion of Canada, then it is useful to the investigation to know about them, but if they do not, it is not."

"These four companies have selling agents in the Canadian Export Sales Company, and another two or three companies having selling agents elsewhere, and other companies have other firms as selling agents, and supposing there should be an understanding or arrangements between these three firms which practically control the product of this country, might it not affect the question of price?"

But the counsel for the manufacturers insisted that Commissioner Pringle had ruled on the point raised in the above paragraph. They argued that if the entire product of all the Canadian Manufacturers were in the hands of a few sales agents, and those sales agents got together and arbitrarily fixed the price that would be a violation of the Combines Investigation Act or of the Criminal Code, but action in regard to it should not be taken before Commissioner Pringle.

They argued also that even if four sales agents did get together and fix the price, the object of the inquiry was to go beyond those agents and recommend a price which the Government would fix.

Therefore it was argued that it was the duty of the commissioner to fix a fair price and to insure a supply of news print to Canadian newspapers, and that "even if these companies fixed an arbitrary price in Canada or the United States, the scope of your inquiry (speaking to Commissioner Pringle) would not be controlled by that fact at all."

Counsel for the manufacturers argued also that insofar as the Brompton Pulp & Paper Company, Ltd., of which the witness was general manager, was concerned, the question of distribution was not under the consideration of Commissioner Pringle, as that company was not handling any Canadian business.

Mr. Tilley argued that that was all the more reason for an inquiry into the arrangements under which that company was using the natural resources of the country, manufacturing out of those resources and shipping its entire products abroad, under some arrangement of the kind that was indicated by the incorporation of the Canadian Export Company, Ltd.

With such an enormous supply and such an enormous manufacture, the result should be that the users in Canada should get the benefit of a competitive price. Instead of that, 89 per cent of the entire product was taken care of and exported under such a satisfactory arrangement to the manufacturers that Canada became a subsidiary question and the users in Canada did not get the benefit of the competition which should exist.

Commissioner Pringle pressed Mr. Tilley with questions as to whether he took the ground that there was a combine. Mr. Tilley insisted that all he wished was to get at the way in which the business was carried on. He said he did not know what the evidence would show. He argued that the evidence was of a character that was covered by the language of the commission, and that he was entitled to bring out that evidence.

THE BREAKING POINT.

Commissioner Pringle said he regretted exceedingly that this difficulty had arisen. He desired to give the fullest possible latitude to Mr. Tilley. He gave his ruling, as follows: "My duty, as I understand it, is simply to investigate the conditions as set out in the Order in Council, that is, to conduct an inquiry into and concerning the manufacture, sale, price and supply of news print paper within the Dominion of Canada—and I have to do that for what purpose?"

"It is to insure the publishers of the Dominion of Canada an ample supply of news print at a reasonable price. As was said a few minutes ago by Mr. Montgomery, this is merely a war measure. I am not here for the purpose of conducting an inquiry as to whether there was an unlawful combination between the manufacturers of news print paper in this country."

"That is a matter that would have to come up before another tribunal, and my ruling now is that I will confine my investigation entirely to the four corners of this Order in Council, and that I will not go into any inquiry as to whether there was any unlawful combination between the manufacturers or not."

Mr. Tilley inquired whether he was to understand that Commissioner Pringle would exclude evidence along the lines that he was seeking to follow. Commissioner Pringle then amplified his ruling as follows:

"Any evidence that tends in the direction of showing that there was a combination will be excluded. I do not think it is pertinent to this inquiry."

Mr. Tilley asked for a ruling as to whether the witness should be allowed to answer the question that had been put to him, which was: "What business do they (the Canadian Export Paper Company, Ltd.) carry on?"

Commissioner Pringle refused to allow that question to be answered, and Mr. Tilley withdrew.

TWO VERSIONS OF HIS RULING.

On June 21, at the session immediately following that at which his first ruling in regard to Canadian Export Paper Company, Ltd., was given, Commissioner Pringle referred to that ruling as follows:

"Mr. Tilley, representing the newspapers, has seen fit, as I understand it, to withdraw from the investigation, for the reason that I would not permit him to go into an examination which I considered was directed toward showing that possibly there was a combine existing as between the manufacturers of news print in Canada."

"I have already given reasons for my ruling, and it is not necessary for me to repeat them."

"However, I just desire to point out that it would be quite open to the Government if they saw fit to appoint a commissioner to investigate as to whether there was an unlawful combination in restraint of trade, or it is quite open to Mr. Tilley's clients to avail themselves of the provisions of the Criminal Code, if they are of the opinion that the manufacturers of Canada arranged between themselves to enhance the price of news print to the publishers of Canada, or combined in any way to limit or lessen the manufacture or production of news print, or, as I have already said, to unreasonably enhance the price thereof, or, if they combined to unduly prevent or lessen competition in the production, manufacture, purchase, sale, transportation or supply of news print."

"I have already said that in my opinion the object of this commission was not to make an inquiry into the matters that I have just referred to, but to insure to the publishers of Canada a supply of news print paper at a reasonable price. Consequently I did not consider that I should permit the examination to proceed in the manner which was desired by counsel for the newspapers."

Three weeks later, on July 10, Commissioner Pringle gave the following version of his ruling:

"I was very strongly of the view, and I am still, that what we desire to get at here is the cost of manufacturing news print in Canada, and that it would be of no great assistance to me to wander all over the United States as to some alleged combination that has taken place there, and I so stated. My ruling, I think, is summed up in this language to be found on page 644: 'I will not go into any inquiry as to whether there was any unlawful combination.'"

"That is referring to the attitude of Mr. Tilley in desiring to go into some combination which he alleged to exist in the United States of America."

"My reason for this was that if Mr. Tilley and the newspaper association of this country are under the impression that there is an unlawful combination, it is quite open to them to proceed under the Act dealing with unlawful combines."

"It is not for me to go into that. I am limited by the Order in Council, the controlling language of which is: 'In the Dominion of Canada,' and I have got to investigate as to the supply, production, price, cost, etc., in the Dominion of Canada."

MANUFACTURERS EXPECT PRICE OF THREE CENTS FOR ROLL NEWS.

That the manufacturers expect a price of three cents per pound for roll news as a result of the present investigation is indicated by the following paragraphs from the Pulp and Paper Magazine of Canada:

"Manufacturers and the paper trade generally look to the commissioner to grant an increased price for news print."

"All the news print manufacturers in the Ottawa district feel confident the commissioner, when he presents his report, will give them three cents per pound for their product."

"While nothing definite will be known in Canada regarding an increase in the price of news print until August; still it is hoped that a figure will be named by Commissioner Pringle of three cents a pound, which, according to the evidence submitted, would be a fair one."

It will be noted that the manufacturers refer to the expected price as one to be given or granted by Commissioner Pringle. As a matter of fact, the fixing of the price is entirely in the hands of the Government, and it does not appear that Commissioner Pringle is expected even to make a recommendation as to the price that should be charged. It would appear that his duties are to report to the Government upon the four subjects mentioned in the Order in Council authorizing the investigation.

Unfortunately, some remarks of Commissioner Pringle at the various hearings have been such as to create the impression that the determining of the price is very largely in his own hands. The nature of these remarks is indicated by the following extracts from the evidence:

"What I have got to do some time is to say what price is going to be fixed."

"As I said a moment ago, it is a War Measures Act, and I am going to get at the actual cost, if I can get at it, of the manufacture of this paper; and having got at it, then I am going to endeavor to make an order which will assure to the publishers of this country an ample supply of news print at a reasonable price."

NO REPORT BEFORE SEPTEMBER.

Commissioner Pringle stated recently that he was very much afraid it would be some two or three months before he could make his report. He added that it all depended on the accountants, who were then busily engaged at the different mills. Pulp and Paper Magazine of Canada states that G. T. Clarkson of Toronto, who was appointed to make an audit of the manufacturers' books, has about twenty men engaged on that work.

MRS. GARRISON IS A "HOME-LOVER".

SHE INSPIRES THE ADS OF A BIG FURNITURE HOUSE IN BROOKLYN.

By Aylett Lapsley.

Many business women, contrary to general opinion, are home-makers, and Mrs. Fannie E. Garrison, advertising manager for C. Ludwig Baumann's furniture store in Brooklyn, N. Y., is a practical example and she also has a veritable genius for hospitality.

If you will pick up the Brooklyn Standard Union some day and glance through its pages you will run across an advertisement showing the most attractive cuts of bedroom sets, parlor suites, baby carriages and carpet sweepers, with a smiling young woman at the handle—sometimes even a potato grater—all the things that it takes to furnish a pretty, cozy little home nest. The prices will be equally attractive and the headline will probably read something like this:

"Do come in to see us, Little Mrs. Home-Maker! We have all the household treasures your heart has been longing for and at prices that will please you. Your credit is always good at Baumann's."

She also has a most attractive series of letters which are sent out to prospective customers, those who have open accounts and those who have paid up their accounts—and all of them express a friendly interest and extend a most hospitable invitation to do business at Baumann's, which, by the way, in an instalment house.

The entire spirit of the store is one of cordiality—it may have existed to some degree before Mrs. Garrison took charge of the advertising, but we feel sure that a large measure of this warm hospitality emanates from their charming advertising manager.

Even the outside of the store presents a homelike appearance when on sale days the baby carriages are lined up outside, with their kicking, crowing occupants, while the bare-headed, smiling mothers, each with her letter of invitation in hand and her money tied in the corner of her handkerchief, or pocketbook tightly clasped, are making wonderful selections for the beautification of what Mrs. Garrison terms "that nearest approach to Heaven—Home!"

There is another place where Mrs. Garrison shines in a hospitable role. She it is who arranges the details of the wonderful dinner dances and picnics for which the League of Advertising Women of New York are famed.

All who have had the good fortune to attend these most delightful affairs will attest to the delicious "eats" spread before them and if they have had the great pleasure of an introduction to our beloved member, they, I am sure, will agree with me that she is the soul of hospitality and friendliness, both qualities which must be possessed by a successful advertising man or woman.

CHARTER FOR PAPER FIRM.

BOOKS USEFUL TO EDITORS AND ADVERTISERS.

"GERMANY, THE NEXT REPUBLIC," by Carl W. Ackerman of the New York Tribune; George H. Doran Company, publisher.

Written by a man who had chance after chance to see Berlin and the German government from the "inside," Mr. Ackerman's book is a valuable contribution to the literature of the World War. He has stated the facts as they appeared to him during the two years residence in Germany as a newspaper correspondent and to those who are not exactly sure of why America is in the war, he furnishes many cogent arguments.

"THE WONDER BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE," compiled and edited by Henry Chase Hill; American Industries Bureau, publisher.

All that its name implies, this book of 600-odd pages and 700 illustrations covers most of the common fields of human activities both in text and picture. Written simply and non-technically, an excellent reference work for both children and their elders.

"BUSINESS COMPETITION AND THE LAW," by Gilbert H. Montague, G. P. Putnam's Sons, publishers.

How the business house with an aggressive sales policy may run afoul of Federal and state anti-trust laws is explained with many clear illustrations by the author, who concisely handles the history of anti-trust legislation since the enactment of the Sherman law.

"HOW TO DEVELOP YOUR PERSONALITY," by Clare Tree Major; Thomas Y. Crowell Company, publisher.

That personality is a sine qua non of success in dealing with people has become axiomatic since the beginning of the twentieth century, but ignorance of what it is or how to develop it has deepened a rut for many. The author's ideas and methods of presenting them have received the endorsement of many qualified to pass judgment upon them.

"ELEMENTS OF BUSINESS LAW," by Ernest W. Huffcut; Ginn & Co., publishers.

This is a new edition, revised to date, of a book that has been standard on the subject of business law for several years. The revision has been done under the direction of George Gleason Bogert, professor of law at Cornell University.

furnishing by various authorities on the subject.

"FOSTER'S AUCTION BRIDGE FOR ALL," by R. E. Foster; Frederick A. Stokes Publishing Company, publisher.

This is a standard book, well known to all lovers of bridge, brought up to date with the latest official rules. It is valuable to all classes of players.

"ELEMENTARY FRENCH WORDS & PHRASES FOR RED CROSS WORKERS AND THE NEW ARMY," by Shaw Jeffrey; Brentano's, publisher.

Any work that aids the people of this country to learn French at the present time is valuable and Mr. Jeffrey has followed sound principles of education in this little pocket-size book. Its vocabulary is by no means general, being limited more or less strictly to terms used in hospitals and medical work.

"SOLDIERS' SPOKEN FRENCH," by Helene Cross; E. P. Dutton & Co., publisher.

Soldiers have neither the time nor the patience to learn French as "she was spoke" before the war, but they do need sufficient knowledge of the tongue to carry on a simple conversation. This book is based on French courses given to New Zealand troops.

"BRAZIL," by L. E. Elliott; the Macmillan Company, publisher.

Brazil's past, present and future are interestingly outlined by the author, who, as literary editor of the Pan-

American Magazine, can be treated as an authority on the subject. Business men seeking South American trade, who want to know more about their customers than the market reports show, will find it a fruitful source.

"VOLPER'S RUSSIAN ACCIDENCE IN TABLE," adapted for English students by Mark Sieff; E. P. Dutton & Co., publishers.

This book gives all the Russian declensions of nouns, adjectives, numerals and pronouns; conjugation of verbs; formation of nouns, adjectives, numerals and the aspects of verbs. There is also a chapter on the formation of augmentatives, diminutives, etc.

"HOW TO REST," by William Lee Howard; Edward J. Clode, publisher.

Maintenance of the body at full efficiency is essential to success in modern business and knowledge of how to rest is the one method of keeping the human machine at top notch. Dr. Howard gives a few simple rules, which require only the addition of will power to produce the desired result.

"HALF-HOURS WITH THE IDIOT," by John Kendrick Bangs; Little Brown & Co., publishers.

Age has not dulled the wit of Mr. Bangs' old favorite, whose dissertations on various subjects still hold the reader's interest with their quaint phrasing and philosophy.

"A NEW POCKET DICTIONARY OF THE RUSSIAN AND ENGLISH LANGUAGES," by J. H. Freese; E. P. Dutton & Co., publishers.

Good English-Russian dictionaries in small compass are few in number, this lack adding greatly to the difficulties of the American who desires to learn the Russian language. This book also aids the student to become familiar with the Russian alphabet easily and to translate words into English.

"ESSENTIALS IN MODERN EUROPEAN HISTORY," by Daniel C. Knowlton and Samuel B. Howe; Longmans, Green & Co., publishers.

The rise of modern European civilization is traced from the introduction of machinery until its debacle in 1914, beyond which the authors have not cared to penetrate. It is valuable as a background for future study of the war and its effects upon civilization and relations of belligerents and others.

"PASSACONAWAY IN THE WHITE MOUNTAINS," by Charles Edward Beals, Jr., Richard G. Badger, publisher.

An excellent book of travel in a beautiful section of America is this, with a historic background that lends strong interest to the account. It is also a comprehensive and vivid account of the original New Hampshire Indians.

HOW NEWSPAPER ADS GET INVESTORS.

NEW FIELDS THAT CAN BE REACHED IN NO OTHER WAY CAN BE OPENED BY A RIGHTLY MANAGED CAMPAIGN.

By WILLIAM T. MULLALLY, of the Advertising Agency of Maclay & Mullally, Inc.

Modern experience has proved beyond the slightest doubt that a publicity campaign, efficiently conceived and handled, can be made to pay handsome dividends, and create an equity in good will that is impregnable, for any financial institution.

Everywhere the dynamic force of intelligent advertising has developed and sustained communities hitherto unheard of.

Successful advertising has become history.

Pioneers have expended thousands of dollars to test ideas.

Scientific application of standard principles can thoroughly eliminate the adverse element of waste; and without waste the growth should be systematic and logical.

New fields of investors that can be reached in no other way, at the same expense, will be opened.

Banks, underwriters, institutions and private investors will be reached, and eventually a most satisfying and greatly to be desired good will will be established among other financial houses.

Unity and repetition of this publicity accomplishes all of the above results—and at an expense ridiculously small in ratio of comparison as is shown by the accompanying chart.

Let us suppose that in the territory of Greater New York (comprising New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland and Delaware), New England and Middle States there is a total population of approximately 40,000,000.

Of course, it is reasonable to believe that at least 39,996,000 of this total will not be available under this plan or over 99 per cent.

Of the 4,000 prospects available, it might be liberally computed that 200, or 5 per cent, may purchase securities at an investment house in a period of time within 6 months to 1 year—this on an approximate cost basis, including salesmen and their expenses, only (allowing for from 6 to 8 men) estimated conservatively from $20,000 to $25,000 per year.

On a unit basis allowing said sales cost to be 1 per cent of the gross sales, $2,000,000 or $2,500,000 will be the gross sales, or an average sale of $10,000 per capita per year.

This selling plan is based upon a similar system of unit costs, and it demonstrates a greater efficiency as against a smaller ratio of costs and necessarily a decreased amount of risk.

These comparisons are intended to demonstrate the efficiency of one plan in connection with, rather than against, the other.

In the territory mentioned there are 12 states, including a population in excess of 40,000,000, with a distribution of wealth, as shown by bank deposits, of $11,435,563,841 15, or an average of $133.89 per capita.

It is computed that over 8,000,000, or more than 20 per cent, of this population are savings bank depositors or investors and of this amount in territories mentioned approximately 5 per cent, or more than 400,000, are investors.

WHAT A NEWSPAPER AD CAN DO.

Conservatively speaking, it is possible to send a salesman in the form of a printed advertisement to over 20 per cent of these 8,000,000 depositors and investors, using 4 papers to a state, or about 50 papers in all, reaching over 1,600,000 depositors and investors.

Again allowing 5 per cent for possible investors, we reach a possible clientele of 80,000 investors.

Allowing a percentage of one reply to every 10 investors reached, we will be in receipt of 8,000 inquiries of possible customers on our books.

On the given basis of selling (5 per cent) we open 400 accounts.

A 35-line advertisement in 50 newspapers on an average of 2 times a week—52 times a year, presents our message 5,200 times a year.

On a liberal cost allowance we insert 262,500 lines at 5 cent a line average cost, totalling an expense of $14,560 a year.

ADS VS. PERSONAL SALESMANSHIP.

On the stipulated basis of 1 per cent cost in percentage of gross sales, it is necessary to do a business of $1,456,000 a year, or on the basis of charging 75 per cent overhead and 25 per cent to expense or good will (profit or loss) of $1,092,000—an average of $2,730.

SUMMARY.

	By Salesmen.	By Advg.
Prospects reached	4,000	8,000
Accounts	200	400
Cost	20,000	14,560

On a basis of comparison the salesman is therefore required to sell $10,000 a year to each investor as against $2,730 advertising.

The accompanying charts prove these figures are very conservative, in that their actual demonstration has proven even a wider margin of profit. Combining these two selling points and whatever slight margin of risk there may be in either—is practically eliminated by being checked up by the other.

These charts are the actual results of 4 years' campaign—the first year $1,500 was appropriated, and the results have warranted a steady increase.

Now the appropriation has been increased 20 times and is being steadily increased every year.

The copy has been written to contain one idea at a time, for it should be remembered that it is not what is read, but what is understood and remembered that makes for the up-building of a campaign—simplicity is the keynote—confidence the end to be attained.

POINTS IN COPY AND APPROPRIATION.

Regardless of the conditions affecting the disposition or flow of the money among the investing public, the fact remains that there exists a proportionate sum of wealth which must in some way or other be used for the derivation of income.

Business prosperity is largely a question of mental attitude. The average investor, in the disposition of his funds, is largely governed by his feeling of confidence. It is, therefore, of fundamental importance to impress upon him the desirability, from his point of view, to place his funds in the care or under the supervision of an institution that has his welfare primarily at heart.

It is now desired to render the value of such a campaign cumulative—familiarizing the name of the investment house is an important factor. This is accomplished by the adoption of a distinct form or forms of type for the name plate, and a successive uniformity of "set-up" and diction.

Variation or change of copy is desirable to cope with the character of different readers as represented by different mediums and psychological conditions, but in each one there should be the same exploitation of a fixed policy.

NEWSPAPER MEN IN PARIS.

ANGLO-AMERICANS ELECT NEW OFFICERS—CHANGES IN THE FIELD.

The Association of the Anglo-American Press in Paris, composed of the representatives of British and American newspapers, has elected the following officers for the coming year:

President: George Adam, London Times; vice-president, Wythe Williams, New York Times; treasurer, Gordon D. Knox, London Morning Post; secretary, Lincoln Eyre, New York World; directors, L. Jerrild, London Daily Telegraph; A. Kerr Bruce, Reuter's Agency; Lincoln Eyre, New York World; W. L. McAlpin, London Daily Mail and London Mirror; F. B. Grundy, Associated Press; Paul Scott Mowrer, Chicago Daily News, and William Philip Simms, United Press (ex-officio).

Several changes have taken place in the personnel of the Paris field during the past year, among them being the following:

Heywood Brown has taken over the office of the New York Tribune, succeeding Fred B. Pitney, who is now in the United States.

Frank Grundy has resigned from the New York Sun and is now with the Associated Press. C. F. Philips is now handling the Sun's interests.

Walter Duranty, who left the New York Times bureau in January to write short stories at the Riviera, is now back with Wythe Williams. George D. Gribble, who took Mr. Duranty's place, has joined the United Press forces.

William Philip Simms, who was last year's president, is now at the British front and Henry Wood, his U. P. colleague, is still stationed at Rome, leaving Wilbur Forrest in charge of the Paris bureau. Mr. Simms is expected shortly to be stationed with the American forces and Robert Small is also expected to be transferred from British grand headquarters to Pershing's forces.

Ernest Orr, formerly of the New York Morning Telegraph, is now associated with C. F. Bertelli on the Hearst staff.

Burr Price has been detached from the New York Herald's home staff to the Paris office, succeeding H. M. Belgen and Herbert K. Long, who have both enlisted in the British army.

Dr. Stanley Shaw, formerly with the Associated Press in Paris, is now with Reuter's in London.

Wythe Williams of the New York Times and Paul Scott Mowrer of the Chicago News are spending a month at the French front.

Caroline Wilson of the Chicago Tribune, who spent the winter on a lecture tour in the United States, is back in Paris for her paper, associated with Floyd Gibbons, who crossed the Atlantic on the first armed trip of the St. Louis.

THE SYRACUSE JOURNAL'S NEW HOME.

World London staff, has gone to Rome in connection with the Cocchi murder case.

Henry Wales of the New York World's Paris bureau took a trip to London recently.

All the American correspondents are buying olive drab khaki uniforms to wear at the front, as they will not be permitted in the United States training camp nor in the American trenches in civilian clothes. This rule has been enforced by the British for some time, although it is still possible to go to the French front in mufti.

Since the death of Serge Bassett, the French journalist, by a shot in the trenches recently, the French are considering the adoption of a rule that all newspaper men must wear either horizon blue or khaki uniforms when visiting the trenches.

Mr. Bassett was killed at the British front, being picked off by a German sharpshooter after he had stuck a red rose, which he found growing in a trench, into the visor of his steel helmet.

KEEPING MAJOR PALMER BUSY.

Major Frederick Palmer, the American censor with General Pershing, has found his original program of morning and afternoon interviews with the correspondents too strenuous and has now decided upon one session a day at noon. The French newspaper men are always seen separately by Major Palmer and General Pershing and the latter sees American, French and English correspondents every Saturday.

SECTION FOR VETERANS.

The Sioux City (Ia.) Journal recently devoted a quarter-page to a feature story regarding the old-timers on the Journal. The list of seven men who have served more than a quarter-century each on the Journal contains the following names: E. W. "Happy" Caldwell, A. A. "Mush" Alburn, Colonel E. T. Hoyt, Colonel Frank T. Crum, William Emerson, W. H. Duncan and George Coghlan.

FINN EDITORS QUIT.

Toivo Hiltunen, managing editor of the Tyomies, Finnish Socialist newspaper published at Superior, Wis., has resigned. Kalle Tahtela, an associate editor of the same paper, has also resigned.

THE TIMES AT A PREMIUM.

All during the past week the New York Times published the lists of names, with addresses, of the men summoned for military draft examination as fast as the exemption boards sent out their notices. The sections of the Times containing the names sold at a considerable premium. This speculation was conducted wholly by newsboys, who found it highly profitable.

Copies of the list, which could have been obtained for 1 cent, with the Times, were sold to the early morning crowd at Brooklyn Bridge for 5 cents apiece. Later in the day the market declined, but as late as 4 p. m. copies found ready purchasers on Park Row at 2 cents each.

Adjutant General Stotesbury asked the Times to forward to his office in the State Arsenal a copy of the Times containing the list of quotas for each district in the state. That list also gave the population of each district and the number of registrants in each.

"We want to get the number of registrants in each New York City district," it was said at the arsenal, "and the Times is the only paper in New York that published them."

YEA, VERILY!

A fictionist in McClure's Magazine gives the following description of a newspaper office: "The city editor stood at his elbow and took the copy, sheet by sheet, as he wrote it. In the composing room above, the presses were already rumbling and growling impatiently for the feed about to be flung them."

GOLF IN CHICAGO.

Carey Orr, cartoonist on the Chicago Tribune, won the monthly golf tournament of the Chicago Press Club held last week at the Indian Hill Club. Paul Warden of the Chicago Herald was Mr. Orr's leading opponent, the respective scores being 84 and 87.

COUNTRY EDITORS MEET.

The annual mid-summer meeting of the Eastern Illinois Country Publishers' Association was held July 27 at Arthur, Ill. Editors in the eighteenth and nineteenth Congressional districts were present. Resolutions were adopted commending the administration of President Wilson.

HOUSEWARMING IN SYRACUSE.

THE JOURNAL MOVES INTO NEW QUARTERS AMID "HONORS OF WAR."

The Syracuse Journal was published from its new home for the first time on Monday, July 30. The first official act of the Journal was to raise an American flag, which was done with the assistance of Mayor Walter R. Stone and representatives of the Army and Navy from the military camp located in Syracuse.

This was accompanied by a housewarming which was attended by the Journal family and a number of guests. Among the speakers was John Budd of the John Budd Company, national advertising representative of the Journal. Harvey D. Burrill, publisher, acted as toastmaster.

The new Journal Building has been pronounced one of the best perfectly appointed newspaper plants in the country. It is two stories above the basement and is devoted entirely to the newspaper. It is located in the heart of the city about a stone's throw from the city hall and about a block from the court house. The building is Renaissance in design and the treatment is suggestive of the business that it accommodates. The exterior is treated with tapestry brick with marble bases and limestone and terra cotta trimmings. The building is entirely fireproof.

The building has 142 feet frontage on East Fayette street and 93 feet on Montgomery street. There is light on all four sides and there are two large skylights on the roof. There are driveways at the side and rear so that it is possible to drive entirely around the building. The building contains 37,000 square feet. The business forces are entirely on the first floor. The press room extends from the basement up through to the second floor so that the two presses can be seen from the street. The press room is 78 feet by 63 feet. The editorial room is 40 feet by 63 feet and the composing room is 77 feet by 63 feet.

The Journal was founded on March 20, 1839, and is therefore in its seventy-ninth year. It has been published every day since, except Sundays without interruption. It is an independent 2-cent newspaper.

STATE JOB FOR MALCOLM.

James Malcolm, political reporter on the Buffalo Courier, will be the editor of State Service Magazine, a new publication relating to state news in New York. It will be published at Albany.

COURAGE OF HIS CONVICTIONS

From Everybody's Magazine.

A witness was being questioned as to his whereabouts for the year past.

"Where were you beginning January, 1915?" queried the attorney.

"With the Boston Herald," was the reply. "I disagreed with the managing editor upon a national political issue."

"Where were you immediately after that?" came next from the attorney.

"Minneapolis Tribune."

"And why did you leave there?"

"Well, I also disagreed with that paper's managing editor upon a national political issue."

The judge's curiosity was aroused by this repeated answer, and he said: "Please tell the Court what this national political issue is upon which you seem to have such decided opinions?"

"Prohibition," was the answer.

PAPER CONTRACTS HELD UP.

MILLS WONT RENEW BEFORE NOVEMBER—ADVICE OF A.N.P.A. TO PUBLISHERS.

The current report of the paper committee of the American Newspaper Publishers Association says that manufacturers, including the Great Northern, are generally notifying publishers everywhere that they will not renew for 1918 until the end of November. Any contracts expiring between now and the end of the year will be carried until November and renewed at the same time as all the others.

In renewing contracts the committee warns that publishers should "protect themselves by retaining the right to change size of rolls, and to use standard 8-column 12½-em paper or to change to dry mats, if desirable."

It will be practically impossible for any one to renew for 1918 until the time set, the end of November. This is now receiving the consideration of the paper committee, which reports:

"With present prospects, it does not look as though this arrangement on the part of the manufacturers to have all contracts expire at the same time will be as big a club this year as it was last year. Certainly, if publishers are as careful about their purchases as the manufacturers are about arranging sales, the price will not be as serious as has been anticipated."

EXPORTS.

Further, the paper committee says: "There is no doubt that increasing exports will be very substantially reduced by the Export Council. Manufacturers have deliberately increased these exports to South America and Australia and many reports have been received of large orders being placed for delivery outside the United States. The Export Council, however, will hold these down to a very small minimum, and the increasing difficulties of the shipping situation will also tend to keep this paper in the United States so that we look for a much better situation in future than has been the case in the past year.

PAPER STOCKS.

"Manufacturers very generally are recommending newspapers to take in extra paper and are offering very large quantities of paper for immediate shipment, in addition to urging publishers to take in September and October contract deliveries immediately.

"There is a disposition on the part of some trade papers, and others, to advise publishers to do this, believing that they will obtain paper now in this way, at a lower price than they will obtain it in the fall.

"The paper committee strongly urges everybody to 'sit tight' and not store up paper beyond immediate requirements and minimum protection. Publishers who accept this advice to store paper now will immediately notice a softening in price over the present satisfactory market, and once the price is softened now, manufacturers will easily be able to hold this price for fall contracts.

"Stocks are very heavy and piling up on account of the reduced consumption and larger imports of paper. Manufacturers are now trying to pass these stocks over to publishers, where there will be no record kept of them, and in order to keep the market clear and in good shape for fall contracts. Publishers should remember, however, that stocks in the hands of manufacturers have very much better effect on the market than the same stocks in the hands of publishers, and that mills cannot make any profits unless they make paper.

"There is little danger of many machines shutting down to meet the present market, but of course some machines must shut down to make repairs, as they have been running at full capacity for about two years. This will, however, make them better able to make tonnage during the winter demand and is in the interests of publishers, as well as manufacturers.

PHOTOGRAPH OFFER.

"A great deal of syndicate stuff is now being offered for October and November delivery to newspapers for daily and Sunday photograph sections at very low prices, in some cases reserving the last page for national advertising.

"Publishers are urged not to increase their paper consumption by adopting these extra features, unless they use that feature to increase their selling price. If the plans of these syndicates go through it will mean an enormous increase in paper consumption, very much more than the economies effected have amounted to."

The paper committee advises publishers against accepting these syndicate offers, unless prices are increased to pay for the extra cost, and the change this will effect in the market.

WATER POWER LEGISLATION.

"There seems to be a very excellent chance of passing the proposed water power legislation which was endorsed by resolution by the A.N.P.A. convention on June 21.

"The Walsh Bill, the Small Bill and the Shields Bill aim to make available the water powers now wasted in the public domain and on navigable streams. As outlined here tofore, their passage will have a permanent and favorable effect on the future prices of news print. It is almost imperative that such legislation be enacted, if the present monopoly in the production of news print is to be checked.

A large number of the members of the A.N.P.A. have given this matter favorable attention in their editorial columns, and we urge on all members to do so at the earliest possible moment. It seems very probable that this legislation can be passed at this session, but if this is to be done every effort, both through the offices of the newspapers and by direct pressure on representatives in Congress, is necessary.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION'S REPORT.

"The complete reports of the Federal Trade Commission are now available from the Government printing office in Washington. All publishers are recommended to apply to the bureau and receive a complete copy, rather than have us reprint extracts or part of this report.

"The report is very elaborate and goes into the details carefully and while it is much more moderate in its censure of the paper mills than the facts disclosed in the report deserve, it is a very fair and complete statement of the situation in connection with the news print business.

"Be sure and send for a copy.

MILLS CLOSING DOWN.

"The following mills are reported closed down, or running on short time:

"Cheboygan, Groveton, Holyoke, St. George Pulp & Paper Company at Norwalk, Great Northern.

"In some cases these are due to labor troubles; in other cases, shutting down for repairs, which is being extended more than is necessary.

"There is no doubt that much of this shutdown is deliberate on the part of manufacturers to reduce consumption. This has already been brought to the attention of the Federal Trade Commission and publishers are urged to effect all further possible economies, which will now have a much greater effect under reduced circulation and advertising which most publishers are experiencing.

CANADIAN LUMBER EMBARGO.

"The lumber export embargo has been put into force in Canada, which will affect to a great extent in reducing the export of lumber from Canada. This will benefit the pulpwood situation substantially, as wood formerly used for lumber now goes into pulpwood. Price Brothers & Co. alone have now shut down all their sawmills and are now putting their sawlogs and pulpwood both into paper and making more profits than they could make in the lumbering business. Profits on news print paper are now so handsome that they can afford to use large spruce logs which were previously used exclusively in making high grade export lumber."

TO PRINT OFFICERS' PICTURES.

The Chicago Evening Post will print the picture of every officer commissioned at the training camp at Fort Sheridan. More than 4,000 are in training and the pictures will appear by the page, after the fashion of casualty lists in English and Canadian newspapers.

"SPERRITS!"

Mark Twain is still writing, the "ouija board" being used by the humorist now. At least that is the assumption to be gained from a new book, "Jap Herron" dictated via the "ouija" by Twain to Mrs. Lola Hayes and Mrs. E. G. Hutchinson of St. Louis.

Robert P. Kimball of the Omaha Bee advertising department has resigned.

BRUCE HALDEMAN LOSES CASE.

OUSTED FROM THE CONTROL
—KROCK AND HUGHES
NEW MANAGERS.

The Court of Appeals, Kentucky's highest court, on July 27 dissolved the temporary injunction recently granted to Bruce Haldeman, president of the Louisville Courier-Journal and the Louisville Times companies, against these corporations.

The temporary injunction prevented the defendants from removing Bruce Haldeman as business manager and from supervision over and participation in the editorial departments of both newspapers.

Henry Watterson, in the lower court, intervened as opposed to the legality of a private agreement between the three Haldemans in 1912, by which Bruce Haldeman was to be president and business manager and W. B. Haldeman vice-president and director, until one of the three Haldemans should die. He denied acquiescence in the agreement and opposed its further enforcement as against public policy.

ARTHUR B. KROCK.

The lower court decided that Mr. Watterson had acquiesced; the Court of Appeals sustained his denial.

In its opinion the Court of Appeals declared that no private agreement could bind future actions and elections of corporation officers in Kentucky and declared that agreement invalid.

W. B. Haldeman gave the following statement to THE FOURTH ESTATE on August 1:

"Six judges of the Court of Appeals of Kentucky sitting in the case gave a unanimous decision dissolving the injunction granted in the lower court and reversed Judge Wallace on every point.

"Bruce Haldeman, the plaintiff informs me that his suit is ended and his case will be dismissed.

"The board of directors of the Courier-Journal Company and of the Louisville Times Company will control all matters pertaining to the companies in future.

"Arthur B. Krock, managing editor of the two papers, has been elected editorial manager and Robert E. Hughes has been elected business manager."

ARTICLE VIII.

USE OF GRAPHIC CHARTS IN SHOWING THE FINANCIAL CONDITION OF THE VARIOUS DEPARTMENTS.

BY EDMUND WALKER.
Herald Building, Chicago.

A great deal has been written by auditors (and those who were not auditors) on graphic charts, and many modern writers claim to be the originators although graphic charts have been known for a hundred years or more. And yet today more misleading charts are being compiled than ever before, simply because the principles underlying the system are not generally understood.

The whole object of a chart instead of rows of figures is to present to the reader a clear statement, one which he can at a glance understand and digest, one which he will carry in his memory easily.

And yet how many charts have we seen which contain ten, fifteen and even twenty lines on the same sheet, so that they represent a drawing of a complicated railway terminal rather than a clear statement of the fluctuations of certain expense or revenue accounts.

To start with only one item should be treated on one section of the large sheet.

When it is desired to show comparatively the different fluctuations in different years, then let us use different colored inks so that there can be no confusion.

Charts should only be used for certain items and it is foolish to record all expense items on charts in a newspaper office. Instead of charting an individual expense item it is better to chart the ratio between two or more co-related items.

For example, instead of charting the mechanical expenses in detail and then the overhead expenses in detail it is more intelligent to chart the ratio of productive to non-productive expenses. Chart the ratio of circulation revenue to news print rather than individually.

Of course, I do not say that a chart showing the newspaper consumption week by week or month by month according to your unit of operation is not valuable, but sufficient use of comparative percentages is not being made.

Eleven lines will take care of the charting of the entire expenses of a newspaper.

Each line will represent the fluctuations of the total expense of each department.

Two lines will suffice for the entire revenues, one being used for advertising revenue and the other for circulation revenue.

Another line will record the ratio between the liquid assets and the immediate liabilities.

The fifteenth line will record the profit or loss made. Thus in fifteen lines we have recorded the essentials of every newspaper.

A busy executive will now glance at these lines and, providing that no line shows any marked fluctuation, he will not concern himself with the detailed statement of expenses or revenues. In other words, the adoption of properly constructed graphic charts allows the executive to give his attention to those parts of his business which need his attention and he need not waste time wading through columns of figures which represent normal expenses.

Other lines can be used for recording the productive percentage of the mechanical departments, the circulation of the paper and so on.

I once heard of a novel form of charting which gave the required results. Fourteen squares were made and black and red blocks were made to fit each square. The managing director would look at these squares and if they all showed black he would close his desk and go to golf, but if one showed red he would require an itemized statement of that particular department, together with comparative figures from the preceding weeks.

This executive obtained the results which graphic charts are supposed to give. He allowed a margin of so many dollars for fluctuations in each department, and so long as the departmental expense remained within the prescribed figures the black square remained, when the total weekly expense exceeded the prescribed amount the red square appeared. I do not advocate that system as being modern and efficient, but it served the purpose very well.

For our business we will prepare the fifteen charts above described and we will also use as comparisons the figures obtainable from the other paper as well as last year's records.

Different colored inks will be used.

Regular graph paper, which is ruled in square, each square being divided into one hundred smaller squares, will be employed and we will be careful not to crowd the records so that one line may run into another record, all records being on the same large sheet although distinctively divided into sections.

Next week we will take up the question of bad debts. Some weeks ago, when we purchased the competing paper, we saw that an excessive amount of debts had been accumulated and some provision must be made to prevent this happening again.

JUNE RECORD OF ADVERTISING.

THIRTY-SEVEN NEWSPAPERS SHOW GAIN OVER 1916—N. Y. PICKING UP.

Of 86 newspapers in 16 cities in the United States, records of whose advertising are kept by the statistical department of the New York Evening Post, 37 showed a gain for June of this year as compared with June of 1916.

Six of the 16 cities showed gains on the same basis. The record of the 86 newspapers, grouped according to cities, follows:

	1917.	1916.
New York	9,162,609	9,495,084	332,425 Loss
Chicago	4,113,642	4,972,194	858,552 Loss
Philadelphia	4,740,900	4,996,500	255,600 Loss
Washington	2,508,243	2,387,210	171,123 Gain
Los Angeles	4,088,100	3,804,000	284,100 Gain
San Francisco	2,247,638	2,246,202	1,436 Gain
Detroit	3,683,568	3,770,914	87,346 Loss
Buffalo	2,384,282	2,427,782	43,500 Loss
St. Louis	2,797,461	2,981,408	183,948 Loss
Milwaukee	1,771,838	1,128,898	642,940 Gain
New Orleans	1,615,639	1,412,390	203,249 Gain
Cleveland	3,316,950	3,024,150	292,800 Gain
Cincinnati	1,116,200	1,066,500	49,700 Gain
Baltimore	3,046,465	3,240,867	194,402 Loss
Minneapolis	2,328,618	2,319,310	9,308 Loss
St. Paul	1,541,820	1,565,944	24,024 Loss
Total	50,584,186	51,784,294	1,200,108 Loss

Newspapers in New York City have begun to pick up the slight loss in advertising which immediately followed the entrance of this country into the World War.

For the month of May they showed a loss of 206,800 agate lines as against the figures for the same month in 1916, but for the month of June the loss was only 185,981 agate lines as against the number for that month a year ago.

Seven out of the seventeen newspapers in New York City, whose records are followed by the statistical department of the Evening Post showed a gain for June of this year over June in 1916.

The largest gain was made by the Evening Post, with 77,525 more agate lines for June, 1917, than for June, 1916.

MAKING CHINA AND AMERICA BETTER ACQUAINTED.

Teaching Americans and Chinese to know each other better—a task sadly neglected in the past, say authorities—is the object of Millard's Review, a new weekly published in Shanghai, China. It is edited by

J. B. POWELL

Thomas F. Millard of Shanghai and J. B. Powell, who until recently made his headquarters at the University of Missouri School of Journalism, at Columbia, Mo.

The magazine is printed in English and deals with international affairs from an American point of view, with an eye to conditions as they will probably exist after the conclusion of the present war. Its appearance, style and typography follow high American standards.

Miss Margaret Powell of Hannibal, Mo., a student in the school of journalism, will leave late in August for Shanghai to work on the Review.

NEW ENTERPRISES.

ROLLA, KAN.—Albert B. Edson has moved the plant of the Bennington Democrat to this city, where he will start a new paper.

WICHITA, KAN.—The Continental Publishing Company, organized with $30,000 capital, will publish the Petroleum News, a weekly devoted to oil and gas affairs. The organizers are R. M. Hobson and J. E. Stanley of College Hill.

SAPULPA, OKLA.—A new Democratic county newspaper is to be started here.

DALHART, TEX.—The first issue of the Dalhart Church News made its appearance here July 14. Amazon Bradford and Frank Klein are the publishers.

HE HAD IT TRAINED.

E. J. Miller of the Minneapolis Tribune, while on a visit to friends in Peoria, Ill., recently, lost his $50 watch. After missing the time-piece he retraced his steps about the city and finally located the watch lying in the gutter, carefully concealed beneath a stray wisp of paper.

Hugh Jeffries has sold the Webster (Wis.) Enterprise to H. Hinshaw.

July Gain

IN JULY

The New York Times

published 875,401 lines of advertisements, a gain of 83,450 lines compared with July, 1916, and, deducting help and situations wanted advertisements, a greater volume than any other New York newspaper.

Average net paid circulation, daily and Sunday, exceeds 344,000 copies.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING AUGUST 4, 1917.

CENSORSHIP MUDDLE HAS GONE FAR ENOUGH.

In his statement announcing the new war news censorship regulations Director Creel of the Bureau of Public Information said that "repeated and serious violations of the voluntary censorship have been attempted to be excused on the score of misunderstanding," and that a "re-statement" is made with the idea that hereafter there shall be no room for doubt as to the committee's desires.

The instances in which the most serious charges of violation have been made, however, have not resulted from misunderstanding of the committee's rules, but from following them implicitly.

These instances have involved publication of dispatches passed by the European censors, announcing the arrival of American military units in Europe.

On this subject the committee's only standing rule, contained in the general list promulgated May 28 and never replaced or revoked until July 30, was as follows:

"All messages received from abroad by cable or wireless are censored at the point of dispatch or receipt and are free for publication, unless some especial circumstances arouse the suspicion of the editor."

Now, under these circumstances, the newspapers can be blamed for printing matter that came to them according to rules seems beyond just reasoning.

The mix-up which resulted from the present system was again emphasized on July 28 when dispatches announcing the arrival of more troops in France came through by cable and were published just as if the Bureau of Public Information did not exist.

Just how this happened nobody seems to know.

The War Department absolutely refused to sanction the publication of the news, although as a result of arrangements made by Bureau Director Creel following the first instance of this kind it was supposed that any such news that came by cable had been properly passed by an American censor and could be printed.

After the publication of the news on July 28 all over the country the Committee on Public Information began its customary attempt to prevent publication.

Its refusal to "release" the news, which was appearing in extra editions everywhere, complicated the muddle.

The Associated Press refused to accept the Public Information Bureau's ruling that the cable story should be "killed" even if it had already been printed, asserting that there was no prohibited information in the story.

Individual newspapers were told they must not print the story, but they were unable to find out if the same ruling had been given to other newspapers and press associations that had not asked for information.

Also the trouble has not been altogether in Director Creel's bureau. Saturday evening Secretary Daniels ruled that the news that the Vaterland had been commissioned must not be printed, although he had given it out in the afternoon.

The Bureau of Public Information sent out word to this effect. At 9 o'clock Mr. Daniels, however, decided to revoke his earlier ruling, but it was 11 o'clock before word of this was sent to the newspapers.

Explanation of the information bureau was that it was necessary first to close the outgoing cables in New York to the news before giving out Mr. Daniels' release order, and this consumed two hours.

Secretary Baker was angry over the fact that the news of troop arrivals had not been suppressed, as he had every reason to suppose it would be.

When the mix-up occurred over the publication of the announcement that the first transport contingents of the Pershing expedition had arrived, Secretary Baker told Director Creel that the Army's interests were being jeopardized, and the latter promised it would not happen again—that a satisfactory censorship of military movements would be immediately worked out between the United States, French and British authorities.

That the self-same trouble has developed again only shows the Government to be at fault.

The newspapers can do no more than abide by the rules—which the great majority have faithfully done—and those that have not should be singled out for appropriate punishment—instead of their names being withheld and the "scolding" meted out to the press generally.

Matters cannot continue much longer in their present muddled way. It was a mistake to make one man the nation's publicity agent and at the same time the nation's censor.

This, apparently, is now realized by Mr. Creel himself, who has recommended to President Wilson that the Bureau of Public Information be relieved of the duty of passing on newspaper dispatches, and instead put the whole thing up to the newspapers to voluntarily abide by the rules.

No matter whether the President is willing to do just that or not, it is a certainty that ultimately the war news censorship must be taken out of the hands of the information bureau.

There is no doubt that the newspapers would welcome advice on what they should and should not print, and it seems that a bureau organized by the War Department or the Navy Department, or both, with capable newspaper men advisers, would command greater confidence than the present plan.

If the Government will properly take care of its outgoing cable and wireless censorship, there will not be one bit of harm in news of any kind being printed in the United States.

When the Government does that there will be no need of rules or anything else to govern our home newspapers.

HOW MUCH LONGER WILL PEOPLE STAND IT?

The cartoon on the opposite page of THE FOURTH ESTATE, entitled "Go Prepared, If You Wish to Enjoy the Scenery," hardly needs any word of explanation.

The folks who own automobiles and the folks who do not—in fact everybody who is robbed of the privilege of enjoying nature's scenery by the billboard advertisements—know how true the picture is of life today.

How much longer are the people going to stand for this trespass?

This condition of affairs is going to last until people are roused up to demand their rights.

And that time would not be long coming if the newspapers would earnestly set about to educate the public to resent the billboards' intrusion.

If every citizen who is being robbed of his rights to nature's beauties would decide he wouldn't patronize any product advertised on a scenery-destroying board, the intruders would soon come to terms.

GENERAL OTIS' DEATH A DEEP FELT LOSS.

In the death of General Harrison Grey Otis, proprietor of the Los Angeles Times, American journalism and the nation loses one of its most noted figures. He was one of the last of the old-time fighting editors that have made ever-lasting fame for themselves, in years gone by, in the annals of American newspaper history.

Henry Watterson, editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal, is now about the only one left.

General Otis' career brought him well earned honors as a warrior for his country and for his own ideals of the right.

His spirit as a fighter was well exemplified in his editorial work. He was never known to give up in any task he undertook, and his life-long, unyielding war on labor unionism is probably without an equal in the history of the United States.

For years he was marked for revenge, the climax of which came in 1910, when the Los Angeles Times Building was blown up with terrible loss of life and injury to the employees. The life of General Otis was miraculously spared and he had the satisfaction of fastening the crime to labor union perpetrators and securing their conviction.

Even that warning never stopped his crusade. He kept it up until the day he died.

Some years before the actual dynamiting occurred, when threats were made on the General's life and friends sought to get him to flee for safety, he refused to leave his desk where he was turning out editorials on the situation, saying:

"My heart is here; my work is here. If they must dynamite the building, I do not know what better grave I could have than under these stones."

That was typical of the man. He would not quit at anything.

General Otis and the Times were potent factors in the growth of Los Angeles from a small town to the foremost city of Southern California. They were leaders in every movement for the city's good.

The loss of General Otis leaves a niche in the nation's civil and newspaper life that will not be easy to fill.

NOTE AND COMMENT.

The Farmer's Guide, Huntington, Ind., through its house organ, Business Chat, has started a discussion along interesting lines, namely, how the small town retail merchant can retain trade of the surrounding rural district. He is advised in the July issue to adopt the progressive tactics of the merchant in the neighboring large city, who now gets the rural trade, and to advertise in the local press. Further articles will be devoted to the part played by the local banker and the local publisher in building business.

The Chicago Tribune on July 29 printed the admonition "Consult your conscience before you claim exemption" in the "ears" on the front page of each section.

The Paper Mill declares that it has located a mill where news print paper is being made without sulphite at the rate of 500 feet a minute upon a flat wire, producing daily 40 tons of paper out of 100 per cent ground wood and thereby saving 12 tons of sulphite daily. The name of the inventor and the location of the mill are now secret, but will be disclosed later, it is said.

Six Toronto newspapers will pay $86,918 more in wages next year to the 455 employees, in addition to greatly increased expenses for ink, metal, news print, etc.

John Welsh, manager of a paper company at Green Bay, Wis., has invented a process of de-inking paper, which he believes will partially solve the news print shortage. The finished product of the Welsh formula is a bluish-gray paper said to possess great strength. Green Bay publishers have already used some of the new product.

William Hale Thompson, mayor of Chicago, whose anti-American views have made him the target of much adverse criticism, now asserts that the prejudice against him is due to his being misquoted repeatedly by the Chicago newspapers. All the Chicago papers, however, have printed the same kind of material regarding His Honor.

"Read the advertisements in a paper first," was the advice given by Professor Fred C. Ayer of the University of Washington education department in a recent public lecture. He told his audience that mental journeys among advertisements would add greatly to their education and happiness.

J. W. Alexander, editor and owner of the Waynesboro (Miss.) News-Beacon, has sold the paper to Ernest C. Waterman of Russellville, Ala.

PURELY PERSONAL.

D. D. Moore, publisher of the New Orleans Times-Picayune, was one of the week's visitors in New York City.

Griffith Hughes, proprietor of the Victoria (B. C.) Daily Times, has offered the government the use of his estate at Cobble Hill, B. C. The Canadian government, in accepting the offer, announced that it would be a convalescent station for Canadian soldiers returned from the front.

Mrs. Emma Abbott Gage, editor of the Annapolis (Md.) Evening Capital, has resigned from the board of trustees of the Anne Arundel County Home.

"Tex" Irwin, a police reporter for the Cincinnati Commercial-Tribune who has been studying for the ministry at Wooster, O., is spending his vacation by working for the Commercial-Tribune.

Chapin Hall will return to the Phoenix (Ariz.) Gazette this month after a temporary stay in Warren, Pa.

George D. Kitzinger, business manager of the Interstate Banker, a Cincinnati weekly for bankers and investors, was on a business trip to New York this week.

Charles A. Jones, a newspaper man of Columbus, Ohio, is managing the "dry" fight at Ironton. Jones was secretary of the Ohio state tax commission during the administration of Governor F. B. Willis.

Sam Davis, the Nevada newspaper man who suffered a stroke of apoplexy in San Jose, Cal., some time ago has been removed to a sanitarium at Berkeley and is slowly recovering his health.

William D. Potter, formerly a department manager of the San Francisco Chronicle, was elected president of the Reserve Officers' Training Camp Association of Spanish-American War Veterans recently.

Major Franklin P. Kenney, chief army recruiting officer for the Chicago district, was a guest at a special dinner given in his honor by the Chicago Press Club. Major Kenney is an old newspaper man and the dinner was in recognition of his highly successful efforts in running up Chicago's army of enlistments.

Miss Mabelle Justice, a former well known Chicago newspaper writer and now a prominent scenario writer, has been chosen to write a Red Cross movie drama.

A. E. Gonzales, president of the Columbia State Company, publisher of the Columbia (S. C.) State, is undergoing a period of treatment at the International Health Resort in Chicago.

Jess Krueger of the Chicago American has been assigned to cover the story of the troop mobilization at Springfield following the state draft.

Charles Carpenter, reporter on the Chicago American, is back at work after a lay-off of several weeks due to a broken leg.

GENNRICH ACTING PUBLISHER.

E. B. Gennrich, secretary of the Milwaukee Free Press Corporation, is acting as publisher, pending the appointment of a successor to C. J. Zaiser, who resigned a short time ago.

Mr. Zaiser is now devoting his full time to the County Commissioner's Magazine, published in Milwaukee. It is a class paper, ten months old, in the interests of county officials all over the country.

STAFF CHANGES.

Ralph A. Hull has resigned from the staff of the Columbus (Ohio) State Journal to become a desk man for the Associated Press at Chicago.

Kenneth Toill, who has been on the staff for several years, has joined the local staff of the Columbus (Ohio) Citizen.

William Telfair Daugherty has become a member of the staff of the Columbus (Ohio) State Journal.

John W. Priest, local editor of the Jacksonville (Ill.) Courier, has become telegraph editor on the Springfield (Ill.) State Register.

Floyd Williamson, reporter on the Jacksonville (Ill.) Journal, has resigned to join the Springfield (Ill.) State Register.

F. E. Gilmore of Cincinnati has been appointed advertising manager of Kentucky Farming, Louisville.

Charles M. Kelley has resigned as editor of the Altoona (Pa.) Times to take up advertising work. He has been identified with the Times since his thirteenth year, serving in every capacity from apprentice to editor and general manager.

John A. Lancaster, of the Hudson Dispatch, Union Hill N. J., has resigned and William Hutches, of the Paterson (N. J.) Call, succeeds him.

Miss Helen McLaughlin, formerly of the Perth Amboy (N. J.) Evening News, has joined the staff of the Hudson Dispatch, Union Hill N. J., as social writer in Hoboken.

Jeremiah J. Toohey and Harry Carmody, two reporters on the Hoboken (N. J.) Observer, have resigned.

James A. Mills of the Associated Press force in New York has joined the American Red Cross Commission in Roumania as a first lieutenant.

H. L. Rennick of the Chicago Associated Press bureau has been sent to the Petrograd bureau in Russia.

William Smyth has succeeded

Harry Grayson as sporting editor of the Portland Oregonian, the latter having enlisted in the Marine Corps.

VACATION NOTES.

George French, who left for Canada with Mrs. French on July 30, has promised his fellow members of the New York Advertising Club to get a nice picture of himself holding a long string of bass, which he expects to acquire by conquest, purchase, loan or other legal method.

Jacob A. Meckstroth, state house man on the Columbus (Ohio) State Journal, is spending his three weeks' vacation at the home of his parents in Auglaize County, Ohio.

Thomas A. Daily of the Cleveland Plain Dealer sporting staff is spending his vacation at Columbus, his home.

Mac Tinee, movie editor of the Chicago Tribune, is enjoying a vacation far removed from the frenzied flickering of the films. Her work is being handled by Miss Mabel McElliot.

Justin Forest, assistant city editor of the Chicago American, is on his vacation.

L. M. Bell, managing editor of the Washington Herald, and Mrs. Bell are vacationing at Wildwood, N. J.

H. W. Brown, of the New York Times editorial staff, is at Avon-by-the-Sea.

H. T. Webster, cartoonist for the Associated Newspapers, and Mrs. Webster are in Nova Scotia.

Joseph Garretson, managing editor of the Cincinnati Times-Star, is spending two weeks in New York.

WEDDING BELLS.

P. L. Appar, New York special representative, has just returned from his honeymoon. He was married quietly about two weeks ago to Miss Elizabeth Cain and most of his friends found out about the happy event after it was all over.

Walter J. Reck, night editor of the Associated Press at Columbus, Ohio, and Miss Clara Myers of Detroit were married a few days ago.

Max H. C. Hirsch, superintendent of the German-American Publishing Company, at Columbus, Ohio, and Miss Lola D. Milisor of Marion, were married on July 30.

Jack Rosenbloom, advertising manager of the Boston Store, Columbus, Ohio, and Miss Lillian Cohen of Scranton, Pa., were married in Buffalo last week.

Mrs. Frances Cabanne Scovel, society editor of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch will be married soon to Captain William F. Saportas of the United States Field Artillery, according to an announcement just made in St. Louis. Mrs. Scovel is the widow of Sylvester Scovel, who was war correspondent for the New York World during the Spanish-American war.

INTRODUCING MR. SPENCER.

Ernest T. Spencer, who is now managing editor of the Ogden (Utah) Examiner, is a native of that city and has spent most of his fifteen years of newspaper work on Utah newspapers. He started on the Ogden Standard in 1902 and has occupied various positions on Ogden and Salt Lake City newspapers, shifting at times to the Mexican border when trouble threatened and spending two years on the staff of the Boise (Idaho) Statesman.

ASSOCIATION OF N.Y. CIRCULATORS

PROPOSED BY J. M. ANNENBERG OF SCHENECTADY—MEETING PLANNED THIS MONTH.

Circulation managers of New York State dailies will soon have an organization of their own, along the lines of the New England Association of Circulation Managers, the new Illinois association and others, if the plan just proposed by J. M. Annenberg, circulation manager of the Schenectady Union-Star, meets with general approval.

Mr. Annenberg was induced to propose his plan at the present time by what he saw at the recent meeting of the New England association, which he attended as a representative of the International Circulation Managers Association. He is chairman of the program committee of the latter organization. In proposing the union of the New York circulators, Mr. Annenberg says:

"On July 11 and 12, I had the pleasure of attending the meeting of the New England Circulation Managers' Association. This meeting was certainly a most interesting affair and afforded the members from New England an opportunity to talk over and discuss many subjects of vital interest to their publishers. All the members seemed to be intensely interested in their association and meetings and from the attendance it can be seen that they derive a great deal of benefit. Since returning home it has occurred to me that it would be a mighty fine idea for the circulation managers of the big state of New York to organize a New York State Circulation Managers Association.

"I believe that by having an association and meetings semi-annually or quarterly, same to take place in some central city or wherever the members think best, that it would be of inestimable value to every circulation manager. There are many vital subjects to interest state members.

"One very important subject that seems to be facing the newspapers throughout the country, 'The Child Labor Law and the Newsboy,' should be handled by a committee of circulation managers the same as it was handled very successfully in a big Western state to the advantage of the publications. There are many other problems coming up all the time and an association of circulation managers could be of great help to the state members and their publishers.

"I have had correspondence with James McKernan of the New York World, Willie Hoffman of New York Staats-Zeitung, M. D. Treble of the Buffalo Times, E. F. McIntyre of the Syracuse Herald and others. They are all enthusiastic about forming an association. We believe that if you and other circulation managers look favorably upon the proposition that that it would be a good idea to call a preliminary meeting the latter part of August to be held in Schenectady. At this meeting we could discuss ways and means of further promoting the organization."

GENERAL DISCUSSION WILL TAKE PLACE OF PAPERS
READ BY MEMBERS.

The annual meeting of the Texas Circulation Managers Association will be held on August 16 and 17 in Beaumont. President Herbert Peters, of the Galveston Tribune, informs THE FOURTH ESTATE that the circulation managers of all Southern newspapers will be invited to attend.

E. C. White, business manager of the Houston Chronicle and chairman of the program committee, has submitted the following program for the meeting, with a general discussion of these topics taking the place of papers by individual members:

1—Welfare of the newsboy and how can the circulation department improve it?

2—Relation of the circulation manager to the editorial department.

3—Should all agents, newsdealers, newsboys and carriers be charged the same rate for the papers? If not, why not?

4—Relative importance of comics, features, serials, editorials and news columns in making the paper salable.

5—Do you think the tendency is toward more dealer and less mail circulation, or more mail and less dealer? Which is best, in your opinion, and why?

6—Has the tendency of the publisher to reduce the number of pages and increase the advertising space in each issue had a tendency to reduce circulation or cause complaint from your readers? Do you think subscribers like a great big paper, say 18 to 24 pages each day, or do you think they prefer papers with less bulk?

7—The relation of the state organizations to the I.C.M.A.

8—The best way to handle soldier circulation.

9—The best way of filling positions of employees who are taken away for military service.

10—How to make up the increased expense to the publisher, if the postage rate is increased.

11—Is it practical to send agents' bundles via express, when transfer from one line to another, or from one express company to another, is necessary?

12—Liquor ads—do you publish two editions, one for wet and one for dry territory, or has your paper eliminated all liquor advertising?

13—Colored circulation—is it worth while from a circulation viewpoint—from advertisers' viewpoint?

14—Is it better to have the entire circulation under one man, or to have it divided in city and county, with a manager in charge of each.

15—Best plan to increase rate to agents without increasing price to subscribers.

16—What benefit does a circulation manager get from joining the T.C.M.A.?

The only journal outside of the United States published in the interest of newspaper men.

HOME-DELIVERED VS. STREET SALES.

FORMER PERMIT DEFINITE FIGURES IN DEMAND BY ADVERTISERS.

By C. M. SCHOFIELD.

Circulation Manager, Worcester
(Mass.) Gazette.

Years ago it made little or no difference to a publisher or advertiser whether a newspaper sold 100 copies on the street or 1,000 copies. Today an advertiser asks, before he places his advertising, how much carrier circulation a paper has, how much dealer and street sale circulation. He wants to know where every copy goes.

A publisher wants home delivered circulation for several reasons. A street sale paper is uncertain, as it depends on the weather, the number of people on the street, and boys on the street corners. Many times a boy is sick and does not show up on his corner. By the time another boy replaces him much valuable time has been lost.

The writer does not know how it works out on other papers, but in Worcester, if a boy is not on his corner we lose about 50 copies out of the 200 papers sold on that particular corner. The reason is that the new boy does not know who the regular customers are. Many times a person hurrying for a car would not buy a paper on the street if his particular boy did not run up to him and hand him his paper. This loss of 50 copies means that the net paid circulation is cut down one copy a day for fifty days.

That means that the circulation manager must get another subscriber at a cost of from 50 cents to a dollar in order to hold the average.

Inclement weather does not affect home delivered circulation. The route carrier rarely misses a subscriber even in severe storms, whereas street sales drop considerably when the weather is bad.

Then, too, street sales are affected by holidays. On Wednesdays and Saturdays, when stores and shops close at 12 o'clock, the advertiser does not get the benefit of the entire circulation of a newspaper. In Worcester the evening papers lose several hundred copies on account of the stores closing on Wednesdays at noontime, and there is a heavy drop on Saturdays because the stores keep open until 9 P. M. and the shops close at 12 o'clock noon. A newspaper with a large street sale circulation also loses on Jewish holidays, which come twice a year and last a week. All Jewish boys refuse to carry papers on those days, but the home delivered papers are not affected, as substitutes are provided to take the places of the Jewish carriers.

If the circulation of home delivered papers is dropping off, the publisher ferrets out the reason, and if the trouble is with the carrier service, it can soon be remedied, but with a street sale circulation no track can be kept of the subscribers.

WHERE "HOME-DELIVERED" WINS.

A paper bought on the street, in some cases, only means one reader. If that paper was delivered to the home it would arrive very much earlier and all the members of the family would have a chance to read it.

Maybe little Johnny is looking for a bicycle and happens to run across an ad "For Sale, a second-hand bicycle. Will sell cheap."

Mother also has time to read the department store advertising more thoroughly before the man of the house comes home. Mrs. Jones, who doesn't happen to take an evening paper drops over to Mrs. Smith's house, who is a regular subscriber. Mrs. Smith has just finished reading the evening paper and says to Mrs. Jones: "There is a great bargain in the paper tonight, six cakes of soap for 25 cents."

The next morning Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Smith make ready to go downtown to take advantage of this wonderful bargain. The advertiser not only gets the benefit of the family's reading but the neighbors' as well.

An advertiser does not ask, when he places his advertising, what the net paid circulation is on a certain day. He wants to know what the average is for the week, month, and year. With a large street sale circulation a paper cannot show as large net paid figures as a home delivered paper.

Taking everything into consideration, the writer believes that home delivered circulation is more desirable to an evening newspaper, to hold the advertising patronage, than street sales. And for this reason the Gazette devotes its entire energy to securing home delivered circulation.

CHANGES IN LAUREL.

E. E. Hoffman, city editor, is in charge of the news and editorial departments of the Laurel (Miss.) Leader, and L. L. Brasfield, business manager, is in charge of the revenue of the paper, pending the appointment of a publisher to succeed Mott Ayers, who recently died.

COUPONS AS A WAY TO ECONOMY.

THEY HAVE WORKED WELL IN THE PAST AND MAY DO SO NOW.

By EDWIN T. JONES

In view of the nation-wide wave of economy which has been forced upon the people, through the general and enormous increase in the price of all commodities, it might be an opportune effort—certainly one that should meet with universal public appreciation—to use as a circulation feature a "cash discount saving coupon."

Premiums are, as a rule, attractive, but every premium—at this critical period—has the disadvantage of an outlay, probably an unnecessary outlay, upon the part of the reader of the newspaper offering said premium. Unnecessary expenses are not advisable and should not be encouraged in the face of present conditions. The "cash discount saving coupon" is something that can be used by the circulation manager of a newspaper, I believe, to very good advantage.

It may not produce a spasmodic increase in circulation, undoubtedly it will not, but it will produce a strong feeling of appreciation upon the part of the readers which will do much towards the permanent upholding of circulation.

I tried out this "cash discount saving coupon" over twenty-five years ago, during my management of New York Morning Journal. The coupon I used with the Sunday Journal only.

While every line of commodity was at a normal condition in those days, the use of the "cash discount saving coupon" proved that a very fair percentage of the reading public appreciated, and took advantage of, the opportunity of saving from 5 to 10 per cent upon the amount of their cash purchases.

The saving value of the coupon can be made to cover every line of commodity—wearing, household furnishing, food products, etc., can all be brought under its saving influence.

I ran this "cash discount saving coupon" for about six months with the Sunday Journal and in addition to receiving many encouraging comments from readers I was able to trace a very healthy increase in the circulation.

My plan of operation was simple. I secured signed agreements with merchants and storekeepers in every section of New York—this agreement covering the period of the running of the coupon by the newspaper—in which they agreed to give to the cash purchaser of any commodity sold by them, presenting the "cash discount saving coupon" after the purchase of the article, a cash discount covering the discount stipulated in the coupon.

Make the discount 5 per cent or 10 per cent if possible—5 per cent will probably be all the average merchant or storekeeper will be willing to allow.

The coupon has a double benefit value—it saves upon every cash purchase—it has a strong tendency towards the curtailing of charge accounts.

This "cash discount saving coupon" if generally put into effect by circulation managers would be the means of saving for every family in the country at least the amount necessary to the purchase of their daily newspaper.

I might go even farther and say that every one cent daily newspaper could sell for two cents and through the daily running of this coupon, the reader could still save the amount of his weekly expenditure.

I recall distinctly receiving a very thankful letter from a young married couple in Connecticut. They came down to New York to buy their furniture for their new home and saved through the use of one of the Sunday Journal's cash discount saving coupons nearly forty dollars—a very gratifying compliment to the efficiency of the coupon.

I am only making a suggestion—merely giving an outline—the old thought has been renewed by the urgent appeal for practice of economy and the universal demand for a lower standard of all commodity prices.

NEWS NOTES OF CIRCULATORS.

E. C. Ninde, for a long time connected with the Hopewell (Va.) Daily Press, has resigned.

Keeve S. Steiner, formerly circulation manager of the Richmond (Va.) Evening Journal, has just assumed his duties as manager of the circulation department of the Richmond Times-Dispatch. Mr. Steiner is also the representative in Virginia for the New York American.

Victor Werne, formerly traveling representative of the Times-Dispatch, has been made assistant circulation manager.

The Doylestown, (Pa.) Intelligencer closed a successful circulation contest last week in which an automobile, Liberty Bonds and cash were awarded to a dozen or more successful candidates. The campaign was conducted by the National Circulation Company and was the third that company has held for the Intelligencer.

The Glens Falls (N. Y.) Daily Times is putting on an automobile contest under the direction of John C. Montgomery.

"Show Your Colors" is the password among many Americans, especially motorists, today and an idea which has just appeared in the premium market under the title of the "Patriot-Whirl" is expected to make a bit. It can be attached to the radiator cap or windshield of any car and revolves with the wind, like the old-fashioned pinwheel.

That explains the "whirl," and the "patriot" is explained by the fact that it is composed of three colored wheels, the outside one, eight inches in diameter, enameled in red. The center wheel, 5½ inches wide, is done in white, and the small wheel, 2½ inches wide, in blue. It also serves as a flag-holder, space being provided for three small standards behind the "whirl." It has been successfully introduced into several cities.

NEWSPAPER ADS GET INVESTORS.

This combination of publicity value, plus remunerative returns, accomplishes a two-fold result. It serves to hold the investor and at the same time is constantly creating new ones.

The appropriation for such a campaign should not be an arbitrary sum, subject to whim, caprice or uncertain business forecasts. Its very life, not to mention its cumulative force, depends upon the expenditure, however large or small, bearing a logical and at the same time, absolute relation to the gross results.

NEWSPAPER INFLUENCE.

"No American need blush for the moral tone of the newspaper that goes into his home."

Thus spoke Joseph F. Berry, bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church and himself a former editor, in a recent address.

It was a clear-cut, manly tribute to the wholesomeness of the average American newspaper, comments the St. Joseph Gazette.

For, of course, the bishop did not intend to convey the idea that every newspaper in the land was clean and inspirational. He gave praise to the press as a whole, and he added that the newspapers are growing ever better with the passing years.

"I attach tremendous significance," Bishop Berry declared, "to the remarkable change in the tone of the American newspaper. A sign of the times, too, is the rising quality of the American newspaper editorial. The change is a monument to the onward progress of American deals."

There is a thought in connection with the statements of Bishop Berry which may not occur to the average critic—friendly or otherwise—who is commenting upon the moral standing of the press, says the Gazette.

This is the fact that the newspapers of America have always stood for the best things.

As many newspapers have in the past failed because the ideals which they advanced were too wholesome to receive general public indorsement and support as have gone into bankruptcy from all combined causes.

Fewer publications are nowadays meeting this fate, however. May it not very properly be held that public sentiment is at last rising to the place occupied so long by the press?

If this be admitted, what vast credit must be given journalism for the development of morals thus occurring!

The plant of the Olivet (S. D.) Leader, a local weekly newspaper, will be moved to some other town in the same territory.

NEWS OF THE AD AGENCIES.

The Commonwealth Advertising Company of Pennsylvania has been chartered in Delaware to do a general advertising business, with a capital of $1,250,000. Its local Wilmington (Del.) incorporators are M. L. Rogers, T. A. Irwin and Harry W. Davis.

The same men are also named in the papers of the Commonwealth Advertising Company of New Jersey, which is incorporated for $750,000.

Arthur T. Wilson, formerly advertising and sales manager of a Toledo motor car company, has joined the staff of Arthur M. Crumrine, advertising agent, Columbus. Mr. Wilson was formerly a newspaper man, but recently has been associated with Middle Western advertising agencies.

R. H. Barrett of Chicago has joined the art staff of the Crumrine office.

C. E. Walberg of the W. H. Rankin Advertising Company, Chicago, has just completed a six week's business tour of the East in the interest of one of the principal Rankin clients, the B. F. Goodrich Company of Akron.

The executive committee of the Western Advertising Agents' Association has nominated the following ticket: Governor, Paul Faust; first vice-governor, J. Howard Start; second vice-governor, Charles H. Green; secretary-treasurer, James O'Shaughnessy.

Chester M. Cogswell has been added to the staff of the Coolidge Advertising Service, Des Moines. He was formerly with the Des Moines Capital and Register and Leader.

The Gardiner Agency has been established in Los Angeles by H. W. L. Gardiner, formerly vice-president of the Curtis-Newhall Agency. R. L. Corbaley is in charge of the Gardiner Agency's art department.

An advertising agency and service bureau has been opened in Elgin, Ill., by Fred R. Lufkin, formerly with Walter B. Snow & Staff, Boston.

M. D. Sackheim has been elected secretary and a director of the Ruthrauc & Ryan Agency, New York, of which he is also account manager.

The Maritime Advertising Agency, Ltd., has been incorporated with headquarters in Rotherham, N. B. The capital stock is $10,000, and the directors are H. V. MacKinnon, A. E. McGinley and Stanley DeW. Granville, all of St. John.

CHANGES IN DIRECTORY OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The first of August brought several changes that should be made in "THE FOURTH ESTATE Directory of Daily Newspapers having Representatives in the National Advertising Field," which was printed last week. Change:

Richmond Virginian (national representation)—from Putman & Randall, New York, and A. Roy Keator, Chicago, to Cone, Lorenzen & Woodman, of New York, Chicago, Detroit, Atlanta and Kansas City.

Waterloo (Ia.) Times-Tribune (national representation)—from the G. Logan Payne Company to M. C. Watson, Inc., New York, and A. W. Allen, Chicago.

The Decatur (Ill.) Review has appointed Cone, Lorenzen & Woodman, of New York, Chicago, Detroit, Atlanta and Kansas City, to represent it in the national advertising field. Heretofore the Review has had no representatives.

Incidentally, a few corrections need to be made.

The North Adams (Mass.) Herald, which was omitted from the list, is represented by W. F. Long & Co., New York and Chicago.

The Meridian (Miss.) Dispatch is represented in the East and the West by the John M. Branham Company, instead of by the Beckwith Agency in the East.

The Meridian (Miss.) Star is represented in the East and West by the Beckwith Agency, instead of in the East by the John M. Branham Company.

Readers of THE FOURTH ESTATE will be able to keep their Directory revised by watching these columns each week for changes in representation and making them at once in their list.

LONG TO FLY, SELLS INTEREST TO A. R. LOWE.

A. R. Lowe has purchased an interest in and been elected vice-president of the W. F. Long Company, Inc., New York and Chicago, representing Canadian newspapers.

Mr. Lowe has had long experience as representative of Canadian publications and is well known to the advertising agencies and advertisers interested in developing Canadian trade. He is thoroughly familiar with Canada and its business interests.

W. F. Long, president of the company, has joined the Royal Flying Corps of Canada and will soon leave to assume his duties with that branch of the service.

MISSOURI WRITERS ACTIVE.

Missouri Writers Guild will meet during Missouri Journalism Week at Columbia, Mo., next year, and award prizes for the best short story, the best poem and the best non-fiction article written by Missourians and published during the year February 1, 1917 to February 1, 1918.

The guild will hold its annual outing at Elk Springs, Mo., September 22 to 29 and expects to entertain several Missourians who have achieved fame along literary lines.

VALUABLE TO ADVERTISERS.

EDITOR THE FOURTH ESTATE.

SIR: I want to congratulate you heartily on the annual review section of THE FOURTH ESTATE. I believe records of this sort are very valuable to the advertising business. This is merely another evidence of the prominent place THE FOURTH ESTATE occupies in its field. CARL M. GREEN, President, Carl M. Green Company, Detroit.

Charles J. Fenske has leased the Noonan (N. D.) Miner.

AD FOLKS' NEWS.

Lectures on business will be given this fall under the auspices of the Milwaukee Advertising Club for the benefit of all business men in the city, according to F. G. Effinger, its new president. The meetings will be open to the public and an admission fee will be charged, the latter phase being a departure from the club's previous course.

President Effinger also states that an advertising show will again be put on by the club, for the purpose of educating the advertising man and advertiser, and converting the non-advertisers.

Many special programs will also be put on during the year to help finance a special train that the club intends to charter to carry the Wisconsin delegates to the San Francisco convention of the A.A.C.W. next year.

Besides Mr. Effinger, the officers are:

Vice-president, Norman L. MacLean; secretary, A. W. Hahn; treasurer, James Allman; directors, A. B. Cargil, chairman; S. Lacy Crolius, R. O. Jasperson, L. McMeekin and H. P. Olsen.

Paul Gifford has been made advertising manager of the Hamilton Watch Company, Lancaster, Pa., succeeding Robert E. Miller, who has become secretary of the Hamilton Corporation, New York.

Charles K. Woodbridge, formerly with the Loose-Wiles Biscuit Company, is now in charge of sales and advertising for the Kellogg Products Company, Inc., of Buffalo, N. Y., making "Nut-Margarine," a coconut-oil substitute for butter. His present headquarters are in the Hotel Statler, Buffalo.

J. J. Flynn, formerly with the Conde Nast publications and with several advertising agencies, has become associated with the publicity department of the Society for Electrical Development, New York.

Lewellyn E. Pratt, chairman of the New York Advertising Club educational committee, has appointed the following members of that committee: Frank L. Blanchard, George B. Hotchkiss, C. R. Lippmann, Oscar M. Miller, and Carl B. Lichtenstein.

The honor of opening the new $250,000 Hotel Aurora in Aurora, Ill., fell to the Admen's Club of that city, which held a banquet on the date of its regular July meeting. Speeches were made by John H. Clayton of the Clayton Service Company, Chicago; Colonel J. K. Groom, manager of national advertising for the Aurora Beacon-News, and E. P. Hoerr of the Aurora Millwork Company. President H. M. Edmund, business promoter of the Western United Gas & Electric Company, presided.

The first match of the golf tournament between the Poor Richard Club of Philadelphia and the New York Advertising Club at Philadelphia last week ended in a tie, the Rodman Wanmaker trophy remaining for the present in the hands of the Philadelphia contingent.

The Ellis Gimbel Cup for the best net score was won by Jack Frazier of Philadelphia, with a 74 while the Bellevue-Stratford Cup, for the low gross score was captured by W. Roy Barnhill, the New York captain, with a 78.

Foster M. M. Reeder of the Poor Richard team won the golf club presented by M. F. Hanson of the Philadelphia Record for the second best net score. Mr. Reeder's victory grew out of a four cornered tie between himself, Hal Reed of New York and C. H. Bowden and Rowe Stewart of the Poor Richards, the flip of a coin deciding the draw.

The putter for the smallest number of putts was won by Captain Barnhill. Hal Reed, C. H. Bowden and Rowe Stewart divided a dozen golf balls.

The next match will be played in New York on either the Siwanoy or Fox Hills courses about the middle of this month.

G. Lynn Sumner, advertising manager of the International Correspondence Schools, Scranton, has been elected vice-president of the Woman's

G. LYNN SUMNER, Institute of Domestic Arts and Sciences, which is associated with the

I. C. S. and has headquarters in New York City. Mr. Summer will be in charge of sales and advertising and will continue to handle the I. C. S. advertising, dividing his time between Scranton and New York.

Honors (and work) are closely following the path of W. Frank McClure the well known religious advertising man of Chicago. He has been appointed chairman of publicity for the Sunday Evening Club, having direction over twenty advertising and publicity men. He has already appointed to his committee S. DeWitt Clough, G. W. Robnett, Arnold Joerns and Homer J. Buckley.

Mr. McClure is carrying a rosewood cane, silver mounted and engraved, as a token of esteem from his advertising class, which suspended for the summer a short time ago.

Officers for the coming year were installed by the Kansas City Advertising Club at a luncheon last week. They are: President, M. M. Blackman; vice-president, H. S. Frazer; treasurer, George Buecking; secretary, J. H. Craig. L. E. Holland was reappointed chairman of the advertisers' protective bureau.

Henry P. Williams, advertising manager for Hart, Schaffner & Marx, last week addressed the Western Efficiency Society at the Auditorium Hotel in Chicago. In discussing his subject: "Advertising: Its Effect on the New Business Era Resulting from the War," Mr. Williams paid his respects to Congress, referring to some of the members as "cheap politicians elevated to power by an inexplicable triumph of mediocrity."

The advertising men of Chicago, working through the Chicago Advertising Association, are giving a picnic today at Comisky Park for the benefit of the "Off-the-Street Club." One of the interesting features of the picnic will be a bitter ball game between a team representing the advertising agencies and a team from the publishers' representatives.

The second ticket for the officers' election of the Chicago Advertising Association has just been placed in the field. It includes: President, Arnold Joerns; first vice-president, James A. Young; second vice-president, Henry Schott; secretary, Wallace F. Brown; treasurer, Robert J. Virtue.

It is anticipated that at least one more ticket will be placed in the field before the date of election, which will be early in September. A recent change in the by-laws of the association fixes May as the month of elections, following the decision of the present campaign.

Norman H. Chase is the new assistant advertising manager of the Allen Motor Company, Fostoria, Ohio, succeeding T. L. Young, who has gone with the service department of the Willys-Overland Company, Toledo. Mr. Chase was formerly on the editorial staffs of Detroit and Toledo newspapers; with the advertising department of the Conklin Fountain Pen Company, Toledo; and sales manager of the Walter S. Miller Engraving Company, Toledo.

William A. Hart has become assistant advertising manager of the Detroit Steel Products Company. Until recently he was Western advertising manager of the Burroughs Adding Machine Company, with headquarters in San Francisco.

MEDIUMS IN BANK ADVERTISING.

DAILY, WEEKLY AND FOREIGN NEWSPAPERS PRODUCE BEST RESULTS.

By JOHN RING

Advertising Manager, Mercantile National Bank, St. Louis.

Before considering the comparative value of mediums, it is proper to analyze just what is meant by mediums. In a broad way, I would consider mediums as being ways to advertise and the following as under this heading:

Daily papers—English and Foreign.
Local weekly publications.
Weekly foreign papers (Italian, Bohemian, Yiddish, Greek & Polish).
Religious weeklies.
Financial publications.
Publications of national circulation.
Billboards—painted and posted.
Street car signs.
Electric signs.
Personal letters.
Booklets, circulars, folders, enclosure cards.

Mailing lists.
Blotters.
Pay envelopes.
Theatre programs.
There might be added also:
Personal solicitors.
Savings banks.
Novelties.

The value of mediums depends, to a large degree, on the product advertised. There would be many things that a daily paper would not perhaps be the best medium for, while on the other hand magazines might be the ideal mode of reaching consumers for certain products.

The proper use of mediums cannot be boiled down to any fixed rules. It is not possible to figure out an ideal campaign for all banks. What is suitable for a bank in Michigan might not be suitable for a bank in Texas. What is suitable for a large bank is not suitable for a small bank. The reasons for this are very evident.

The large bank, for example, might be in a community where every possible form of medium would be available. The small bank, on the other hand, might be in a community that would have only one daily newspaper or possibly a newspaper published only once a week. The fixing of rules, therefore, in the use of mediums is absolutely a piece of folly.

DAILY PAPERS—ENGLISH AND FOREIGN.

People have been educated to look in the newspapers for what they wish to buy. Reading a daily paper has become a daily habit. They may look in a magazine once or twice a month, but they read at least one paper every day. As a medium to reach all people—of every kind, creed or condition—there is none equal to the daily papers. How else can you so readily reach thousands of people and within a few hours' time.

For banking institutions, however, I believe that the daily paper alone is not calculated to produce the most effective results. Other forms of advertising should be used in conjunction with newspaper advertising. I should say that this rule is imperative. The cultivation of selected lists, also the solicitation of business from your present patrons on behalf of departments with whom do not at present do business, are two typical examples to be used as adjuncts to newspaper advertising.

LOCAL WEEKLY PUBLICATIONS.

Nearly every community has such papers, and while their rates as a rule are higher per thousand of circulation than a daily paper, their pages are read a little more closely and they have, to some degree, a more intimate following.

For the savings department especially the foreign papers have undoubted value. If you seek depositors among the foreign population, the use of the Italian, Bohemian, Yiddish, Greek and Polish papers is bound to influence foreigners into coming to your institution to do business. The advertising rates of most foreign papers are very low, and you can afford to use these publications at least for the issue around the first and fifteenth of the month—that is around pay-days.

NATIONAL CIRCULATION.

Under these might be classed the magazines of every description. I am not a believer that a publication like the Saturday Evening Post, for example, is a good one to use for financial advertising. You pay for an enormous amount of circulation, that can not be considered as investment prospects. If a banking institution can do a savings business in a national way, such a publication should prove productive of results—the savings being a $1 and up proposition.

I believe class publications—that is, those with a smaller circulation and composed of people who have a greater buying power—are far the best for investment offerings.

I expect to be told immediately that such concerns as Packard Motor Car people use the Saturday Evening Post—and why? The answer is, of course that they pay a certain amount for what I might call prestige publicity. They do not and cannot expect very great results in proportion to the money they spend in this publication. Many national advertisers use mediums of national circulation purely to create a general sentiment in favor of their product among people who are not possible buyers. They talk and think favorably of their products and some day may be in position to buy it.

OTHER MEDIUMS OF ADVERTISING.

To all of the above might be added under mediums, personal solicitors, savings banks, and novelties. Taking them in turn, I would say that personal solicitors are a desirable feature of getting business, if everything can be worked out satisfactorily. Usually, however, the man paid for a brief campaign is a dangerous proposition for a bank to consider unless you are absolutely sure of the people with whom you are dealing. A representative might presume in many ways that would embarrass the officials of the bank and any good secured in other directions would be offset by some unfortunate occurrence resulting from a poor representative. The best solicitor is, of course, a man in your own employ who is a capable salesman. Such a man should know how to present his story and to handle any situation that might arise. These men cannot be gotten readily, nor can they be trained quickly. A banking institution's best salesmen are their tellers and others coming in contact with the public. How few banks realize this.

SAVINGS BANKS AND NOVELTIES.

The use of savings banks is one that many institutions are divided upon. I believe in the main, however, that the bulk of banks have come to regard savings banks as more of a hindrance in the conduct of their business than they are a help in the getting of deposits. Novelties may have their value in certain fields, though the trust company with which I am identified has never looked upon them as essential elements in an advertising campaign.

Summed up, I think the value of mediums is a good deal like clothes. There are certain kinds of clothes that are desirable for certain climates and they won't do at all in others. It is not possible, therefore, to have any fixed rules as regards mediums or other value, as each case should be analyzed separately.

lishing industry, the advice of the experts to the newspaper owner who has heretofore bought in lots from a ton up to a carload is to henceforth buy in carload lots to his own account, providing such additional storage facilities as may be required are available or else to pool or lump his paper purchases with those of other publishers in the same town or territory so that, even though buying no more paper at a time than under the old plan he will have the benefit of carload quotations and tariffs and will at the same time help the railroads in their present dilemma.

"The effect of the storage 'habit' upon the attitude of manufacturers of paper, supposing that any considerable number of newspaper owners acquire this habit, must also receive attention at the hands of any student of newspaper conditions who attempts to peer into the future.

"The standard contract for the sale of news print does not contain a 'storage clause'—so the purchaser must provide his own storage, and there is no reason to predict a change in this status.

"At the same time, the very conditions that today impel many a publisher, who gave it very little thought heretofore, to ponder over the question of storage, also tend to counsel the storage of liberal manufacturers' stocks in the cities.

freight cars for the longer hauls.

"Of course, such an expedient could have little or no application with respect to news print shipments from the mills, but if the United States should adopt the rule now in force in certain European countries calling for motor transport for all haulage under 40 miles, the arrangement might effect a formidable aggregate of small lots of paper sent out from the warehouses of jobbers and sales agents.

"Just consider, for example, the possible scope of such operations as applied to the paper supply for the small dailies and weeklies within a radius of 40 miles of Pittsburgh, Buffalo, Cleveland or Detroit.

"All of which explains why it is yet an open question whether the news print jobber will have greater or less power under this new deal."

FOSTER'S VIEWS ON SECOND CLASS READ TO CONGRESS.

A letter by Marcellus E. Foster, president and editor of the Houston (Tex.) Chronicle, was read before the House of Representatives the other day by Representative Garrett of Texas, expressing Mr. Foster's views in favor of zone second class postage. It was introduced by Mr. Garrett as "a very patriotic letter, which I think will do good if read in the Record and considered by the solons at the other end of the capitol while they are considering the revenue bill."

Mr. Foster's letter follows:

"I thought Congress had acted wisely and well when it adopted in its War Revenue Bill the section which provided for a graduated postal rate, effective July 1.
What is known as the zone system of postal rates has always impressed me as being the only sensible way of handling newspaper postage. It is certainly not good business to charge the same price for sending a paper from Houston to Galveston by mail as from Houston to New York.

"The graduated zone system is the proper system, and I can't see how any one could find anything wrong with it.
Quite naturally it may hurt some of the magazines that are now given a postal rate that is practically a subsidy, but from the standpoint of fairness and justice, it is the proper system, and would undoubtedly bring the Government much additional revenue.

"If it is true, as claimed, that second class mail is handled by the postal department at a loss of close to $90,000, annually, then there is all the more reason why a zone system should be established. In my opinion it should be maintained not only during the war period, but for all time to come.

"Increased postal rates are really not a tax in the proposed section 1801; it is simply a charge for service, and in my opinion a most proper charge. No other institution on earth would carry big bundles of newspapers or magazines

5,000 miles at the same price as for 50 miles. Let us have the zone system, in preference to a tax on gross business in any department or special extra taxes on our net incomes.

"While it may be true the Government has carried some newspaper and magazine mail at a loss, this, in my opinion, has been due to the lack of a business system rather than to any other cause.
Even now the express companies will frequently carry newspapers within a certain zone at a considerably lower price than the United States Government under its all inclusive blanket system of second-class postal rates.

"I do not think publishers want anything that could be called a subsidy. We want freedom of expression and the right to conduct our business in accordance with Constitutional guarantees. We believe that a free press is absolutely essential to this great republic, and that it is to the interest of the Government to see that the newspapers are given the widest circulation possible.

"The United States Government could make little or no progress in its present fight for the world's freedom without the aid of the press of the country.

"We have given this aid freely and without hope of recompense. In the matter of the Liberty Loan we came to the rescue of the Government, and that loan could not have been made popular, nor could it have been oversubscribed, or even subscribed, had it not been for the fact that the newspapers gave it their editorial endorsement and gave column after column and page after page of space for impressing the necessity and value of the Liberty Bonds.

"In the matter of registration we came to the aid of the Government, and in the matter of recruits our columns have been thrown open for the use of the War Department in all its branches day after day and week after week.

"The newspapers of the United States are doing all this without being paid one cent for advertising by our Government, which is in strong contrast to the methods used in England and Canada, where many hundreds of thousands of dollars was spent for newspaper advertising, both in securing recruits and in making bond issues popular.

"Please bear in mind that every newspaper worthy of the name is willing and anxious to do its part in this crisis. If the Government wishes to take all our profits, I am entirely willing to submit.
I do not want certain industries penalized, however, while others are allowed to go free.

"Our present fight for world-wide freedom should make every man and every industry willing to furnish the Government all the aid possible.

"I am sure the newspapers are willing to give their columns freely and to give a good portion of their profits or all of their profits.

"I know the Houston Chronicle is today subject to the command of Woodrow Wilson. I am for him, and our paper and our business is offered to him and this Government freely and fully."

DAWE'S BIG ANALYTICAL PRO- BLEM.

Grosvenor Dawe, who used to be editor of the Nation's Business, in Washington and since 1914 has been engaged in lecturing and analytical work, is now busy on a big and unusual proposition in Rochester, Ind.

Having an intimate acquaintance with nearly 300 cities of the United States, and being a student of public affairs, Mr. Dawe became convinced long ago that the deepest social question of the United States was the gradual loss of rural power through unsocial influences and the drainage of the younger element from the country to the city.

When he went to Rochester in April of this year, to organize a commercial body for the people there, he saw at once that he was in a country typical of the conditions which he considered so harmful and he has therefore made Rochester his future headquarters for analytical work, incidentally applying all the organized knowledge to the creation of a different social spirit in the county, which like 73 other counties of Indiana, showed a declining rural population in the last census.

Mr. Dawe expects that if he can solve the rural problem in Rochester the answer will be found for 1000 other counties of the United States.
"You will therefore understand," he said to THE FOURTH ESTATE, "the enthusiasm with which I am attempting the stimulation of this entire county."

Mrs. Martin Egan arrived in Tokio recently, en route to the Philippines, Australia and India, which she will tour for the Saturday Evening Post. She writes as Eleanor Franklin Egan. She was formerly with the American Red Cross in Serbia. Martin Egan, former Associated Press correspondent in Tokio and former editor of the Manila Times, recently gave up his position with J. P. Samuel S. McClure, who is preparing a book on the foreign relations of Japan, is spending July and August in Peking and will return to Tokio the first week in September. Through numerous lectures he is coming into contact with Japanese and Chinese of all the social and intellectual strata.

Gregory Mason formerly of the Outlook staff, arrived in Tokio just in time to take part in the Americans' patriotic and exotic celebrations of the Fourth of July. His first two editorials in the Japan Advertiser, of which he has become managing editor, won him instant recognition from the foreign community of Japan, if congratulations telephoned to the Advertiser office are a safe indication. His subjects were "Russia Reviving?" and "Shut the Back Door," on the topic of limiting the foodstuffs to Scandinavia. Mrs. Mason was unable to get a ticket on the same train out of Petrograd and will join her husband in September.

RUSSIAN CENSOR'S ORDERS STIFFEN.

New orders issued by the Russian Provisional Government extend the scope of newspaper censorship.

Publication in any periodical or any printed matter of any information with relation to the operations of the Russian armies or fleets, or news of any measure of a military character, the divulging of which might prove harmful to the interests of the Russians or allied armies or fleets, without a preliminary examination by the military censorship, is prohibited. Any one infringing the order is liable to sixteen months' imprisonment and a fine of 10,000 rubles.

SPANISH CENSORSHIP ENDS.

The Spanish Minister of the Interior on July 29 called the editors of the principal newspapers together and announced the abolition of all censorship henceforth, except such as may be exercised by the editors themselves.

The minister said the government was confident that the publications issued by Spaniards would realize that the internal situation in Spain was an extremely delicate one. He declared, however, that not the articles alone would be suppressed if editors did not take this situation into consideration.

UNDELIVERED SECOND CLASS MAIL PUT TO GOOD USE.

In response to the plea of American troopers for papers and magazines from home Postmaster General Burleson has officially enlisted the aid of every post office in the country. Soldiers in training at the various cantonment camps also will be supplied by the postmasters.

In the big post offices of the country, said the Postmaster General, there continually accumulates a large quantity of non-deliverable and non-returnable periodical literature—monthly magazines and weekly periodicals of high character.

Ordinarily it is destroyed, but henceforth it will be transmitted free of charge to the boys behind the firing line.

Postmasters in many of the larger cities have been directed to place these undelivered magazines and periodicals in packages and transmit them to an American port which has been designated. From there they will go directly to the expeditionary forces, where arrangements have been made for their distribution.

In addition postmasters in other offices have been instructed to transmit their undeliverable magazines to certain centrally located cities generally not far from cantonment sites.

Reading matter will be distributed from these points to soldiers in the making.

In this manner the department up the spirit and the morale of the troops while they are actively engaged in military duties as well as to improve their minds.

This arrangement is in addition to the plan heretofore announced by Mr.
Burleson of permitting individuals to send reading matter to soldiers in camp and at the front simply by placing a one-cent stamp upon a magazine or periodical without name or address.

Newspapers and magazines bearing 1-cent stamps hereafter may be posted, unwrapped and unaddressed no matter what their weight, by persons other than publishers, and will be forwarded by postal authorities to American soldiers and sailors in Europe.

In announcing plans for gathering reading matter conveying home news and fiction to the boys abroad, Postmaster-General Burleson suggests that publishers print the following in the upper right-hand corner of their front covers:

"Notice to the reader. When you have finished reading this publication, place a 1-cent stamp on this notice, hand same to any postal employe and it will be placed in the hands of our soldiers and sailors at the front.

PRES. WILSON COMPLIMENTS THE N. Y. WORLD.

Ralph Pulitzer, publisher of the New York World, has received a letter from President Wilson in which he says:

"I have heard with the greatest pleasure and admiration of the action of the World in regard to the men in the World office and their service in the war. I think perhaps you cannot know what genuine and deep satisfaction such evidence of patriotism excite in me.

"May I not send you and the men this line of warm appreciation?"

The service referred to by President Wilson in the above letter includes fifty-one men from the editorial, reporting, advertising, publication and mechanical departments of the World who have entered one branch or another of the national forces, and who are now in the service. These men, well-equipped for what they have to do, range from colonel to private in the army, and from lieutenant to apprentice seamen in the Navy.

To enable the spirit of loyalty and desire for service among the staff of the World to find due expression, Mr. Pulitzer, soon after the entry of the United States into the war, announced to the staff of the World that all who were called into service in the national guard, the naval militia, or the Army or Navy reserves, or who volunteered for service in these organizations would have the difference between their Federal pay and their World salaries made up to them by the World, for the duration of the war, in every case where the Federal pay was less than the World salary.

Mr. Pulitzer himself has joined the Naval Reserves as lieutenant on board a "submarine chaser" in a section patrol of the Atlantic Coast. His "chaser," which was built at his order especially for this form of ser-

GERMAN PAPER THAT WOULD NOT ATTACK WILSON.

Because the Frankfurter (Germany) Zeitung refused to join in the general chorus of abuse of President Wilson that paper was accused by Professor Behrendsen and the Pan-German press, particularly the Deutsche Zeitung, of being influenced by an American holding a number of its shares. By this is probably meant the son of one of the former proprietors called Simeon, who is an American, living in Buffalo, and who spent the winter before the war in Germany.

The Frankfurter Zeitung refused to publish a letter from Professor Behrendsen charging Wilson with being financially interested through his son-in-law's connection with the Morgan group. The professor asserts that Germany's victory would mean Wilson's and Morgan's ruin, and that financial interests were Wilson's main reason for his anti-German attitude.

The Frankfurter Zeitung, in refusing to publish the article, said it was unable to publish such accusations without proof or evidence.

NEW GEORGIA OFFICERS.

The officers of the Georgia Weekly Press Association elected last week in Thomasville are: President, Paul Harber, Commerce Observer; first vice-president, J. Kelley Simmons, Telfair Enterprise; second vice-president, W. G. Sutlive, Savannah Press; corresponding secretary, H. M. Stanley, Dublin Courier-Herald; recording secretary, C. E. Beems, Butler Herald; treasurer, J. J. Howell, Cuthbert Leader.

A committee was appointed to protest before the legislature against any change in law regulating the price of advertising. The committee consists of Frank Mangum, chairman; Kelley Simmons, Volney Williams, Trox Bankston, J. T. Burkhalter and J. D. Durden.

The next place of meeting was left to the executive committee.

ON CANADA'S FIGHTING LINE.

Quartermaster-Sergeant James Elsworth, formerly on the staff of the Regina (Sask.) Leader, has been decorated for conspicuous gallantry.

Lieutenant J. J. Walters, formerly night city editor of the London (Ont.) Advertiser, was recently killed at the front by a shell.

James Annand, a former member of the Toronto Star staff, has been promoted to captain after two years as a lieutenant.

Lieutenant William Wallace, who was a member of the Toronto Star editorial staff before enlisting, has arrived in Toronto after being "gassed" by the Germans at Vimy Ridge. He won the Military Cross in the early battles on the ridge.

Major Charles Bresford Topp, formerly with the Toronto Mail & Empire, has been mentioned in dispatches for gallantry under fire. He originally intended to be a war correspondent for his paper, but when England refused him permission to go to the front, he applied for a commission, received it and later won his promotion to major on the field.

Lieutenant Gregory Clarke, a former Toronto Star reporter, has been awarded the Military Cross for gallantry in action.

John A. McGrath, formerly of the St. John's (N. F.) Evening Herald staff, has been commissioned in the Eleventh Division of the Dublin Fusiliers. He has been at the front since 1914.

NEW EMPIRE STATE UNION.

Publishers of weeklies in Eastern New York formed a new association last week, under the title of the Hudson Valley Weekly Press Association, and elected the following officers:

President, Ernest L. Haight, Highland Post and Ravenna News-Herald; vice-president, Jacob H. Strong, Rhinebeck Gazette; secretary, Fletcher Quick, Marlborough Record; treasurer, L. G. Goodnaugh, Cornwall Press.

AMEN CORNER ELECTION.

Congressman Thomas F. Smith is the new president of the Amen Corner, the old New York political reporters' association. The other officers chosen are: James J. Montague, vice-president; Walter Lauder, secretary; and William Leary, treasurer.

It was decided to hold the annual dinner for 1917 at the Waldorf-Astoria on December 18.

CYLCONES ARE NO OBSTACLES.

A storm of cyclonic violence swept the business district of La Porte, Ind., on July 23, partially wrecking the electric light plant of the La Porte Gas & Electric Company, which furnished electric power and light in the city.

The storm occurred at 2.15 p. m., close to the press time of the La Porte Herald and the La Porte Argus. While other industries in the city depending upon electric power had to shut down the two papers mentioned got out their editions.

The La Porte Herald induced the Advance-Rumely Thresher Company, whose big plant is in the city, to hook up a farm tractor with the large Goss press, the tractor being connected with the press in the basement by a belt from the street.

The La Porte Argus press was similarly operated with a so-called "Helping Henry" apparatus attached to the rear of a Ford automobile.

The Herald printed its regular eight-page edition and the Argus a smaller edition. Both papers were no more than two hours late.

ITALIAN DAILY QUILTS.

The high cost of print paper and the loss of subscribers through enlistments in the Italian army last week caused the suspension of Il Giornale di Chicago, a well known Italian daily.

A SERIOUS TALK FOR THE RETAIL ADVERTISER.

Here's a heart to heart talk for retail advertisers, not only for those who read THE FOURTH ESTATE, but one that it would be well for newspaper publishers generally to give to local merchants who are working along the wrong lines in advertising.

The matter is extracted from an address by H. H. Hershey, advertising manager of the Peruna Company, before a recent meeting of the Columbus (O.) Advertising Club, which has drawn commendation from those who heard it. The advice is:

Of the many branches of advertising, there are less educational efforts made on the part of the merchant who spends his money than in any other line of advertising. The experience of any solicitor of advertising among the merchants would make a very profitable book for all merchants, as they would see therein the representation as to what they think of advertising and how well prepared they are to make an investment along these lines.

The ordinary merchant anticipates that by the mere placing of an advertisement in the paper, he is able to build up a better and bigger business.
If results do not come in as he anticipated, he will condemn the solicitor who persuaded him to advertise and will say that advertising in that paper which carried his advertising is a waste of money.

Such a merchant is forgetful of the fact that he probably did not write his own advertisement, and the distinctive line of sales talk that he uses every day over the counter is totally absent in his advertisement. A merchant cannot expect to make a success at advertising by simply filling up the space and signing his name. He must use as much care in the selection of copy as he does in the purchase of his wares.

If he is careless in his purchases, he naturally would be considered careless in his advertising. But if he is conservative and careful in his purchases, it seems strange indeed that he should be careless in the expenditure of money that he uses for his advertising.

"Why should I be conservative in my statements?"

"Why not do as the other fellow does?"

"Why not continue my advertising as I have in the past?"

"Why do I prefer to revise my copy?"

"Why don't I conduct my business as my father has done?"

"Why forget the parental teaching and use my own methods?"

Those and a host of other questions are continually asked by many advertisers.

In other words they are afraid to depart from their past standards, because they think they will lose some business, since they have not tried the new way they do not know anything about it and are afraid to change.
They do not anticipate that it would be much better.

Perhaps they see some merchant playing the old method whose business becomes less every day. This should be an eye-opener to them. It should be convincing that old methods don't work.

Everything else has been changing,
why not merchants' advertising?

The merchant would not think of putting in stock that was used several years back when other newer things were on the market. If some one should ask him to do this he would think that person crazy. Yet, at the same time he is carrying his advertising on in the same old way. He has been progressive in every department of his business except advertising.
Really it does seem strange, but it is the fact.

Just take up the newspapers; glance over the advertisements; they tell the story of the merchant who is abreast of the times, and of the one who is so far in the rear that field glasses would be needed to locate him.

When you buy goods, you take all things into consideration. You weigh the price and what you expect to get for it and calculate how much the public will stand.

Why should not you use the same care in advertising?

It is your personal treatment of customers that builds up business. Advertising helps you to build this up much more quickly. If you co-ordinate the two in a systematic way, the result will be satisfactory, no doubt.
But if you have one to offset the other, there may be neutral results without any profit.

You are in your business for the money that you can make out of it.
In the same way you will consider advertising. If you don't think that you can make money out of advertising, better not try "the game," because the chances may work contrary to your desires.

Much more can be said on this subject, but the same would bring this down to one thing generally, namely, know your merchandise as well as copy that you expect to sell your goods.

Know your people whom you expect to reach just as well as you know your merchandise.

committee, Mr. McIntyre and members of the A.N.P.A. and their attorneys.

It is understood that the paper committee will be very glad to hear from any section of the country where paper is needed, even if it may be the smallest publisher of a local weekly paper. He desires all the information he can secure to enable him to most satisfactorily meet the conditions as they arise in the distribution of this tonnage where it will do the most good.

ONLY FOR THOSE IN ACUTE NEED.

Following is the official statement of the A.N.P.A. paper committee:

"The paper committee has closed a contract with the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company, Ltd., Grand Falls, Newfoundland, for its output of news print paper and sulphite pulp, and with the Albert E. Reed (Newfoundland) Company, Ltd., for its entire output of groundwood pulp, to be distributed in the American market under the most favorable conditions.

"This contract was made possible by the guarantees of a number of publishers in behalf of others. Part of the terms of this agreement and guarantee are that a block of this tonnage of the Newfoundland mill will be disposed of at their contract prices, the balance to be disposed of at actual cost. All of these prices will be substantially better than the open market.

"It is the hope of the paper committee that this tonnage will have a great effect on the market, relieving the very acute situation of any small publishers and assisting to keep the market in good condition for fall contracts.

"The paper committee urges every possible economy between now and the end of November to build up as large stock as possible of paper.

"With this tonnage placed where it can do the most benefit and have the most effect on prices, we look for very much better conditions than would have existed if the committee had not accomplished these results.

"A company has been organized, the Publishers Paper Company, Inc. As soon as organization is completed and a staff arranged, they will be in shape to take care of all orders with dispatch and care.

"On account of the fact that most of this paper will be delivered by boat, it will probably be shipped mostly to publishers along the Atlantic seaboard. Where freight rates permit, it will be shipped further inland. This paper is only available for those who are in acute need, and will not be used where publishers are taken care of under a satisfactory contract.

"These negotiations were instituted through the courtesy of Roy Howard of United Press Associations, whose benefit and cooperation we specifically wish to mention. The Federal Trade Commission was largely instrumental in having these negotiations opened in cooperation with Mr. Howard.

"The publishers are indebted to the commission for its activities in their behalf and for its willingness to cooperate and make possible the negotiations and contract which the paper committee has concluded. This is only one of the many beneficial activities of the Federal Trade Commission, and we regret that there are some publishers in the country who are not inclined to give it credit for the real work it has done. That the commission has not accomplished some things it attempted is not its fault, and under very difficult conditions it accomplished a great deal of benefit to both large and small publishers in this country."

UNION HEAD SAYS THERE IS NO PAPER SHORTAGE.

John T. Carey, president of the executive council of the International Paper Makers, declares that there is now no scarcity in news print paper.

In fact, according to President Carey, many of the news print paper mills of the country are either idle altogether or else working on short time.

The mills at Hudson Falls, N. Y.; Sheboygan, Mich.; Groveton, N. H., and Holyoke, Mass., are running reduced time. Many of the men have gone into other trades in order to work full time.

One of the purposes of the executive council meeting held last week in Albany, N. Y., was to discuss alleged discriminations against young men of draft age, many of the mill owners, it is charged, having refused to employ young men between 21 and 31.

The executive board adopted a resolution condemning this. President Carey supplemented the action by declaring that the union was collecting the facts and would forward them to Washington as soon as they could be verified. It was charged that many of the mills had been employing foreigners while young Americans remained idle.

WHY A.N.P.A. SAYS: "DON'T STORE NEWS PRINT."

CAR SHORTAGE ARGUMENTS ANSWERED —PAPER HOARDING NOT IN THE NATIONAL INTEREST.

Whether to store up now news print paper for future protection against possible shortage, higher prices or delay in freight shipments, caused by war; or to hold off buying extra paper in the hope of lower prices in the future—this is the question that is probably uppermost in every publisher's mind today.

The paper committee of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association says: "Don't store paper."

The United States Chamber of Commerce, in conjunction with the Committee of National Defense, calls for storage of every possible product to relieve the strain on the railroads now and in the future when crops, soldiers and war munitions have the right of way.

Last week THE FOURTH ESTATE told of the view taken by the Chamber of Commerce and the Defense Committee. This week it presents the argument of the A.N.P.A. paper committee on why not to store paper.

The explanation is in the form of an interview given THE FOURTH ESTATE by A. G. McIntyre, special representative of the committee. Mr. McIntyre said:

"Storage of paper by publishers is being urged by many interests, and for varying reasons.

"Manufacturers particularly ask them to take in shipments as far ahead as October commitments. Some are advising stocking up at present prices, urging the statements of manufacturers that costs of raw material are still advancing to unheard of figures, which will force the price of paper still higher.

"This would be a logical argument, except for the fact that it has been demonstrated in the past that the selling price of paper has never had any relation to its cost of manufacture, but has been artificially stimulated and regulated by agreements among manufacturers and by distribution of territory.

"We find the special committee of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, in conjunction with the storage committee of the Committee of National Defense, issuing an appeal to business, to increase the storage and immediate movement to relieve the railroads in the car crisis, expected when the crops begin to move.

"We have pointed out that this car shortage was a serious problem, that the usual easing off in car difficulties at the present season has not been experienced as it should be, that the prospect on all sides for fall conditions is very serious and that without a doubt there will be a fall car shortage.

"We have asked publishers to meet this by every possible economy. Those who have already, in their own opinion, cut to the bone, must even pare further and build up their supplies and surplus in view of the coming shortage of cars.

"We regret that the Paper Committee has to advise against storing a heavy surplus paper even in view of a claim to benefit the national defense. If mills shipped out their future commitments at the present time, they must still receive their raw materials coal, and other supplies during the fall period, but if publishers are filled up with paper, there will come such a congestion that the paper mills will shut down. Supplies coming to the mill make empty to be loaded, particularly for the mills in Canada.

"If they are forced to send these cars out light it will only increase the difficulties in car shortage. If the interests of efficiency, paper must be moved in fairly regular movements.

"We do not believe it will be to the advantage of the national defense to have large quantities of paper stored at the present time with no shipments during the congested periods.

"Warehousing conditions throughout the country are serious, and rates have increased.

"The increased cost of carrying this paper is serious.

"It very much adds to the difficulties of publishers financing their business under present conditions, and if as they are faced with extreme high costs of supplies and paper, they are forced to use large quantities of liquid capital, carrying in storage quantities of paper in addition to paying the extra cost of so doing, the money situation will tighten seriously.

"Since the war broke out there has been a depletion in the supply of capital, and with the further prospects in view of $10,000,000,000 in Government bonds being sold during the next year, it is imperative that those operating any kind of business do so on as small capital requirements as possible.

"Financial institutions are advising businesses to act quickly if they require any liquid capital.

"By hoarding supplies of paper at present enormous prices, we are working against the financial plans of the Government and the Allies in this country in tying up a lot of money in supplies which cannot be liquidated. As the war progresses we will see higher average level bank rates for this money and certainly a publisher should not add to the financing troubles of the country under present conditions.

"Canada has met its car shortage, which in proportion was more acute than that of this country because of smaller equipment and fewer transportation lines. Canada was more severely taxed under war conditions with the additional movement of supplies which came from the United States. A great deal of this duplication of transportation will now be eliminated with both countries in the war.

"With the elimination of much of the passenger service, freight congestion can be helped materially.

"We urge on the Government the elimination entirely of the exports of news print paper, ground wood and sulphite pulp. All the movement of this paper and pulp is co-incident with war supplies to the ports.

"On the other hand, a very large part of the paper moved for publishers does not conflict with this war traffic. If all publishers make a scramble at the present time to hoard paper, the small publishers who are today almost on the brink of destruction will be ruined.

"Bankers are refusing to carry publishers any further with their supplies and if publishers attempt to strain their limited resources by carrying heavy stocks, it would be most dangerous.

"Storing paper will mean two extra handlings and extra labor. In the interests of labor economy these unnecessary handlings should be avoided.

"We regret we must urge in the interests of low paper prices, and in the interests of the national defense from our point of view, only carrying such supplies as are needed for proper protection and stocks of not more than a month's supply. Otherwise we will have a distinct and dangerous reaction."

OHIO SELECT LIST OFFICERS.

Members of the Select List of Ohio Daily Newspapers held their annual meeting in Columbus on August 7. The meeting, at which officers for the coming year were elected, was well attended.

Officers elected are: President, W. O. Littick, Zanesville Times-Recorder; vice-president, Harry E. Taylor, Portsmouth Times; secretary-treasurer, C. H. Spencer, Newark Advocate.

As the board of directors, Fred W. Bush, Athens Messenger; Oliver J. Jones, East Liverpool Review; John H. Shearer, Marysville Tribune, and L. E. Wall, Findlay Republican, were elected.

The association, which has forty-five members, meets bi-monthly. The October meeting is to be held in Columbus and the December session in Pittsburg, Pa.

KOBLER ON HEARST STAFF.

A. J. Kobler, for the past seven years on the New York Globe, will join the Hearst publications early in the fall, doing free lance work. He will devote most of his time to the American Weekly, a section of the Hearst Sunday newspapers, with distribution in New York, Boston, Atlanta, Chicago, Los Angeles and San Francisco.

John W. Hunter, now assistant publisher of the Globe, will assume the duties of Mr. Kobler upon his resignation. Mr. Hunter is well known in the newspaper and advertising field and has been with the Globe for the past eight months, joining its forces after his resignation from the firm of Knill-Chamberlain-Hunter, Inc., newspaper representatives.

NEW NONPARTISAN PAPER.

The Grand Forks American is the name of a new paper to be launched at Grand Forks, N. D. A company has been organized with a capitalization of $100,000 to conduct the newspaper, which will be the organ of the Nonpartisan League. A. G. Sorlie of Grand Forks is secretary-treasurer of the company.

WAR CORRESPONDENTS HERE.

Charles F. Bertelli, Paris manager of the International News Service, and Karl H. von Wiegand, its Berlin correspondent, are now in New York, having arrived from their European stations during the past few days.

Mr. von Wiegand was the last American correspondent to leave Berlin and spent a short time in Stockholm before coming back to America.

RE-ORGANIZATION IN LOUISVILLE.

COMMITTEES AND MANAGERS DIRECTING TIMES AND COURIER-JOURNAL.

Under the Louisville Courier-Journal and Louisville Times reorganization, an executive committee (consisting of W. B. Haldeman, editor of the Times; Bruce Haldeman and Bennett H. Young) will have general control and direction of matters pertaining to the Courier-Journal Company and the Louisville Times Company. The executive committee has been created and will be, as a matter of course, subject to the board of directors.

The board of directors consists of Bruce Haldeman, W. B. Haldeman, Henry Watterson, Clara Haldeman Bonnie and Bennett H. Young, representing Isabel Haldeman. These directors are owners of the stock in the Courier-Journal Company and the Louisville Times Company.

Bruce Haldeman will continue as president of both the Courier-Journal and Times Companies at the same salary he has always received.

Any changes that may be made in the editorial or business departments will be for the future consideration of the new general editorial manager (Arthur B. Krock) and the new general business manager (Robert E. Hughes).

Messrs. Krock and Hughes are delegated very full authority in their respective positions, but, of course, are subject to the executive committee and the board of directors.

CO-OPERATION BETWEEN U. S. AND CANADA.

INQUIRY BY COMMISSIONER PRINGLE REVIVES HOPE FOR TRADE BOARD'S RECOMMENDATION.

The more complex the news print situation becomes in Canada, the stronger becomes the belief of officials at Washington that time will bring about close cooperation between the Dominion Government and the Government of the United States in the handling of news print problems.

As another straw to indicate which way the wind is blowing comes the request of the Canadian investigators for the figures compiled by the Federal Trade Commission as to the cost of production in Canadian mills.

The Canadian Government has written the Federal Trade Commission asking use of such figures obtained in the Federal Trade Commission's investigation into costs of news print as might aid Canadian officials now engaged in an investigation into news print costs in the Dominion.

The request came from R. A. Pringle, K. C., commissioner in charge of the Canadian investigation. Accountants are now at work at Canadian mills preparing statements of costs. Such statements, it is understood, are to be submitted to the manufacturers, when completed, following which a public hearing will be held at which all parties interested will discuss the statements.

Commissioner Pringle has suggested that Geoffrey Clarkson, at the head of the Canadian accountants, confer with the accountants who handled the news print investigation for the Federal Trade Commission and submit copies of the Canadian accountants' reports.

Commissioner Pringle also has requested a meeting with Chairman Harris, of the commission, in Washington.

The Federal Trade Commission has replied that it would be glad to comply with Mr. Pringle's request at some future date to be settled by agreement.

COMMISSIONER PRINGLE'S STATEMENT.

The request by Commissioner Pringle gave rise to the questions of whether it indicated that he had reconsidered his decision not to consider the business done by Canadian paper manufacturers in the United States in his investigation of the price of news print in Canada (which caused the withdrawal of the Canadian Press Association from participation in the Pringle inquiry), or whether it was a step toward cooperating with the Federal Trade Commission of the United States in the latter's recent proposal for joint United States and Canadian governmental control of paper prices and distribution in the two countries.

In answer to a query by THE FOURTH ESTATE, Commissioner Pringle, in Ottawa, said:

"I have not in any way intimated that I would investigate conditions in the United States. It is just possible, after the accountants get through here on their cost figures, that a conference may be held with the accountants who acted for the Federal Trade Commission, but only in regard to cost of paper manufacture in Canada."

A. R. Alloway, assistant manager of the Canadian Press Association, Inc., said:

"We do not think there is any connection between the request of Commissioner Pringle to the United States Federal Trade Commission and the commissioner's decision that led to the withdrawal of the newspapers from the Pringle news print investigation, as explained in THE FOURTH ESTATE of August 4."

But the fact that Commissioner Pringle has got into touch with the Federal Trade Commission has led to a revived hope that the United States and Canada will finally come together for a settlement of their paper problems.

Arguments were advanced to THE FOURTH ESTATE by men in close touch with the situation in Washington that the trade commission unearthed evidence to convince it that important manufacturers in the United States and Canada "were banded together to secure unreasonable profits," rendering it logical that the governments of the two countries may act together if any remedy or relief is to be sought through special legislation or Governmental control.

While there has all along been a feeling of optimism that Washington and Ottawa will ultimately get together on a mutual understanding as to news print regulation, it is no harm to point out that a couple of rather potent influences are at work to drive into camp any Canadian officials that might be inclined to hang back owing to a feeling of friendliness toward Canadian news print interests.

The influences in question being practical ones, having to do with the future of the physical aspects of the Canadian paper industry, may be expected to "get" Canadians who might not be so readily swayed by the moral or sentimental considerations.

First of the two currents of influence now drawing Canada to an understanding is the recommendation of the Federal Trade Commission to the United States Senate to the effect that if the Canadian Government does not join in a cooperative enterprise, then all importation of paper and mechanical and chemical pulp into the United States shall be made only on Government account to or through a Federal agency charged with such supervision and distribution.

It seems that when the trade commission first submitted its report, the Canadians paid very little attention to the obscure paragraph containing this alternative recommendation; but latterly it has gradually dawned on some persons in high places in the Dominion that this is very much a case of the mailed fist in the velvet glove.

Inasmuch as 75 per cent of Canadian news print comes to the United States, any action such as is hinted at might serve to put a crimp in a class of business that is paying comfortable dividends to many Canadian stockholders and tidy taxes to the Canadian Government.

The second influence—or it might more rightly be denominated a group of influences—is of even more recent origin and grows out of the conditions prevailing in the fields of commerce and industry on this continent at the present time.

The spectacle of the Harmsworth mills in Newfoundland, denied for a time a profitable market in the United States simply because the powers that be in America would not bestir themselves to provide ocean tonnage, has afforded an object lesson to Canadians as to the indirect pressure which American interests can bring to bear.

DANGLING SWORDS.

Even more to the point have been the swords dangling over the heads of various Canadian paper makers ready to fall at a signal from this side of the line.

A Canadian paper maker here with no American coal for the operation of his mill; one there with troubles of his own in securing empty cars from American railroads that have no freight to ship into his locality; and another, beyond, worried over the difficulty of chartering American steamers on the Great Lakes to transport pulpwood; all go to attest the interdependence of American and Canadian interests.

Yankee newspaper interests, to be sure, cannot "get back" at Canadian paper producers at the present writing, but there are other Yankee interests that can.

Quietly and unofficially there have also been conveyed to Canadian officials who are favorable to Canadian paper producers an intimation that it may be short-sighted policy for paper-producing interests in the Dominion to crowd American consumers to the point where there is a general movement, such as is now in progress for the erection of publishers' mills on this side of the border.

Some of the publishers' plants, especially the cooperative plants projected in the South, are planning to make use of raw material heretofore neglected as a base for news print. As an argument why the Canadians should get together on a more uniform, and more favorable price for American supplies, it is cited that a dent may be made in Canadian sales if the publishers' plants should so multiply as to take care of the wants of a considerable number of publishers.

While there is as yet no intimation of the possible use of forceful measures to bring about equitable treatment for American publishers at the hands of Canadian paper-makers, it is known at Washington that there are various opportunities, under the sweeping import and export control legislation likely to be passed by the present Congress, for applying pressure to Canadian producers.

For example there might be cited the convenience to one Canadian manufacturer of his arrangement with an American manufacturer whereby the latter exported for the former from Pacific Coast ports, when the Canadian interest could not obtain shipping facilities, and took in exchange Canadian paper delivered at other points.

That is but one of a number of instances in which Canadian paper interests are dependent upon American support or cooperation.

In some quarters there is expectation that Canadian paper makers might, if the subject be presented clearly, actually welcome rather than resent a United States Governmental agency for the disposition of their product in the United States. This view is based on the premise that such an arrangement might insure to the Canadians as high or a higher net profit than they have heretofore received, with less bother.

It is well known that the high profits made by many Canadian mills have been due to low cost of material, etc., and that when there is segregated the item of selling expense it is found that in normal years it is costing the Canadian mills very much more than their American rivals to sell their output, the cost being on an average perhaps 50 to 66 2-3 per cent more in the case of the Canadian mills than in the case of the American mills.

This high sales expense on the part of the Canadians is attributed to the fact that most of the Canadian manufacturers having no sales organization of their own are compelled to sell through selling agents or brokers.

The theory is that in selling through a Governmental agency in the United States, the Canadians could dodge entirely the brokerage charges and that consequently the paper makers might be reconciled to such an arrangement even though their paper went to consumers at a lower price.

Indeed, it is claimed that a United States governmental sales agency would further work economies in the distribution of Canadian paper by placing a greater proportion of the Canadian output at points of consumption where it would not be necessary to make such heavy freight expenditures to secure delivery.

WIRES CRIPPLED BY "EARTH CURRENTS" FOR TWO HOURS.

Telegraph and telephone wires leading out of New York in all directions were affected shortly after midnight on August 9 by "earth currents," as telegraphers call them. For more than two hours a majority of them were out of commission.

The disturbance began soon after 11 o'clock, affecting wires between New York and Atlanta. Later it was felt on all wires between New York, Buffalo and Pittsburgh, and even as far west as Chicago. Lines to Boston and the cable station at North Sydney, N. S., ceased to work.

The most serious disturbance was from 1.11 a. m. to 1.45 a. m., when the wires cleared for a few minutes, but soon afterward the waves again gripped them and continued for half an hour, when the wires began to clear.

Officials of the Western Union Telegraph Company said that fully 90 per cent of the wire facilities in the country east of Chicago had been affected.

NAYLOR IN HANNIBAL.

W. G. Naylor, former manager of the Olean (N. Y.) Times, is in charge of the Hannibal (Mo.) Morning Journal for the next three months, installing efficient methods of handling the paper's work. He has made several mechanical shifts in the plant and is now planning advertising and circulation campaigns.

John Knott, editor and manager of the paper, recently died and the plant is now under the management of his relatives.

WORK AHEAD FOR STAFFORD.

WAR REVENUE TAXES NOW THE ISSUE.

VARIOUS POINTS OF THE PROPOSALS AS THEY AFFECT NEWSPAPERS—HOUSE AND SENATE BILLS COMPARED.

The big drive on the "war revenue" issue is on at last at Washington, with every indication that this matter of new taxes will remain the principal question before Congress until settled, be it a month or longer.

There is scant comfort for newspaper publishers in the act that, after its double revision, has finally been reported from the Senate Finance Committee as a bipartisan measure.

Secretary McAdoo's eleventh-hour alarm for more revenue dissipated whatever faint hope there may have been that the Senate Committee would, in the end, grant the publishing interests more favorable treatment, and made it certain that the newspaper industry must fight, and fight hard, in the open Senate for any relief it obtains.

Placing in deadly parallel the Revenue Act, as it passed the House, and the revised and amended act that is now before the Senate, it is found that, by and large, the Senate version is vastly more unfavorable to newspaper interests and would operate to take vastly more toll from the publishers' already depleted coffers than would the House program.

In this respect, newspaper publishers are in exactly the opposite position from the rest of the business world, or at least a considerable share of it.

Big business in many lines has hailed the Senate Bill, stiff as are the taxes it imposes, as a welcome relief, a great improvement over the House Act, and not a few prominent newspaper advertisers have let the editors know that they favor the Senate program for taxation over the House schedule.

All is explained when the two bills are compared and it is found that under the Senate bill there is no tax whatever on such advertised products as automobile tires, talking machines and records, pianos and player-pianos, jewelry, motion picture films, chewing gum, etc.

The tax on cigarettes is lighter under the Senate scheme, and on soft drinks, many of which are largely advertised, the Senate impost is little more than half the House levy, while the Senate has likewise slashed to less than half the House tax penalties on sporting goods, perfumes and cosmetics, proprietary medicines, etc.

Unquestionably, this is fine and dandy for all of the aforesaid advertisers and maybe, as some of them claim, it will enable them to spend more money for newspaper space than would otherwise be the case.

At the same time there is cold comfort for the newspapers that are singled out by the Senate Committee for special taxation, just as all these other manufacturing interests are freed from it, on the plea that special taxation is wrong in principle.

HITS NEWSPAPERS ALL ALONG.

An analysis of the Senate Bill by THE FOURTH ESTATE discloses the fact that it hits the newspaper publishers all along the line.

First there is the increased income tax—individual and corporate.

Second, there is the war "excess profits" tax, which has been more than doubled in the Senate over the House.

Third, there is the increase in second-class postage rates.

Fourth, and most serious of all, is the special tax which the Senate Committee persists in imposing upon publishers' profits, in amazing contradiction of its mandate that special taxes upon chosen industries are not justified.

Although the new Revenue Bill is unpleasantly clear and explicit with respect to some of the burdens which it lays upon publishers, there are certain sections or clauses the meaning of which as applied to the newspaper industry is obscure, but which, if interpreted in their most unfavorable form, are menacing indeed.

For one thing, there is uncertainty among newspaper circulation managers as to what tax, if any, will be imposed upon bundles of newspapers sent to news agents outside the city of publication.

There is provided under the new act a tax of 3 per cent on freight bills, but that does not seem to strike the paper bundles nor, on the other hand do they appear to come within range of the tax upon express packages, inasmuch as these bundles are in most instances not carried by express, but are transported in the baggage cars of passenger trains under a special arrangement with the railroad.

TELEGRAPH AND PHONE TAXES.

Even more puzzling is the situation that is bound to grow out of the tax of 5 cents upon each telegraph or telephone dispatch, message or conversation on which a charge of 15 cents or more is imposed.

"What," inquires the mystified newspaper owner, "will be the status of leased wires under this arrangement?" And how is it to be determined, in the face of modern newspaper practice, what constitutes a dispatch or message within the meaning of the law?

Will a publisher be called upon to pay his little 5 cents upon every bulletin and "flash" and "add to a continuing story?"

Another angle of the Senate bill, as compared with the House, is in clapping on a tax of $5 per year, upward, on every automobile. This levy may not have any effect upon motor advertising, but it will be an appreciable drain upon the expense account of the average city newspaper which employs automobiles.

The tax of two per cent of the selling price of cameras, likewise added by the Senate, will also make itself felt in newspaper offices whenever a new camera is requisitioned.

SECOND-CLASS POSTAGE RATES.

Protests coming to Washington from newspaper publishers in various parts of the country indicate a considerable sentiment in favor of the House plan to increase second-class postage rates on the "zone" plan, as preferable to the Senate proposal for a flat increase of one-fourth of a cent per pound. Small publishers, in particular, seem to be imbued with the idea that they will fare better under a zone system than under the flat rate plan.

The position of these small publishers having circulation only within a restricted area will be better understood when it is borne in mind that they are to continue to enjoy the "free in county" privilege which will take care of most of their mail circulation. For the small fraction of circulation outside the county they would, so they say, prefer to pay on a sliding scale, even if that scale represents a bigger increase over the present rate than would the flat advance of one-fourth of a cent per pound proposed by the Senate.

Canny small publishers figure somewhat in this wise: The present increase in postage rates is liable to be but a starter. If the zone rate is adopted the successive increases must, perforce, be slight in the first, second and third zones where such publishers have most of their circulation. But if the flat rate is boosted the small publisher will feel the full force of the blow, along with the metropolitan publisher, although he sends comparatively few copies on the long haul.

Finally, among the perplexities precipitated by the Senate Revenue Bill is the uncertainty as to the status of "house organs" and similar publications.

The law says that the publishers' special tax of 5 per cent must be paid upon the net income of all newspapers, magazines and periodicals entitled to be entered as second-class mail matter "whether or not so entered."

Will the Post Office Department have to get busy and rule on the admissibility of hundreds of private publications that have never attempted to get into the second-class category?

R. H. LEE JOINS THE N. Y. TRIBUNE.

WILL WORK WITH S. H. ADAMS IN CAMPAIGN FOR TRUTH IN ADVERTISING.

Richard H. Lee, special counsel of the national vigilance committee of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, will join the staff of the New York Tribune on September 1, taking charge of that newspaper's campaign for truth in advertising in cooperation with Samuel Hopkins Adams.

Mr. Lee will be director of the Tribune bureau of investigations.

Mr. Lee is a practicing attorney of Cleveland who has won nation-wide attention through his work in investigating the practices of various advertising frauds. He has brought several notorious firms to trial and put to an end to the mal-practice of others.

He is a strong believer in the power of publicity in the correction of dishonest advertising practices and has more than once been cited in the Tribune's clean advertising propaganda for his effective work.

E. A. Sutphin, who has been with the Tribune for some time, has been appointed to take charge of its national advertising department, succeeding W. G. Woodward, recently resigned.

Richard H. Waldo will resign as a director and as secretary of the company on September 1.

COMMISSION FOR WALLACE.

Alex. F. Wallace, who left the Duncan (B. C.) Leader staff soon after war broke out and has been serving at the front in the Canadian Infantry, has been granted a commission as a lieutenant. He worked on the staff of the Vancouver (B. C.) Province, New Westminster (B. C.) Daily News and Coquitlam (B. C.) Star before going to Duncan.

VAN NESS IN FILM WORK.

Frederick A. Van Ness has resigned from the editorial staff of the New York Evening Journal to join the publicity staff of the Goldwyn Picture Corporation as assistant to L. L. Arms, editorial director.

NEW MEMPHIS EDITOR.

Over Half Million Lines Gain

In seven months of 1917 The New York Times published 7,011,799 lines of advertising, a gain of 555,690 lines over the corresponding period of 1916, a gain of 1,704,802 lines over the corresponding period of 1915, and, deducting help and situation wanted advertising, a greater volume than any other New York newspaper.

The average net paid daily and Sunday circulation of The New York Times, exceeding one-third of a million copies, represents in one grouping the largest number of intelligent, discriminating, and responsive readers ever assembled by a newspaper.

GERMAN PRESS PUT TO TEST.

SECURITY LEAGUE OF U. S. CALLS FOR PROFESSION OF PATRIOTISM.

The National Security League has issued a challenge to the 450 German printed newspapers in the United States to make a patriotic "profession of faith."

The demand follows the announced failure of German-American organizations of the United States to satisfactorily answer a request made by the league to "stand up and be counted" as opposed to the German Government and let the members' relatives in Germany know that the United States is undivided in its war determination.

In a statement the Security League says:

"Undaunted and believing that the tenor of these replies is conclusive evidence of the need for the accounting of German-Americans, started by it, the Security League has sent a further letter to the editors of the some 450 German-American newspapers of the country, suggesting a statement of their position. One of the principal reasons for this letter is the general adverse criticism which has been made by the German-American press on the league's original letter."

The editors of the German-American newspapers were asked to subscribe to the following "Confession of Faith":

"1—I believe that the objects of America in this war are noble, unselfish, and that they square with the highest aims of morality and religion."

"2—I believe that the aims of Germany in this war are sordid, selfish, and opposed to the principles of human liberty."

"3—I believe that the statement of the German monarch and his Prime Ministers as to German aims and purposes in the war have been false and hypocritical."

"4—I believe that the methods sanctioned by the German Government and rulers in this war are brutal, barbarous and revolting to civilized thought."

"5—I believe that the preservation of human liberties and the ideals of civilization and morality depend upon our victory in this war."

"6—I believe we cannot win this war alone, and that our own future and all that we strive for is inseparably bound up with the success of our allies."

"7—I believe that the peace of the world cannot rest on any contract made with perjurers; and that our own preservation and the accomplishment of our objects in the war require the permanent effacement of the present German dynasty and radical changes in the present system of German Government."

"8—I believe that the war must continue until this result is achieved by military victory for ourselves and allies or by revolution within the German nation."

"9—I believe that there can be no qualified allegiance to the United States and the principles for which it is struggling; those who do not support the war wholeheartedly cannot claim to be wholly loyal."

The league will make public the replies of the editors of the German-American newspapers.

GERMAN LOYALTY PROVEN.

The New York Times comments on the test put to German societies and newspapers, as follows:

"We see multitudes of Americans of German origin enlisting, supporting the draft, acting as the patriotic Americans of every strain ought to act. If the officers of any of the German-American societies are of another mind, they are not representative German-Americans."

"When we come to the German-language press, we have to wonder whom, in this country, it represents."

"The president of the German-American Alliance of Tennessee writes that many of its members have stopped their subscriptions to such papers. It was a natural thing for loyal men to do."

"Much of the German-language press in this country has been and is steadily pro-German."

"It has been eager for German victory."

"It throws cold water on the American cause and the American preparations for war."

"It abuses and sneers at the Allies, especially England."

"Now that the German plan of world-dominion is hopeless, the German-language press, as a whole, seems to be working for a German peace, for the status quo ante, for the salvage of as much as is possible of the German hopes."

"A peace victorious for democracy and ending the German terror to the world is not to the mind of most of the German-language papers. By direction and indirection, by suppression of the truth, innuendo, in many ways it seeks to bolster up Germany. In the midst of a war with Germany, this is a curious attitude, an attitude that can hardly continue."

"Is the German-language press loyal?"

"That is a matter of public interest."

"It is to be regretted that the National Security League has put the 'Confession of Faith' to which it asks the German-American papers to subscribe in language which, considering the persons to whom it is addressed, seems superfluously harsh and offensive."

"None the less, there is not an article in it to which any loyal American, of whatever descent, should not be able to say Amen!"

"We shall await the answers with interest."

"Meanwhile a translation into English of the peculiar utterances of some of the German-language newspapers may serve, in some cities, as it did in Cincinnati, to check, at least for a time, their dithyrambic fervor for Germany."

WOULD HAVE PAPERS SUPPRESSED.

The New York Herald says:

"It is explained in news reports dealing with the onslaught made upon marriage license bureaus that much of it is due to improper and misleading translations in the foreign language press of this city of Provost Marshal General Crowder's ruling regarding exemptions."

"Whether these translations were intentionally misleading should be easily determined. It is the duty of Federal officials to make an immediate investigation."

"America's foreign language press presents a serious war problem."

"Colonel Roosevelt is right in contending that all publications in the German language should be suppressed during the period of our war with Germany."

"In almost all of those publications enemy aliens—Germans, who make no pretense at being American citizens—hold editorial positions. It is worse than a scandal that such persons be so circumstanced as to be able to aid the cause of this country's enemies either openly or by the more sinister method of misrepresentation, as is constantly being done by the publications with which they are connected."

"The existence of German language publications is a direct menace (Continued on Twenty-ninth Page)"

When the Hudson Dispatch Changed to Multiple Magazine Linotypes Their Profits Grew.

On July 6 the Hudson Dispatch, of Hoboken, N. J., replaced all its earlier model Linotypes with modern Multiple Magazine machines. The economies effected by the change are summed up as follows by Mr. T. F. Martin, the Publisher:

"We figure that our Linotype efficiency is greatly increased by the change to Multiple Magazine machines. The service made possible for straight matter, ad work, and heads is even greater than your salesman represented. The time saved in making changes quickly, without removing magazines from the machines, adds greatly to their efficiency. I am convinced of the pretty well established fact that the Linotype way is the best way."

INFORMATION COMMITTEE ABANDONS "STORIES".

ADOPTS A SYSTEM CONFINING ITS NEWS TO BALD OFFICIAL ANNOUNCEMENTS —CHANGE IS WELCOMED.

The first thing the Government Committee on Public Information has done that has met with the approval of newspaper men in Washington, since it was created last April, came on August 6 in the form of an announcement that a complete change of policy in dealing with the press has been adopted by Chairman Creel.

By Mr. Creel's direction the committee is to abandon the practice of preparing the news "stories" for the newspapers concerning matters regarded as of public interest and will confine its statements to bald official announcements, without embellishment, elaboration or the application of imagination.

The change in policy causes a material reduction in the working force of the committee and hereafter newspaper men must work up their own stories for themselves and do their own writing, as they did in the days before the Committee on Public Information. The correspondents welcome the return to the old order of things.

At the same time the committee is reaching out to obtain all the authority possible to enable it to concentrate in its own hands the control of the Governmental news.

Although it had been denied that anything of the sort had been arranged, a copy of an official order issued by Secretary Baker shows that the Secretary of War instructed all responsible officials of the War Department that the Committee on Public Information "is the sole medium for the issuance of war news from the War Department."

In the face of this, it is asserted by officials of the Creel Committee that this does not mean that Brigadier General Frank McIntyre has been displaced as press censor for the War Department. Mr. Creel said General McIntyre is a part of the information bureau.

On the contrary, it was said, all war news must first be passed on by General McIntyre, and, if it is regarded as necessary to issue a formal statement, a copy of the statement is sent to the Committee on Public Information for copying and distribution.

Through this method the committee is able to receive copies of official statements as quickly as the newspapers and to print them synchronously with the newspapers in the official bulletin which the committee publishes.

The order from Secretary Baker to War Department officials is marked "Confidential." It directs these officials to treat representatives of the Committee on Public Information who seek news as Government employees and not as newspaper men, and to place trust in them. The instructions given by the Secretary of War regarding representatives of the Creel Committee follows:

"These representatives of the committee will be treated with confidence. There should be a clear understanding that they are not members of the press, but Government employees under oath, entitled to all proper confidence.

"When chiefs of the bureaus and offices find it necessary to discuss with these representatives information that they believe should not be made public they need only to give an intimation to that effect.

"They should give freely not only information specifically requested, but any information which the chiefs of bureaus or offices believe should be made public."

Hereafter Mr. Creel said representatives of his bureau would be assigned to the departments to get news from the officials who are forbidden to talk to newspaper men and the Creel men then, after consultation with the Department heads, will give to the correspondents directly whatever information is deemed advisable.

Mr. Creel explained that while this in effect might be virtually a censorship of news sources it was necessary on account of war conditions. He insisted, however, that it was his plan to facilitate the work of the correspondents here as much as possible and that if requests were reasonable they would be permitted upon application to get in touch with officials.

HEAVY MORTALITY OF PRESS IN SOUTHWEST.

Uncertain income has caused the demise of nearly a score of newspapers in northern Oklahoma and southern Kansas, according to a summary just published by the Wichita Eagle. Some of the changes are:

Henry C. Mayes, editor of the Clark County (Kan.) Clipper, has been appointed postmaster and his paper has been merged with the Record. The two papers now appear under the caption of the Clipper.

The Belpre (Kan.) Bulletin, edited by J. W. Busenbark, has absorbed its competitor, the Argosy.

The Oakland (Okla.) News was recently burned out and R. H. Baine, its editor, has decided to try his luck elsewhere, having purchased the Canton (Okla.) Record.

The Taloga, (Okla.) Times has ceased publication, leaving a clear field for the Advocate.

The Waynona (Okla.) Record has given up the fight against the high cost of news print and has turned the field over to the Enterprise.

The Peckham, (Okla.) Derrick has also given up the struggle.

HIGH PRICES FOR PAPERS.

The Chicago Daily News continues to do a heavy business in old newspapers. The current price is 50 cents per hundred for clean, folded, flat newspapers, and since this tops the Chicago market, the supply being handled by the News is very large. All profit from the business goes to the News Fresh Air Fund.

PARKE GOES TO FRONT FOR INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

"Big doings" are a certainty when the American troops in France get on the firing line, and when these big doings come Newton C. Parke of the International News Service will be on the spot. Mr. Parke sailed today for France, where he will act for the I.N.S. at the front with General Pershing's forces. Mr. Parke will replace Daniel Dillon, who has been with the Pershing forces, but who in future will be attached to the Paris office.

"Level-headed" is the epithet often applied to Parke by many news service men and newspaper men who know his work. He has also an almost uncanny understanding of the significance of apparently little things.

"Parke was handling cables for us at the outbreak of the Russian revolution," said Barry Faris, day news manager of the I.N.S., "and several days before the announcement of the revolt, while reading the morning reports, he came across a small item from Petrograd on an inside page under a small head. In this item was one sentence describing the crowds in Petrograd.

NEWTON C. PARKE.

"It was almost an exact paraphrase of a sentence in Carlyle's 'French Revolution' describing the mobs in Paris at the outbreak of the revolution. From this one sentence Parke 'hunched' the fact that the Russian revolution, long expected, must be a reality. He insisted that we go after the story hard.

"We did so, got it in a few hours and found that the revolution had in fact burst loose."

Mr. Parke has worked in most of the larger cities of the United States and has a wide acquaintance among newspaper men.

MOXIE COMPANY WINS SUIT.

CHICAGO BREWER ENJOINED
FROM SELLING NEAR-BEER
AS "PROXIE."

The Moxie Company has just been awarded a decision by the Examiner of Interferences of the United States Patent Office in its suit against the Wacker & Birk Brewing & Malt-ling Company, Chicago, to prevent the latter from marketing a non-alcoholic drink under the trade-mark "Proxie."

Testimony in the suit, which was filed in July, 1916, was taken in Boston, Chicago and Washington, the latter hearing being held in April, 1917. The decision has just been handed down by the Patent Office.

The Moxie Company objected that the mark "Proxie" is so similar in sound and appearance to "Moxie" that confusion would arise and the public would be liable to imposition, with the probability of damage in consequence to the Moxie Company.

The "Proxie" manufacturer held that the different properties of the two drinks eliminated the idea of confusion and also averred that the similarity of names was not confusing.

In giving decision in favor of the Moxie Company, the Examiner of Interferences said:

"It is clear that the marks—that is, 'Proxie' and 'Moxie'—are so nearly alike as to cause confusion and mistake in the minds of the public. In the case of 'Moxie' vs. 'Modox,' the Circuit Court of Appeals held 'Moxie' was infringed by 'Modox.'

"Certainly these words are not so nearly alike in sound and appearance as 'Moxie' and 'Proxie.' As has so often been said, it is difficult to understand why a new-comer in an established line of business selects a mark quite like that of a well advertised mark, if he really wishes to distinguish his goods from those of a competitor. There is no necessity for so doing.

"The field of distinctive marks is limitless, yet the applicant has apparently selected a mark as near like that of a known and extensively advertised mark in the same line of business as it was possible to do and avoid exact duplication."

The Moxie Company, immediately after the rendering of the decision, announced its victory in four-column advertisements in a large number of newspapers and asked readers of the advertising to bring to the attention of the company any further infringements of the "Moxie" trade-mark that might come to their attention.

FOWLER WITH V. L. S. E.
Phillip A. Fowler, until recently make-up editor of the New York Evening Sun, has been added to the publicity staff of the Vitagraph V-L-S-E. He has worked on the Philadelphia Public Ledger, the New York World, American and Press, and the Hearst papers in various cities.

The appointment is in harmony with the expressed intention of Nat. S. Stronge, V. L. S. E. publicity director, to appoint only seasoned newspaper men, who know what newspapers want and can get away from extravagant adjectives and "fakes."

TOO TALL FOR U. S. A.

The tallest soldier in kilts, says a dispatch from Montreal, is not a Scotchman, a Briton or even a Canadian, but an American citizen—Robert E. Sherwood, former head of the editorial department of Harvard Lampoon and the librettist of the Hasty Pudding musical comedy at Harvard University. Sherwood is 6 feet, 7 inches in height and was denied a commission after training at Plattsburg because of his unusual height.

WISDOM OF GEN. HARRISON GRAY OTIS.

SHOWN IN REMARKABLE LETTER ON THE FUTURE OF THE LOS ANGELES TIMES
THREE YEARS BEFORE DEATH.

Nearly three years before his death on July 31, 1917, General Harrison Gray Otis addressed to Mr. and Mrs. Harry Chandler, his son-in-law and daughter, to whom his controlling interest in the Los Angeles Times was transferred, a remarkable letter or declaration. It was in the form of carefully-wrought instructions and suggestions as to the lines on which the Times should be conducted after his demise. While expressing confidence in the purposes of Mr. and Mrs. Chandler, it laid down in an affectionate, fatherly and confident way his parting injunctions to his successors in interest, control and management.

This document is a classic and shows the wisdom of the venerable editor and manager, whose sagacity and able generalship made the Times a wonderful institution. To comment on this telling document would be superfluous. Mr. and Mrs. Chandler are now the controlling owners and managers of the Times. The General's letter to them, dated November 12, 1914, is here reproduced and, following that, their statement as to the future course of the journal:

"After mature deliberation I write you as follows:

"1.—In placing in your joint and trusted hands the high trust and valuable property conveyed or to be conveyed by me, I explain at the outset that my matured purpose in this acting will be to concentrate the future ownership and control, and also the destiny, of the most precious of all my material possessions, the Los Angeles Times, in the hands (before my death) of members of my own family, whom I specially trust in this connection and who have had long, practical experience with me in the building up, care, control and training of this stalwart child of our mutual efforts and affections, and of my own almost lifelong professional skill, labor and devotion.

"In doing this, I lay upon you only these fundamental injunctions as to its future course and conduct in your hands, and (as far as I may properly enjoin you personally) as to your own course as its future responsible conductors, viz:

"(1.) Using the legal and other legitimate powers and prerogatives that will be yours as the sole owners of more than two-thirds of the capital stock of the corporation, take and exercise at all proper times complete control and authority in all departments, including especially the editorial and business, as well as the news-gathering branches, which impart tone, temper, character and stability to a journal, and make it respected and influential. Make sure of your board of directors and of the loyalty, zeal, competency and faithfulness of your lieutenants and the entire working force at all times.

"(2.) Preserve and protect with steadfastness and determination the record, traditions and achievements of the Times, and continue its fixed and leading policies and methods; uphold its aims, purposes and aspirations in all large and essential particulars, and throughout the varying mutations of present day journalism, perpetuate unimpaired its independent and unfettered course.

"(3.) Constantly, consistently and loyally uphold and defend the Constitution and the Flag, the Congress and the courts, the executive power within its prescribed and lawful limitations, and cherish the Army and the Navy, those bulwarks and strong arms of the government.

"(4.) Stand undeviatingly for liberty under law, for industrial and all other forms of republican freedom, and for sound government as the surest safeguard of the nation, the state, the city and the home. Bravely face in their defense, whenever the need comes, the frenzied mob and the proscriptive madness of the hour.

"(5.) Stand for honor, honesty and order in the state, the nation and the home, and for that private and public morality which are essential to the perpetuity of sound, human government. While courageously supporting these virtuous principles, at the same time oppose with all your might their opposites and whatever tends to the demoralization of human society or jeopardizes the safety of the land or the rights and liberties of its citizens.

"Antagonize unceasingly all allied private or semi-private industrial combines which would unlawfully wrest from the free-born American citizen his guaranteed constitutional right to industrial, personal or political freedom and make him the slave of an arrogant and monopolistic trades despotism.

"While striking hard and deserved blows against these and other intolerable evils, keep in mind that better state when there shall be peace upon earth and good will among men.

"Scourge as with a whip of scorpions dishonesty, pretense, hypocrisy, scoundrelism, treason to truth and the country and every form of evil that threatens with destruction the home, the community or the country, and at the same time encouraging every sound tendency and condition in human society that makes for its preservation, stability and endurance on high and right lines.

"(6.) Stand for sound, rational and tested business methods and policies in the management of the Times newspaper, as well as in the conduct of commercial and public business, in order that this journal and all honest people may 'live long and prosper,' grow in grace and be happy. Hold up the hands and cheer the hearts of the lowly and deserving, no matter how humble they may be; quail not before the aggressions of unjust power, and live and die game and true. Fear God and do right.

"(7.) Encourage all free, independent and honest labor, no matter how humble, so it be honestly conducted; at the same time not hesitating to support and defend powerful financial, commercial and industrial alliances, provided that they, too, operate honestly and legitimately, when organized to accomplish mighty and worthy tasks too formidable to be undertaken by single individuals; for true it is that it is not the size of the operation, but the integrity with which it is conducted, that determines its legitimacy.

"Always bear in mind the demonstrated truth that it is, after all, the same, brave, level-headed, self-restrained, right-hearted, honest men and women of the land upon whom rests, and will always rest, the responsibility for holding the family, society, business, government and the country together.

"(8.) Continue the upstanding and long-pursued policy of this journal in working, day in and day out, for the upbuilding and sound lines of the favored and favorite city and section wherein the Times and its makers have their homes; and continue also to aid and abet the unhalting advance of all California, the entire Pacific Coast and the ultimate West.

"(9.) Ever place patriotism, duty and honor, public and private morality and the true interests of the state and country before mere commercialism or material success in the conduct of the Times. Thus may this journal of ours be caused to grow in strength, usefulness and power, able to plough through the turbulent sea of journalism like a full-rigged man-of-war.

"(10.) Concerning the all-important subject of the matter and scope of the general contents of the paper after it shall have come under your ownership, control and management, it is, of course, neither practicable nor proper for me to speak here, except in a very general way.

"You know, and will always bear in mind, the paramount fact that this journal is, and must continue to be, first of all a newspaper—a vehicle for the dissemination of current news reports and information; a faithful recorder of contemporaneous history and affairs, of new knowledge and of the tremendous daily happenings of the mighty present around all the globe, no matter of what nature or complexion the occurrences may be, provided they possess human interest.

"Moreover, the Times, being a proper medium for thinkers, they will be given, as always in the past, impartial hearings in its broad columns whenever they are able to enlighten the world, or contribute to those transcendent problems of human life, human living and human government which, if they are to be wisely solved, will always require the best thought and effort of the best men and women upon earth.

"In the columns of the Times will be found, I doubt not, in the future as in the past, graphic accounts of the doings of the far-flung human race; absorbing narratives of adventure and achievement of research and investigation; of travel and discovery; of progress in the arts, science and invention; of toil and triumph; of hardship, endurance and ultimate success; of everything, indeed, that is new to men and of living interest.

"The press is a colossal surveyor of the world-wide news field, scanning the entire civilized globe and faithfully purveying to an ever-waiting public the luminous record of daily and mighty happenings among men and nations.

"I am convinced that you will continue to make the Times do its full share in the strenuous work of the press in general, making it what it has long aimed to be—but even more so—a powerful, far-reaching daily news field-glass, exposing to the public view the world's foremost events and occurrences, and proclaiming them widely to the sons of men at Sol's diurnal revolution; to make this newspaper, in brief, "A map of the busy world,

Its fluctuations and its vast concerns."

"So may we confidently hope for the Times an honorable, a foremost and a permanent place in the large field of American journalism, and that always those men and women who serve it faithfully may feel high and genuine pride in their personal alliances with 'Ours.'"

"Accurate news-gathering, correct reporting, skillful editing, graphic illustrating and good printing all go to make up a finished modern newspaper, which should, of course, be written in pure, forceful, unstilted and luminous English.

"Finally—Bearing in mind that Truth is the greatest thing in all the world, and Duty the first concern of good men and women, I enjoin the foregoing precepts, principles and practices upon you in the future conduct of the Los Angeles Times, because of my affections for you and for it. I enjoin you both to guard well your precious health, as well as the sacred trust now by me committed to your trusted and trustful hands and hearts.

"With good aims and generous purposes toward all concerned in this pregnant transaction, with unfeigned regards and my living blessing, to be followed, let us hope, by a blissful reunion in the mysterious Beyond, coupled with undying associations and imperishable recollections of our mutual campaigns upon earth.

"I subscribe myself your steadfast and affectionate father."

NEW OWNERS' STATEMENT.

Following the death of General Otis, Mr. and Mrs. Chandler gave out the following statement:

"In assuming the sacred trust and grave responsibilities conveyed to us, the faithful carrying out of which is dearer than life itself, it is fitting for the undersigned to say:

"(1.) That insofar as human power and limitations will permit, the Times will be conducted in harmony

FIRST HARMSWORTH PAPER ARRIVES HERE.

DATES OF LOADINGS—HOW BRITAIN AND AUSTRALIA PROTECT THE PRESS—CANADA AND THE U. S.

The first cargo of news print paper from the Harmsworth Mill in Newfoundland for the American Newspaper Publishers Association's paper committee arrived in New York on August 9.

The second cargo started loading in Newfoundland on August 8.

The third cargo will be loading on August 15.

Further loading dates will be announced next week.

Publishers of smaller newspapers using sheet news print, as well as larger publishers using roll paper, will find it to their advantage to communicate immediately with the Paper Committee of the A.N.P.A., World Building, New York City.

The current report of the A.N.P.A. paper committee on the news print situation follows:

ANOTHER AUSTRALIAN SHIPMENT.

"A large cargo of paper is being shipped from Canada this week to Australia and picking up on the way 1,000 tons of Newfoundland paper. This was arranged under the auspices of the Australian Government, which insists during war time it must have paper to assist the country in the prosecution of the war."

"Similarly England has found it necessary to provide a supply of paper for her newspapers."

"It is not difficult to get cargo space on food ships sailing from New York to England for news print. Further than this the Australian Government, in spite of all the shortage of shipping tonnage and war contingencies, has allowed the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company to keep one of its ships, namely, the Alceda, for shipping paper all the time to England."

"The examples of that Government protecting the press as one of the army in the prosecution of the war, is commendable and worthy of imitation in the United States."

"We are glad to acknowledge the hearty cooperation and assistance of the administration in Washington in more than one of its departments, and very particularly the Federal Trade Commission."

"While we are sorry to see the exports from Canada go to Australia, which practically means this paper is taken from the United States, we are glad to see the Australian Government appreciates the importance of the press. This is the first shipment which has gone from Canada in many months, and probably there will not be any other in some considerable time."

"The sudden jump in exports to Australia through New York has dropped somewhat. The steps which have been taken by the paper committee have, we believe, had considerable effect in reducing these exports to a minimum."

"Publishers must ask our own Government to insist that exports be held down to the irreducible minimum during the present crisis."

SHORT PRODUCTION.

"Production for August will be very far short of normal. A number of mills are shut down for drought, labor troubles and repairs; a number of others are arbitrarily closed due to help stimulate the market."

"This is cutting production down enormously, with a view of stiffening up the market for fall contracts. As this is a slack time with publishers, the paper committee urges every publisher to keep to a minimum to meet this reduction, in order to maintain at least the present market of paper for the fall.

"The new tonnage now being brought in by the paper committee will have considerable effect, and the reduction of exports will also be of great benefit. Now is the time to think about 1918 contracts, and hold down our consumption to make it easy for next year."

PAPER COMPANY'S STOCK JUMPS.

"The jump of the common stock of Price Brothers & Co. on the Montreal Stock Exchange to the unprecedented high level of 134, is an indication of the very handsome earnings which this company is making under present conditions."

CANADIAN ADMINISTRATION AND U. S. NEWSPAPERS.

"We believe that publishers must take cognizance of the fact that American consumers are at a serious disadvantage in connection with the subject of paper coming from Canada, which now amounts to almost one half our total consumption in the United States."

"The Canadian Government has insisted that Canadian publishers in war times be protected against the avarice of the Canadian paper manufacturers. They have tacitly agreed that they may charge the highest possible price in the American market, which has worked a hardship on American publishers."

"Canadian mills depend entirely on American coal to manufacture this paper, which is now sold to them at a price lower than the law of supply and demand, so favored by the paper manufacturers, would allow."

"The Government has forced the price of coal down and Canadian paper manufacturers are benefiting by this concession in price, but the American consumer of news paper does not receive the benefit which he is thereby entitled to."

"The discrimination is unfair, as both countries are now bending their energy toward the prosecution of the war, as both Americans and Canadians will fight on the same battle fields for the same cause. The newspapers of both countries who are supporting their respective governments should be on an even basis and accorded equal privileges and rights."

"The United States Government has not yet been able to protect the press of the country, as the press of the other countries at war have been protected, but there at least should be some way to stop pillaging the American newspapers by foreign manufacturers who should be interested equally in the present war."

CAR SITUATION.

"The car situation is by no means satisfactory at the present time, particularly as this is usually the time of slack season."

"While it is much improved over the past, it is not nearly as good as it should be at this time of the year."

"With the moving of the crops this will become much worse, and the movement of paper and supplies to the paper mills more difficult."

"There is a surplus of paper at the present time in the present summer consumption."

"Publishers should effect all economy possible to keep their supply of paper ahead without injuring the market by hoarding and storing large quantities of paper. The situation will certainly become more difficult in the next few weeks, particularly as the publishers' demands for more paper with increasing fall business comes at about the same time."

PROPAGANDA.

"Announcement of the taking over of the Northcliffe mill by the paper committee has started a flood of propaganda against publishers of more than usual volume and bitterness in manufacturers' trade papers. Publishers are accused of almost everything under the sun. Imaginary interviews are published and absurd statements made. It seems that manufacturers feel that publishers of this country have not even the right to go out and buy paper where they wish to without consulting them. A broadcast campaign of slander is now started against the press for their effort to relieve a little bit their own situation by straightforward business methods."

WATER POWER.

"The committee considers water power legislation of so much importance that arrangements have been made with a former director of the association to attend to the interests of the Paper Committee in connection therewith at Washington. It is hoped to secure the passage of legislation at this session, but we must urge the active cooperation of all our members."

"The proposed water power legislation is thoroughly justified by its value to the country at large, and especially as having a bearing on the war situation."

"Trade press reports say the St. Regis Paper Company proposes to reduce its production of news print substantially. It is now manufacturing 100 tons a day."

"This is probably somewhat of a scare to the trade, for orders on other grades are not as attractive now as they were a few months ago. Many of these firms in northern New York State are forced to rely on the open market for all or part of their pulp and wood supply. For this reason they cannot manufacture news print as a mill with the necessary resources can."

"Publishers must consider these mills which can jump back and forth from one grade to the other as a shortage, and attempt to replace this tonnage by mills that will manufacture a print paper continuously."

STOP WASTE PAPER.

"The Chicago Daily Journal has brought to the attention of the committee a very satisfactory way of helping to stop the flood of waste paper received from circulars and other literature sent promiscuously through the mails. The attached postal card is printed and sent back to the address of all people sending such literature which is not used, saying:

Chicago—1916
To help keep down the price of paper we ask you to kindly remove the Chicago Journal from your mailing list at once.
Yours truly,
The Chicago Journal.

"We suggest that this be adopted by all publishers, as it would not only stop the supply of paper which comes to their office through the mails, but it would bring to the attention of these people the necessity of paper economy."

RENEWALS AT 3 CENTS.

"More publishers are reporting renewals of contracts for the balance of this year at 3 cents mill. Present offer market has influenced contract prices considerably with these renewals at prices lower than the original contracts for the first part of the year."

NATIONAL PRAISE FOR GERARD BOOK

PHILADELPHIA LEDGER IS WIDELY QUOTED ON GERMANY.

Following the publication in the Philadelphia Public Ledger during the past few days of the opening chapters of Ambassador Gerard's book on conditions in Germany, reports from Philadelphia indicate that interest in the story is nation-wide and that Cyrus H. K. Curtis, publisher of the Public Ledger, is likely to reap a rich harvest, in profit and prestige, for his enterprise in securing the rights to the book.

Press comment has been favorable all over the country and many leading newspapers including the New York Times have reprinted interesting excerpts from the revelations of the former Ambassador to Berlin.

Previous to the appearance of a line of the story, the Ledger had carried on an extensive advertising campaign in the trade press and in dominant newspapers from coast to coast, arousing the public's curiosity as to the contents of the "little black bag" which Mr. Gerard brought with him from Germany and which he so zealously guarded. He trusted its safe-keeping to no man but himself and at each hotel where he stopped he personally deposited the bag in the house safe.

Naturally, such a story as Mr. Gerard's appeared to be attracted stiff competition among newspaper publishers as well as magazine and book people for the publication rights both in serial and book form and the Public Ledger assigned Raymond G. Carroll, one of its correspondents, to the task of approaching the former Ambassador.

Mr. Carroll was the last man to see Mr. Gerard on the publication question and returned to Philadelphia with a forty-eight-hour option on the story, whereupon Mr. Curtis promptly went to New York and closed the deal in ten minutes.

Many amusing stories have been told of the relations between noted writers and their publishers, but the conversation which ensued when this contract was closed will probably mark a new epoch in American literature.

When publisher and statesmen met they grasped hands, for the first time in several months. Both had been friends in former years and both had always stood for the same ideals. After the exchange of greetings Mr. Curtis said:

"Well, Judge, I understand you

PRODUCTION IN LOUISIANA IS INCREASING THE STATE'S WEALTH

The Times-Picayune Leads All Other Mediums in New Orleans Producing for Advertisers

Approximately one-half of all the sulphur in the world is produced in Louisiana, and this state is the largest producer of rice and cane sugar in America. With one exception Louisiana is the largest manufacturer of lumber in the world. It has the largest salt deposits in the world, and its chief city, New Orleans, is the largest manufacturing city in the South. Louisiana is about sixth in the production of oil and gas in the United States. Its crops alone this year will amount to $170,000,000. Many mills, factories and the navy yard are working overtime. Banks of the state never had such a volume of money on deposit. Retail stores had the best July business they ever knew.

THE TIMES PICAYUNE

"GREATEST NEWSPAPER SOUTH"

Business conditions are further reflected in the advertising columns of The Times-Picayune—the largest volume any New Orleans medium ever knew. For the first seven months of 1917 it amounted to 4,329,592 lines—922,584 lines more than its nearest competitor and 1,351,143 lines more than its next nearest, and this without advertisements of liquor, beer or alcoholic beverages in The Times-Picayune. Every month gave an increase over last year.

The Times-Picayune produces, hence its advertising patronage.

Besides prestige with the people The Times-Picayune has a larger circulation adjacent to the stores of New Orleans than any other medium—82 per cent of its entire circulation being city and suburban. The Audit Bureau of Circulations has just issued its report on The Times-Picayune. Get a copy, analyze it and see for yourself.

The report shows that The Times-Picayune makes truthful statements to the Bureau, and does not try to mislead its advertisers.

are to write the book I am to publish. How much do you want for the rights?"

"I don't know," replied Mr. Gerard. "I never wrote a book before and I haven't any idea as to values."

"You've had some offers," said Mr. Curtis. "Give me an idea of the best figure offered you."

The former Ambassador smiled, added that he had so many different kinds of offers he really could not differentiate between them. Then he named a price which was well up in the five figures.

"If I buy the rights," said Mr. Curtis, "I want everything—book rights, too, as well as the newspaper serial rights."

The judge pondered a minute and then named a sum three times the amount first suggested.

"Very good," answered Mr. Curtis quietly. "I'll take it. Don't you want me to sign an agreement or a contract?"

"Not a bit of it," replied Mr. Gerard. "Your word is good enough for me. I'm glad that you are to be my publisher and I hope that your judgment is justified."

To advertise the work and the publication in the Public Ledger, Mr. Curtis spent a sum as large as the amount paid for his purchase, indicating his faith in his own teachings—liberal expenditures for judicious advertising.

The German censorship on August 8 placed its ban temporarily upon publication of the writings of former Ambassador Gerard in German papers.

AD AND NEWS PROBLEMS FADE OVER DINNER TABLES.

Editorial and advertising departmental dinners to discuss matters in connection with the work of those in the departments have been inaugurated by the St. Paul Dispatch and Pioneer Press.

The first advertising department dinner was held last week, presided over by A. J. McFaul, director of advertising, at which it was announced that dinners would be held every second Monday evening. A chairman, J. J. Bennett of the display department, was appointed to have charge of the next meeting and instructed to assign five topics to five different men for ten-minute speeches. A general discussion is to follow the talks, the entire dinner not to last more than two hours.

The editorial department held its first dinner on August 2, more than fifty being present. H. R. Galt, managing editor, said the dinner was a meeting place where all could get acquainted and where everyone could speak frankly with regard to the work of others in the department or of the Dispatch Printing Company itself.

Ray Schroeder spoke for the reporters, touching on the ancient enmity of reporters and the copy readers and suggesting certain matters which could be rectified by the Dispatch Printing Company with regard to equipment.

C. U. McDowell answered for the copy desk, suggesting a closer co-operation between reporters and copy readers, and also pointed out where changes could benefit the company, the reporters and the copy readers.

D. DeLong spoke generally of mistakes made by the reporters and copy readers.

As a result of this meeting, a number of suggestions made by the speakers already have been made effective.

The editorial department's next meeting probably will be about September 1.

Both the advertising and editorial departments were, and will be at future meetings, guests of the Dispatch Printing Company, the dinners being served in the Dispatch Printing Company's own tea rooms by its own force.

The Green (La.) Press has suspended publication.

FOREIGN PULP AND PAPER CONDITIONS.

SWEDISH PULP EMBARGO TO ENGLAND LIFTED—EFFECTS AROUSE INTEREST HERE—HARD TIMES IN FRANCE.

In his current report on the world's paper and pulp conditions, George F. Steele, secretary of the News Print Manufacturers Association, says:

Pulp markets in England eased off toward the end of June due to the arrival of large shipments from Canada and the United States and also because of the running out of British licenses to import.

The North American pulp can be purchased in England at a lower figure than is asked for the Scandinavian product, as freights and insurances are considerably lower than those from Scandinavia.

On July 1 the British Paper Commission issued a renewal of licenses for importing up to the first of October, but it is not yet known how the new buying affected the general market situation, although English papers are united on the fact that British buyers expect to close at much lower prices than have recently been asked by the Scandinavians.

Sweden has lifted its embargo on the shipment of chemical pulp to England and it will be interesting to note what effect this move will have on the British and American markets. This question has been carefully followed by exporters and importers of pulp for a possible effect on the United States market.

Sweden placed an embargo on chemical pulp shipments to England in retaliation for the embargo on the shipment of coal and other commodities from England to Sweden. This has worked a great hardship on the English paper maker by a starvation of the market, a forced limitation of the production of some grades of paper and the forcing of chemical pulp prices to unheard-of heights. Many attempts have been made to bring about a reconciliation which have only now culminated in success.

The effect of this measure on market conditions both here and in England is hardly expected to be serious. In the first place, there is a serious shortage of bottoms and both Sweden and England will endeavor to fill the available space with the most important and most valuable cargoes. England only allows importation of chemical pulp to the extent of one-fourth of the quantity imported in 1914, and further controls these imports by the license system.

Unfilled licenses in England are few and a large part of the expected imports is contracted for with Norwegian and North American firms.

The final importance of the raising of this embargo, the first of the week ending July 23, will depend largely on the shipping situation as regards submarine activities.

There was a slight change in the world's pulp markets in June. Freight in some instances were lower and some parcels of pulp were sold at easier prices. Imports into England were on a larger scale than for some months, but production in both Norway and Sweden is at a low point. Unfilled licenses are few, but upon their renewal a more brisk trade is expected.

FRANCE.

The paper crisis in France is going from bad to worse, according to the New York Herald's Paris correspondent, and the French papers, in spite of the great reduction in the size of their editions, have but three months' supplies on hand. Some Paris newspapers have appeared as a single sheet four days a week, while all observe the recent decree of the Government limiting the papers to two pages twice a week. The press generally is advocating the increase of street sales from one cent to two cents.

According to a French correspondent of L'Industria della Carta, Milan, Italy, June 1, there is a strong feeling that the expression of public opinion and the publication of information vital to the French nation at this time will be dangerously impaired if further reductions are enforced. The difficulties attending the importation of pulp and paper are fully understood, and the press is looking to a curtailment of the use of paper by the Government and the limiting of catalogs, posters, etc., to partially relieve the shortage.

HOLLAND.

Following is the report from the American consul at Amsterdam, published in Commerce Reports:

"Newspapers and periodical publications in general give practically no evidence of a scarcity of printing paper in Holland on account of the war. Daily newspapers usually have a morning and an evening edition every day excepting Sunday, when there is no evening edition. The only observable economy now practiced is the suspension of the Monday morning edition, by direction of the Government. This was done with a view to economy in fuel.

"There also seems to be no scarcity of paper for book printing in Holland. Statistics just published give the number of books produced in the Netherlands during the last five years and show a steady increase in the publication of books except for the year 1914, when panicky conditions followed the beginning of hostilities.

"In normal times about 80 per cent of the printing paper used in Holland was made here and 20 per cent imported from Germany. Now the import from Germany is only 5 to 10 per cent of the total consumption, the rest being made locally. There is no present scarcity of paper in Holland, and no prospect of any unless the shortage of fuel reduces the production of it.

ITALY.

There is little new in the Italian situation, according to L'Industria della Carta, Milan, Italy, June 1, 1917, except that both the paper makers and the newspapers are at odds with the Government over the handling of the paper situation.

The publishers criticize the limiting of the size of their publications and the waste of paper by the Government, and the provincial papers state that while the general price for news print paper is $140.11 per short ton, they have to pay $202.22. The claim is made that the Government has furnished coal at cost price to mills manufacturing other grades of paper than news print and that some of this paper has been exported to the advantage of the mills rather than the publishers and the public. It is also claimed that the importation of materials was hampered because the Government would not remove the customs tariff. The shortage of paper is becoming more acute and there is little chance of betterment in conditions until after the war.

ARGENTINA.

The following article has appeared in the World's Paper Trade Review, London:

"There has been presented to the Ministry of Agriculture a proposal of a Norwegian capitalist, residing in New York, to establish a paper mill in the Territory of del Fuego, Argentina. The necessary capital for the construction and maintenance of the mill has already been provided. The idea having been accepted in principle by the head of the ministry, two Norwegian engineers left for Ushuaia to study the region and select the most advantageous point for the establishment of the mill.

"The technical reports agree in recognizing the good quality of some of the woods of the territory for industrial uses, and especially for the manufacture of paper pulp. The resulting proposal to the Government includes the future creation of a line of direct sea communication between Ushuaia and Buenos Aires."

If this project is consummated and the mill produces an appreciable tonnage, it will unquestionably have an effect on the South American market for exporters.

GERMANY.

According to Tidsskrift for Papirindustri, Christiania, Norway, June 15, 1917, the Newspaper Publishers Association, of which all the larger Berlin papers and papers in the large cities in Germany are members, sent the following telegram to the German chancellor on May 8:

"The Association of Newspaper Publishers of the large cities respectfully begs to report that there is imminent danger that the Berlin newspapers, owing to the paper famine, will not be able to appear on and after the last days of this week or the beginning of next week. Because of the fatal political consequences, which the standstill of the great daily press of Berlin unavoidably would cause to our Fatherland, we beg your excellency immediately to prevail upon the authorities to do everything possible to secure a sufficient paper supply for our newspapers, and especially to supply the news print mills with necessary quantities of coal."

"In his answer to this petition the Chancellor states that the shortage of news print paper depends on the difficulties of distributing coal, and assures the association that the Government constantly tries to provide all the important industries, and among them the news print mills, with the necessary coal. He expresses the hope that within a short time the news print mills will have received sufficient coal, but at the same time he accentuates the fact that the war industry must have preference, and warns the newspapers that it may be necessary to reduce their consumption of paper.

"The explanation of the Chancellor is not greeted with satisfaction in the Berlin press, and has resulted in an attack on the Department of the Interior.

"That Germany, in spite of its abundance of all raw materials for the production of paper, suffers from a shortage of paper, depends, asserts the Berliner Morgenpost, upon the deplorable fact that the authorities, and especially the Department of the Interior, have engaged in obligations to export, which can be done only at the expense of the domestic consumption. Not only is coal exported in great quantities, but, despite the domestic shortage, the exports of paper are continued freely. The (Continued on Twenty-sixth Page)

"THINGS DOING" IN THE SOUTH.

TOPICS OF THE MOMENT OF INTEREST TO PUBLISHERS
—S. N. P. A. BUSY.

The membership of the Southern Newspaper Publisher Association is now 100. A survey of the daily papers in the 12 Southern states represented in the S. N. P. A. shows that about 60 daily papers are of sufficient size to justify their becoming members of the association. In view of the fact that the annual dues will remain at $12.50, it is thought that a large number of these non-members will be coming members of the association during the next twelve months.

The legislative committee of the S. N. P. A., elected at the recent convention, has already demonstrated that it is on the job. Major E. B. Stahlman, Nashville (Tenn.) Banner, has been in close touch with the two members of his committee, Colonel L. J. Wirtham, Fort Worth (Tex.) Star-Telegram, and Colonel Robert Ewing, of the New Orleans Daily States.

In anticipation of the war revenue bill being considered at a very early date and especially those sections affecting newspapers, the committee has arranged to be in Washington in ample time to appear before Congress in behalf of Southern daily papers. Headquarters have been established at the New Willard Hotel.

According to the stereotyper of the Macon (Ga.) Daily Telegraph, who for the past twelve months has been making experiments with old mats, the most satisfactory plan is as follows:

"Soak in water 3 or 4 hours, strip reds and tissue from blotter, spread out blotters on apron on steam tables to dry and use when dry same as new blotters, pasting newspaper on in place of red rags, use 2 or 3 tissues, as suits your case best; best results obtained by laying over for 20 hours for seasoning or making your mats tonight for tomorrow night's use. If mats are hard to strip, just wet blanket and let stand for several days or a week; you will find will strip easily, using old blotters saves time in pasting so many newspapers."

Evidences that a large stock of West India tissue is now on hand in this country have been received in the announcement of supply dealers to the effect that several shipments have recently passed the customs and they are now able to fill orders. The prices now quoted as compared with that of ninety days ago reveals the fact that practically all matrix papers have taken a drop.

For a number of years Southern publications have classified as objectionable all advertising of labor wanted received from sources outside of their immediate territory.

While it is doubtful if this had any effect in checking the migration of negro laborers to the North and East, owing to the activity of labor agents, a great many seem to think that it was the means of retaining desirable skilled labor in the South and especially in their own sections.

The great demand for labor at the present time and especially in certain points throughout the South is causing a number of Southern papers to receive orders for insertion of advertising calling for labor.

While some papers have accepted these ads, a great many have gone on the theory that community interest demands that they decline to publish any advertising of this nature. They state that local contractors and builders are having great difficulty in obtaining labor themselves, even though they are paying high wages.

The Savannah Morning News, of which F. G. Bell, president of the S.N.P.A., is publisher, has up to the present time lost nine men, who are now in the national service or have volunteered for service at the Officers' Training Camps. Numbers of other daily papers throughout the South have been affected in a like manner. They are managing to meet the situation, although it is expected that the selective draft will make further inroads on the editorial and business staffs and mechanical departments. How to meet these situations is proving quite a problem with many publishers.

The Atlanta Georgian and American, W. G. Bryan, publisher, are using a neat little envelope folder entitled, "Business as Usual." This contains a reprint of four editorials, from a collection of twenty-six, which recently appeared in that paper. There is little doubt but that these editorials are largely responsible for having kept the wheels of business turning in Atlanta and giving them a momentum which is keeping things moving with a hum.

The New Orleans (La.) Times-Picayune is sending out an attractive folder containing the reproduction of the advertisements placed in the Times-Picayune in behalf of the War Council of the American Red Cross. The copy was prepared and sold by the Advertising Club of New Orleans under the direction of the publicity committee and $670,000 was raised, $170,000 more than the allotment of the New Orleans district.

The Van Noy Interstate Company, operating railroad news and hotel service, through its general superintendent, H. C. Koehler, is writing publishers as follows:

"For a number of years you have been printing in your paper the following notice:

"Traveling Men, Attention!

"When you are through with this paper on the train, throw it to the first gang of section men you pass, so they can read and enjoy it. They will appreciate it."

"I have always thought that it was a waste of good paper to throw it to the average section gang as of late years section laborers throughout the country have been of a foreign element, who could not read English, but I think that you have a chance now to change the wording a little bit so that it will do a world of good, and permit me to suggest that you change it to read something like this:

"Owing to the war conditions existing in this country today, nearly every bridge, viaduct and tunnel throughout the country is guarded by our soldiers, who have little or no chance to buy a daily paper or reading matter of any kind. If you will throw this paper off to one of them when you are through with it, or a magazine you may have read, we feel sure that it would be much appreciated."

The Weight of War

The heavy hand of war has distributed the balance between supply and demand the world over. Our problem of serving the public has all at once assumed a new and weightier aspect.

Extraordinary demands on telephone service by the Government have been made and are being met. Equipment must be provided for the great training camps, the coast-defense stations must be linked together by means of communication, and the facilities perfected to put the Government in touch with the entire country at a moment's notice.

In planning for additions to the plant of the Bell System for 1917, one hundred and thirty millions of dollars were apportioned. This is by far the largest program ever undertaken.

But the cost of raw materials has doubled in a year. Adequate supplies of copper, lead, wire, steel and other essentials of new equipment are becoming harder to get at any price, for the demands of war must be met.

Under the pressure of business incident to war, the telephone-using public must co-operate in order that our new plans to meet the extraordinary growth in telephone stations and traffic may be made adequate.

The elimination of unnecessary telephone calls is a patriotic duty just as is the elimination of all waste at such a time. Your Government must have a "clear talk track."

has filed application for membership in the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association, and thereby hangs a tale. Service, personnel, dues, privileges, etc., did not enter into the consideration which prompted the paper to become number one hundred and six on the association's membership roster.

The name of the business manager of the Jackson News happens to be Walter C. Johnson, who is no kith or kin to the individual of the same name who occupies a similar position on the Chattanooga (Tenn.) News, when his time is not taken up as secretary-treasurer of the S.N. P.A.

When Johnson of Jackson observed that Johnson of Chattanooga bore the same initials as himself and was also an executive officer of the association in which he had been importuned to join a number of times, he hastened to file the application.

Application has been filed at Nashville, Tenn., for the incorporation of the Tennessee Paper Mill Company, with a capital stock of $200,000, of which $100,000 has already been subscribed. The mill will be located in Chattanooga. Experienced paper men have been engaged to look after the manufacturing end. In the beginning only two kinds of paper will be manufactured, straw board and chip board. As this product is manufactured largely from waste paper and straw, it will open up a market for a great deal of waste paper. The purpose of the promoters is to eventually manufacture other grades of paper.

THE GUARANTEE VALUE OF TRADE MARKS.

WHY ADVERTISING IT IS A DISTINCT AND DIRECT BENEFIT TO THE PUBLIC AND NEEDS AD FOLKS' ATTENTION.

BY THOMAS E. WILSON,
President of Wilson & Co., Chicago.

I wish that all advertising managers, advertising representatives, publishers, and so on, would increase their efforts to drive home to the consumer the guarantee value of the trade-mark.

Much good work has been done and is being done along this line, and certainly there never was a day when more intensified work of this nature was demanded.

It will be a distinct and direct benefit to the public. Show the consumer that the prices of trade-marked goods do not fluctuate as rapidly as those of goods which have no trade-mark.

Show them, for instance, that while wheat—an untrade-marked commodity—advanced over $2 per bushel in the past year, the prices on trade-marked meat products and even on dressed beef which cannot be trade-marked, certainly did not go up in proportion, and at no time has the price of meats given the packer more than his normal profit in normal times.

The meat industry has suffered from criticism. People have come to think that meat is an expensive food, when it is not by any means, as compared to many other necessities for the table. A potato never bears a trade-mark, and you know how the price of potatoes jumped in a month's time, while trade-marked bacon and hams advanced in a most reluctant manner.

Teach the consumer to look for the trade-mark, to insist upon receiving trade-marked goods. With truth in advertising there has to be truth in the trade-mark and truth in the trade-marked goods.

This will result in better business for the institution which puts its good faith behind its trade-mark and in its products. It will result in better business for the advertising and publishing fraternity.

And most of all it will result in better business methods in the household. It will mean greater economy, less waste and better satisfaction.

It will increase the value of advertising to the advertiser, and it will be another big step toward proving finally that advertising lowers the ultimate cost to the consumer.

A trade-mark is three kinds of an advertisement—it is a reminder, it is an identification and it is collateral against consumer-loss.

The consumer has not yet fully realized the real value of the trade-mark. He does not yet give it its rightful place as the downright pledge of the manufacturer that the goods on which it appears are guaranteed to him both as to value and quantity.

He does see in the trademark a means of identification; and the trade-mark does service as a reminder to him when he is in the buying mood.

In our organization we look upon our trade-mark as something more than a mere symbol of identification, something to serve the purpose of a string tied around the finger to stimulate memory.

In fact, I believe that practically every manufacturer of trade-marked goods is producing better goods and selling them at more reasonable prices because they carry his trade-mark.

His trade-mark on his goods is to him the same as his signature on a check.

Into his trade-mark goes everything that makes up his business. By itself, considered as a simple design, it signifies nothing unless it is regarded by the manufacturer as absolutely the finishing touch to his product.

It stands for good faith; it carries with it the personality, the principles, the ideals of the manufacturer.

We say of our own trade-mark: "This mark is your guaranty." We mean just that. In the case of food products the trade-mark is of a great deal more importance, to my mind, than in other lines of endeavor.

EFFECT ON THE BUYER.

The buyer of a food product has to believe in it if he is going to eat it. Our trade-mark, we emphasize, is a guaranty that the product is worth eating.

With us, our trade-mark means that every step in the preparation of the product on which it appears has been right. It covers everything, from the selection of the live stock, or fruits, or other raw materials, to their transportation to our plants, their inspection, handling, preparation and packing. We made of our trade-mark the symbol of the respect we give the food products we offer to the public.

I am using this personal illustration because I want to write along lines with which I am familiar, and our business is the one I know best.

When I took my present position I made up my mind that any man or woman anywhere on earth could buy a Wilson product with the definite knowledge that it was just what we represented it to be.

And that is why we try to inform the public that the "W" shaped label with the big red "W" trade-mark is the finishing touch, the hall mark of quality, the authoritative stamp that everything is "O.K." from start to finish. We want the people to accept that label and that trade-mark at 100 per cent face value, because we honestly put that belief in it ourselves.

Now, the reason I am dwelling for these few moments on the trade-mark from this viewpoint is that to my mind it has a most important and most lasting connection with advertising.

You can invent almost any kind of a trade-mark. It may be clever; it may be attractive; it may be unusual. You can put it on almost any kind of goods. They may be high priced, they may be low priced, they may be rare, they may be common. But the value of the trade-mark itself will be determined by the value the consumer places on the product.

The consumer can't eat the trade-mark; he can't wear it; he can't sing it or drive it. But he can eat, wear, sing, drive, drink or otherwise use the article on which the trade-mark appears.

If he is satisfied with his purchase that trade-mark forever afterward reminds him of a good investment and he repeats that investment.

If he is dissatisfied with his purchase, every time he sees that trade-mark it is a danger signal to him, and through his comments to every person he knows.

But if that trade-mark has been given some standing with that consumer it is going to mean a lot more to him than merely a beckoning finger or a warning hand.

If he has come to regard that trade-mark as something which says to him that the product on which it appears has got to live up to what that trade-mark means in the business world, then he knows beforehand that there is going to be one of two things in connection with his purchase.

Either the goods are going to please him, are going to live up to his conception of his own money's worth—

Or, for the mere reason that the product bears that trade-mark, he is not going to be allowed to lose a penny because the goods by chance are not up to their proper standard of quality or quantity.

I have said that the value of the trade-mark will be determined by the value the consumer puts upon the product after buying and using it. And that is correct.

No matter how well advertised anything is, when you or I buy it we insist that that article stand back of its own advertising. And so, when we buy anything whose trade-mark or trade names has been "sold" to us by advertising, we demand the final evidence from the goods for which we have spent our good money.

Thus a trade-mark might be a liability instead of an asset to a manufacturer who was foolish enough to put it on goods which would not back it up to the limit.

But before the consumer puts his first valuation on the trade-mark, which is the valuation of buying-belief, he has to know what the trade-mark is, where he will see it, and what it means when he sees it.

WHERE ADVERTISING COMES IN.

There is where advertising comes in and comes in right.

When we buy advertising space—and we buy a good deal of it—we buy it, if you please, as we do live stock.

It is raw material for us. We buy it because that space looks good to us. We buy it because we know where it was bred and fed, so to speak. We buy it at the market price, as judiciously as we can, and we use it as we do every other raw material we get—for the benefit of ourselves, our dealers and our customers.

Sometimes we buy advertising space as we put up a new plant—we look at it as an investment that is sure to show an ultimate profit. But when we put up a new plant, we do not build it in a location where the supply of live stock is limited and where the facilities for shipping the finished products are so small that the goods cannot be moved.

And when we buy space as an investment we see to it that it offers the proper sources of supply and means of development. The meat industry operates on an extremely small margin of profit, and our advertising has to show its investment value.

In the main, however, our advertising investments are made on what looks to us as an immediately profitable basis. The question is not, "Will it pay?" but "Will it pay now?"

We packers have been paying the farmer around $16 a hundred for his hogs for several months. Believe me, when you see a husky porker scampering about the pen and realize that you've got to put up sixteen cents for every pound of it just as it stands, and then convert that hog into pork ribs and shoulders and hams and bacon and lard and curled hair and sausage and so forth, you have to do some mental arithmetic.

And when those pork products reach the consumer by way of the dealer, the packer's margin of profit has been so slight that he must create a huge volume of sales in order for his profit to be respectable.

Here, then, as so many of my advertising friends have told me so eloquently and so earnestly, is where advertising comes in. And I want to pay them the compliment of saying that their arguments are sound and their promises are right, and I only wish the margin in our business were wide enough to allow us to respond as we feel like responding to every one of them—with a nice big order.

But we can't buy all the live stock that is driven into the stock yards, and we can't assimilate all the advertising space that we wish we owned.

I am often asked what is our preference among advertising mediums. In fact, I have had a great many letters, telegrams and personal inquiries on that point in the past few weeks.

We believe in all kinds of advertising—each kind properly used. I believe in applying the proper advertising remedy to correct or improve the condition demanding advertising.

POINT OF VIEW.

Right here I am going to say a few words on advertising agencies. I have come in contact with a great

BOOKS USEFUL TO EDITORS AND ADVERTISERS.

"THE STREET OF INK," by H. Simonis. Funk & Wagnalls Company, publisher.

If the reader wants an ably written, chatty survey of the British press of 1917, with first-hand anecdotes of leading British publishers, Mr. Simonis has provided both in his well-titled book. Fleet street, the "street of ink," stands for newspapers and journalism in Great Britain just as indelibly as Park Row formerly represented New York's great dailies. And this book is nothing more nor less than a history of modern English journalism, entire chapters being devoted to the "high lights" in the existence of John Bull's best newspapers.

To the British trade press, Mr. Simonis pays a high tribute, giving special attention to the Newspaper World and its editor, Charles Baker, who received his inspiration for the paper in 1898 from a copy of THE FOURTH ESTATE which had reached him by chance.

There is also an interesting chapter on American and French journalism, as seen by a Briton. Of American publishers, Mr. Simonis has singled out for mention James Gordon Bennett, the late Whitelaw Reid and William Randolph Hearst, whom he calls "the Pierpont Morgan of journalism."

"CHURCH ADVERTISING, ITS WHY AND HOW," Compiled by W. R. Ashley; J. B. Lippincott Company, publisher.

This is a collection of papers on church publicity delivered before the church advertising department of the Philadelphia convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs. Mr. Ashley is executive secretary of that department and was formerly associate editor of the Christian Herald.

"TYPOGRAPHY OF ADVERTISEMENTS THAT PAY," by Gilbert T. Farrar; D. Appleton & Co., publishers.

One of the strongest factors in the success of an advertising man is his knowledge of the proper use of type in his messages to the public—a knowledge that can be gained only by study and experience. Mr. Farrar's work is an excellent text book for the young advertising man, giving explanations and examples of the proper combinations of types and engravings in the production of effective advertising.

"IN THE CLAWS OF THE GERMAN EAGLE," by Albert Rhys Williams; E. P. Dutton & Co., publishers.

The very frankness and evident impartiality of this narrative of the German drive through Belgium in 1914, neither conferring praise nor blame nor withholding it from the invaders has claimed to third place dener in increasing the land's yield vaders, is a damning indictment of the "Boche" and of the institution of war in general. Mr. Williams is an American writer, well known as a social worker, and saw practically all of what he describes at first hand, often at considerable personal risk and with the assistance of remarkable ingenuity. The book is an excellent impressionistic record of the opening days of the Great War.

"LEGAL POINTS FOR AUTOMOBILE OWNERS," by Leslie Childs, J. S. Ogilvie Publishing Company, publisher.

While the several states have various rules governing the ownership and operation of automobiles within their limits, there are a few general principles which run through all such statutes and it is with these that Mr. Childs would familiarize the automobilist. He also takes up exceptions to the general rules, giving the states in which they apply.

"STORY OF THE AUTOMOBILE," by H. I. Barber; A. J. Munson & Co., publishers.

Mr. Barber, a well known economist and financial writer, gives the history and development of the automobile from 1760 to 1917, with an analysis of the standing and prospects of the motor car industry.

The book answers many pertinent questions about the development of the automobile and the intelligent reader will be able to draw his own conclusions about the future of an industry which in a comparatively few years has climbed to third place among American industries, passing the billion dollar sales mark in 1916.

It will be useful to buyers and sellers of advertising either in the motor or the motor accessory field.

"THE MENACE OF JAPAN," by Frederick McCormick; Little, Brown & Co., publishers.

America's relations with China and Japan, understood and misunderstood in many ways in this country are set forth in great detail by Mr. McCormick, for years a journalist at Far Eastern capitals. He sees war as an inevitable consequence of Japanese ambition and American insistence on the "Open Door" principle for China, coupled with diplomatic errors by American statesmen.

There are also some interesting references to the part played by American journalists, notably Melville E. Stone, general manager of the Associated Press, in American-Japanese relations. The work is likely to achieve considerable currency among editorial writers, as it affords a valuable background for a more technical study of the situation with regard to the possible turn of affairs in future years.

"THE JOYOUS ART OF GARDENING," by Frances Duncan; Charles Scribner's Sons, publishers.

With the stress of war demanding that every available patch of ground pay its own way in providing food for the country, knowledge of what to plant and how to cultivate it is of value to the amateur farmer or gar-

This is the aim of the author, which she carries out well in this book.

"GUIDE TO THE STUDY OF ACCOUNTING," by Samuel F. Racine, C. P. A.; Western Institute of Accountancy, Commerce and Finance, publisher.

For the young man preparing to enter the field of scientific accounting this book by an expert in the subject provides much food for profitable thought. Over 750 problems are included, with sample state examinations for the degree of certified public accountant.

"THE HOTEL BUTCHER, GARDE-MANGER AND CARVER," by Frank Rivers; Hotel Monthly Press, publisher.

Suggestions for the buying, handling, sale and service of food stuffs in hotels, restaurants, clubs and institutions are given by one who has spent thirty years in various branches of kitchen, pantry and store-room work and has also served as steward and buyer.

"THE STANDARD DICTIONARY OF FACTS" and "THE STANDARD QUESTION BOOK AND HOME STUDY OUTLINES," Frontier Press Co., publisher.

An excellent reference work on most subjects of interest to school children is accompanied by a question book, which if properly used, can greatly aid the reader in increasing his general knowledge.

"ENGLISH SYNONYMS, ANTONYMS AND PREPOSITIONS," by James C. Fernald; Funk & Wagnalls Company, publisher.

Common words, with their uses and variations, are discussed briefly and simply by the author, who is the editor of a similar department for the Standard Dictionary. It is designed as an aid in the study and as a textbook for use in schools.

"THE NEW PEERLESS SCHOOL AND OFFICE DICTIONARY," editor-in-chief, George J. Hagar; Adair & Petty, publishers.

Mr. Hagar, editor of Harper's "Encyclopedia of United States History" and other works, has based this dictionary on the principles laid down by Noah Webster and other lexicographers, this edition being enlarged, revised and modernized by the American Board of Lexicography. It is illustrated and well printed.

"OBSTACLES TO PEACE," by S. S. McClure; Houghton-Mifflin Company, publisher.

For a logical and comprehensive survey of the European conditions that brought about the war, those that enhance its continuance and those which stand in the way of its settlement, this work by a well known American magazine and newspaper editor is the equal of any that has

WHY N. Y. STOCK EXCHANGE SHOULD ADVERTISE.

PUBLIC GOOD WILL, STIMULATED BY KNOWLEDGE OF EXCHANGE'S HIGH AIMS, WILL MEAN BETTER BUSINESS.

BY MACLAY & MULLALLY, INC.,

(Copyright, 1917. Reproduced by permission.)

No criticism can be fairly said to be constructive unless it suggests a practical alternative.

It is with this point in mind that we have stated the following reasons for a campaign of paid publicity which, by its very character, disposes of any possible objection that might be raised to a similar effort on the part of biased or prejudiced individuals or organizations.

Such a campaign faithfully represents the true purpose and policy of this all-important market, because the public naturally has confidence in announcements appearing over the paid signature of a responsible organization.

The New York Stock Exchange is a world institution. Through its members and the great banking interests the exchange is an integral part of industrial, commercial and financial progress everywhere.

As the world's greatest money market and financial clearing house, the exchange is to an exceptional degree open to the attacks of the unthinking, the prejudiced, the misinformed and the deliberately vicious.

ANTAGONISM DUE TO IGNORANCE.

Not only is this antagonism basically wrong and almost wholly vicious—it is to a great degree unnecessary. It can be rendered practically innocuous. The exchange itself must make proper use of the very weapon which has so often in the past been turned against it—the compelling force of public opinion.

How much more effectively can intelligently directed effort create general enthusiasm and good will by the simple means of acquainting the public with the facts in the case.

In no great branch of activity in the world is it so emphatically true that confidence is the keynote of trading, as in Stock Exchange transactions. Destroy public confidence and the market tumbles like a house of cards. Recent financial history is full of the disasters caused by the loss of this confidence, and everyone appreciates the slow and difficult task of restoring it.

Outside of Wall Street and the financial centers few people realize, and fewer still appreciate, the wise and timely action of the exchange in averting country-wide disaster by closing its doors in August, 1914. The successful efforts of the exchange within the last decade in driving out bucket shops, suspending unscrupulous members and making it unprofitable for any stock selling organization to do business on other than legitimate lines, is little understood by the public.

THE PUBLIC SHOULD BE ENLIGHTENED

How much more profitable it would be for all interests concerned if the Stock Exchange took the public wholly into its confidence—explained in terse business English the intricacies of financial operations and security markets and replaced widespread suspicion with general public good will.

Such a process is simplicity itself. It requires only a campaign of education along broad, well matured and permanent lines. Not only has the public an unquestioned right to know about the exchange and its dealings, but it would be greatly to the advantage of the institution, its members and the country's prominent banking interests, that the public be fully informed.

The public doubts only because it does not know. Tell it. It is suspicious solely by reason of its belief that the Stock Exchange purposely draws the veil of mystery around many of its transactions.

Favorable publicity is all that is required. It can be obtained along the same basically sound lines so successfully employed in creating public good will for many of the greatest and most successful commercial institutions in America.

Make known the fact that the research department of the exchange is always at the service of the public on all matters financial—that the bureau of information welcomes inquiry regarding and security dealt in by its member firms.

Tell what the exchange is—why it has grown to be such a vitally important factor in world finance, commerce and industry and its necessity as the greatest central money market ever known.

Explain the wonderful police power of the exchange, and the thoroughness with which this power is constantly being exercised.

Demonstrate the fact that the exchange is the lever which gives mobility to capital and flexibility to credit—without which the great railroad, industrial and commercial systems of the country and the world could not continue to serve the public along present lines.

Let it be widely known that the exchange is governed by the strictest code of business ethics, and that even a suspicion of irregularity on the part of any of its members is the occasion for rigid inquiry and drastic action.

Acquaint the public with the fact that the exchange does not buy or sell anything—that it is solely a market place—that it dominates and to a great extent controls every other financial market in America because of the standing, character and probity of its members, its methods and its purposes.

Emphasize the point that under Federal or state control the exchange could not operate so greatly to the advantage of banking and commercial interests as it does today.

The Stock Exchange reflects manufacturing, commercial and economic conditions throughout America. It can do more to foster a favorable public attitude toward investments than any known agency.

With the great strength of its position as the central money market of the world, the exchange can tell its official story with such compelling force as to interest and favorably influence a great majority of the thoughtful investors everywhere throughout the United States. In doing this the exchange would be performing an act of far-reaching and permanent public benefit. It would advance its own interests as an exchange and also those of its members, its allied banks and trust companies, and all who are connected in any way with financial circles everywhere.

More than ever before, the public wants to know the facts regarding investment. It has a right to know these facts—it will know or it will not invest.

Let it be known that the Exchange will promptly undertake the investigation of seemingly questionable transactions between the public and any of its members. Drive home the fact that the successful operation of the exchange is of personal importance to every business man, whether or not he buys or sells a single share of stock.

Were it not for the exchange his banks would not keep on loaning him money—his local mills could not get capital for needed raw material purchases or factory additions—his town would find no market for municipal improvement bonds—it would be impossible for the railroad on which he lives to maintain its present service to shippers and travelers—and neither the state nor the nation could undertake these great public enterprises which make for the progress of civilization.

The exchange is a business necessity. Wherever its integrity may be questioned, the fault lies in the fact that the public—even that large percentage which wants the real truth—misinterprets the sensational financial articles which have appeared in the press.

Generally it is true that the interests involved in questionable transactions, have nothing, even remotely, to do with the exchange; yet the public is prone to classify the deal as still another instance of pernicious stock gambling for which the exchange is held primarily responsible. For its own protection and for the protection of every financial and investing interest in the country, the Stock Exchange should tell its official story.

The economic necessity and commercial advantage of creating and maintaining public good will is splendidly exemplified in the development of dozens of the great manufacturing industries of the country, which spend millions of dollars annually in the public press to tell about their products. Each of these concerns has something to sell, and realizes that public confidence is prerequisite to public investment, no matter how small this investment may be.

In the field of informative publicity note the campaigns of the Guaranty Trust Company, the Bankers Trust Company, the interesting educational work of the Bell Telephone Company and many others. All of this publicity has for its purpose the creation and maintenance of public confidence and good will.

Of how much greater and far reaching importance is it that the New York Stock Exchange—engaged in a service that directly affects every commercial, industrial financial and economic interest in the country—should establish public confidence in the security market by telling its official story to the great American public.

The Exchange has never told this story.

The nearest is "The Stock Exchange From Within," which is filled from cover to cover with just the sort of information the public should have. Mr. Van Antwerp tells the story of the exchange in clear, crisp and interesting language, yet comparatively few people have seen his excellent brochure, or appreciate its value as an important contribution to the subject of American economics.

The story that the exchange should tell the public—the story that the public is not only willing but anxious to hear—can best be told through the great periodicals of national circulation, standing and influence. Several of these media maintain regular financial information departments for the benefit of investors.

This group of publications reaches and influences a larger percentage of intelligent citizens who are interested in investments than can possibly be approached through any other established channel of publicity.

Admitting that the primary function of the exchange is to bring capital and investment opportunity together on a mutually satisfactory basis, and that the exchange prospers in exact ratio as it successfully fulfills this function—it is clearly impossible to expect anything more than a traders' market unless the public is actively in sympathy with exchange plans, methods and results.

Properly applied to the present altogether unprecedented requirements of the financial situation, such a plan is certain to return steadily increasing dividends to the exchange, and the great railroad, industrial, commercial and financial interests of the country and the world.

These dividends will be—greater confidence, more general and intelligent investment interest, and wider security markets.

THE TIME IS OPPORTUNE

Never was there a more opportune time than the present to launch the campaign of education herein outlined. There is a far-reaching public interest in matters speculative and financial. Crystallize this interest—make it not only favorable to a degree hitherto unknown, but permanent and increasingly widespread, by informing the public fully as to the exchange and its methods in a series of official announcements in metropolitan newspapers and the leading magazines of America.

And do this before any decided change in market conditions opens the flood gates of an opposition which is certain to be the most bitter and adversely effective attempt to cripple not only the exchange itself but the great banking, financial and commercial interests of the country, unless the effort is not rendered ineffectual by the action of the exchange in forestalling it.

The recurring clamor of prominent and supposedly well informed legislators, "market professionals" and business men for Federal or state control—for incorporation of the exchange—for the restriction or practical elimination of legitimate speculation—can best be overcome by preparedness.

Continued public confidence and good will point the way to the permanent expansion of financial and investment markets, and a still greater increase in the powers and activities of the New York Stock Exchange.

THE NEWSPAPERS' SOCIAL SERVICE

MEANS OF WINNING READERS OF INTELLIGENCE AND AN AID TO GOOD WORK.

By FREDERIC B. HODGINS.

There are some newspapers which claim to be strictly newspapers and nothing more. There are, however, many more which claim to be positive moulders of public opinion in a constructive sense. There are comparatively few newspaper owners and publishers who wish to forgo the right to admonish and educate the public.

The editorial page is standing evidence that the role of critic and educator has not been abandoned by the newspaper press.

This being the case, it is useful to see just how the newspaper may be made what it claims to be—the chronicler, critic and reconstructor of human life.

That it is the chronicler of life goes without saying.

That it is the critic of life is also self-evident.

But is it the constructive educator of human endeavor? Many there be who would say that it was nothing of the kind. And these have many good arguments to support their assertion. But it would be unjust to agree with these critics unreservedly. They generalize from too narrow and restricted an outlook.

Let us try to see the newspaper as it really exists today.

Its primary business is, of course, to report the happenings of the world. This it does with amazing fullness and with equally amazing truthfulness, when the speed at which it has to work is taken into account. Cable and telegraph and even radiogram help to get the news for our daily consumption from every part of the world.

We read what has happened today as well as what happened yesterday. We have also forecasts of what is to happen tomorrow. And the forecasts are very likely to be true to the facts, for the newspaper is held in awe by the public as a power that cannot be lightly regarded. And publicity is desired by nearly all those who have to do the world's work.

But after all is said and done, the newspaper has really more to do than merely to print the happenings of yesterday, today and tomorrow. People look to it to advise them on the meaning of the news. They have not the time or the knowledge to interpret the news and its significance for themselves.

Here is the reason for the editorial page. It should be the clearing-house for the reader's difficulties. It should be a sort of "interpreter's house," where the public could be taught the meaning and import of all the news in the other departments of the paper.

I once heard it said that the wonderful success of the Christian Science Monitor, the daily paper of the Christian Science Church, was attributed by its managers, not to the patronage of their fellow-religionists, but to the fact that it made a specialty of those "by-products of life," so to speak, that most papers overlooked, viz: the home, education, religion, social service, and the like.

While the Monitor does not refuse to print the ordinary news of the day, it does try to give it some sort of ethical valuation and proportion. It reflects the true balance of the world's work and refuses to see only the evil and morbid happenings in it or to let it appear that they are the preponderating forces of the world's efforts.

It is of the opinion that the majori-

BEST IN THE WORLD

"American business men do not realize the value which trade journals and technical magazines may have for them in increasing the efficiency of their factories and in giving them a broad and comprehensive view of their business.

"Our foreign competitors read almost every article published upon their business with great care and thoroughness. Many of them have duplicate copies of their favorite trade paper sent to their homes so that they may read them away from the business without being disturbed. Many foreign manufacturers contribute articles to these journals on phases of the business with which they are most familiar. Such articles are bound to be helpful and have a constructive effect.

"Our trade journals and technical papers are the best in the world, and they should be supported and encouraged by our business men. Copies should be placed where employees can see them and they should be urged to read and study them.

"These papers are preaching the gospel of sound business on practical lines and are helpful not only to business but to the country as a whole.

"If the suggestions made by them in the past had been followed by our business men it would not be necessary at this time to point out some of the fundamental weaknesses in American business."

ty of people are sane-minded and engaged in good, honest effort, and while there are sure to be many who are not so minded or active, that they are in the minority. Thus, it emphasizes the decent things, the heroic things, the things worth while, that are current in the world's work, which it takes only the discriminating eye to see and the well-balanced mind to appreciate.

It goes on the assumption that the majority is interested in such things and gives its public what it really wants and what it had educated it to look for.

A circulation of a million readers a day is sufficient proof that this policy had good reason, good business acumen and good newspaper sense to commend it. It shows also that journalistic ethics do cut a large figure in success, notwithstanding all that is usually quoted against them by the average newspaper man.

"HUMAN INTEREST" OF A DIFFERENT SORT.

Every family lives in a home; every family must send its children to school; every family is interested in the welfare of the community. Therefore, every family is, by its very constitution, interested in the things that concern the home, education and social service. But every family is not interested in the scandal of the hour to the exclusion of the permanent things that most often concern it, such as those just mentioned. Therefore, it is good common-sense and good business to play up the things in which most readers are interested in during most of the waking hours of their lives. Hence, the success of the Monitor.

When I was associate editor of the Evening Telegraph in Philadelphia, I adopted this policy and was fortunate enough to have as my editorial chief a man of wide vision who, while he did not, perhaps, attach the same importance to these things as I did, nevertheless was wise enough to see the sound underlying philosophy of my position. He let me have my way as far as he could and the result was that we occupied the field of social service almost exclusively and made a multitude of friends for the paper who were not in sympathy with its politics at all.

HOW IT WAS DONE.

We devoted our entire back page, a most valuable one to every paper, especially for news or advertising purposes, to what we called "The World of Workers." On this page we featured the things that intimately concerned the home education, and social service, domestic science, school lunches, vocational training, etc. Helpful articles were printed on such subjects as "Thrift," "How to Develop Self-Help," "How to do Things," what the best experts thought and advised on all sorts of difficult questions, and such like things.

The page was devoted to the worker and his problems. It was a great success, as a feature, but it was not a money-maker for the paper nor can I say that it did, in the short time the experiment was tried, increase our circulation.

But I am convinced that if it had been tried longer, it would have done all these things. Unfortunately, the wise editor left the paper and the page was dropped. We not only made friends for ourselves, but for the things that were worth while. Our experiment fully justified itself, for, when we abandoned the field, every other paper in town took up the work and made a feature of one or more of the departments of community welfare which we had tried to cover as a whole.

GIVING THE READER JUSTICE.

Is a newspaper which carries twenty-two columns of advertising and fourteen columns of news giving its readers a "square deal?" A London newspaper man, writing to the Newspaper World, thinks that the purchaser of that paper sacrificed a good deal to the advertising and that he might be justified in complaining at having to pay a penny for fourteen columns of news. "At all events," he says, "I think the reader is entitled to half the space, as against the advertiser."

The editor of the Newspaper World, in commenting on the complaint, quotes the British post office rule that a registered newspaper weighing more than two ounces must consist wholly or in great part of news and comment on news, with or without advertisements.

"But," he says, "in practice the department does not stop papers until they contain less than one-third news or comments on news. As to the general question, we think that evening paper readers would discontinue a paper if it did not give them what they required and that it would cease to be prosperous."

GETTING READY FOR THE NEXT WAR LOAN.

LIBERTY BOND PUBLICITY COMMITTEE CALLS ON GOVERNMENT TO BUY ITS ADVERTISING.

The very pertinent question of paid advertising has again arisen with the approach of the date for the next installment of the Liberty Loan.

The publicity committee that handled the first section of the loan in the Second Federal Reserve District, the most important territory in the whole country, took the stand in the last campaign that it should not ask the newspapers to contribute free advertising space.

The fundamental principle was absolutely clear—that advertising is a commodity and that the Government should pay newspapers to carry Government advertising just as it pays railroads to carry Government freight.

In its report the committee points out that:

"The experience of Great Britain in floating her war loans should serve as a conclusive argument in favor of a definite and adequate appropriation to effect the sale of the next issue."

"If the present appropriation, or what remains of it, is not adequate for the purpose as determined by qualified experts, Congress should be urged to provide the necessary funds."

Collin Armstrong, advertising agent and member of the committee, in his report, said:

"The selling or distribution of United States bonds, even for so lofty and imperative a purpose as that of the present issue, is a matter of business as well as of patriotism, self-protection and re-establishment of civilization. So far as we know, no one profited by the last flotation. All personal services were contributed by principals and whatever compensation subordinates received came from their regular employers who contributed most liberally to the selling and clerical forces."

"The question is pertinent, can a duplication of all this gratuitous service and material be relied upon in conducting the next campaign? Is it logical or just to ask bankers, advertising interests and all others who contributed to the success of the last loan to bear a larger share of the burden than their citizens who share or will share equally in the beneficent results of victory? In our judgment the 'sins of war' are as essential in a financial campaign as on the battlefield. The Government should provide the first as well as the last mentioned—not necessarily at a profit, but at a fair compensation to those who render service or deliver the goods. Only in this way, it seems to us, can a comprehensive campaign be laid out and successfully conducted."

W. T. Mullally, another advertising agent on the committee, said:

"We firmly believe that all work should be paid for—advertising space, copy writing, designing, etc."

In bringing its report to a conclusion, the committee said:

"We would definitely recommend, therefore, that publicity headquarters be opened immediately and half a dozen competent people employed to form a nucleus for the larger committee which can be gradually developed until shortly previous to the actual opening of the next campaign, when the entire machinery can be in complete co-ordination and ready to start off efficiently."

The committee is on the anxious seat to know what Congress is going to do with regard to its recommendations.

But at the same time it is going ahead making preparations for pushing the new section of the loan, profiting from its first experiences.

At the time of going to press THE FOURTH ESTATE received word that an official of the Treasury Department had made the following statement:

"It appears certain that the Treasury Department will ask Congress for no advertising appropriation for the next bond issue."

"According to present plans, the advisory commission of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World will act in the same capacity in the coming bond issue as in the last. That is, a member of the advisory commission will act in an advisory capacity in each of the Federal Reserve Districts."

The committee believes that the time to prepare for the next loan is now. Some of the men who worked so effectively during the last campaign have already been approached and have indicated their willingness to undertake the same work next time provided they have reasonable notice, in order that the various interests which are asked to do work involving considerable sacrifice to them may have reasonable time to prepare.

On organization the committee says:

"This course is highly advisable not only because it produces better results, but also because it makes it possible for the various interests who desire to cooperate to mobilize their resources more fully and to render the Government a fuller measure of assistance without almost impossible sacrifices to the parties involved."

"It may be added that many of the men who worked in the last loan, if they are not immediately enlisted for this work, will go off to officers' training camps or other services and thus be unavailable in September or October, when their help will be badly needed here."

"Many of the weekly and monthly magazines which will appear during the course of the next loan are now being made up. Articles must be supplied to them immediately if they are to appear when needed."

"The newspapers will be very glad to take from time to time during the next two months interviews with prominent men regarding the results of the first loan and carrying constructive suggestions with regard to the next loan."

"In the last campaign no one knew from day to day what space or publicity could be commanded or relied upon in furtherance of the work; and it is a matter of common knowledge that important and reasonably fertile fields were not cultivated because of inability to reach them. The farming population is a conspicuous instance.

NEWS IN THE LAST CAMPAIGN.

In the Liberty Loan sale which closed on June 15, the support rendered by the newspapers outside of their advertising columns was an important factor, and how the committee covered them is interestingly by J. I. Clarke, formerly of the New York Sun, and now with the National Bank of Commerce in New

J. I. CLARKE.

York, who was in charge of this department. In his report to the secretary of the committee Mr. Clarke said:

"The press room was organized under my direction along the general lines of the city room in a daily newspaper. My relation to it was that of a managing editor, reporting to a publisher. Mr. Caldwell, of the New York Globe, was city editor, and the reporters, loaned by different newspapers, worked under his general direction. The newspaper stories were issued on the typewriter and the mimeograph."

"We had a perfectly appointed city desk, with reference books, telephone, dead book, date book, assignment book, and daily schedule. The stories were ready for the newspaper men at eleven a. m. and four p. m. each day."

"The reporters were given regular assignments, either by Mr. Caldwell or by me through Mr. Caldwell. The stories were covered in the usual newspaper fashion and turned out in newspaper style."

"The following newspaper people worked regularly in the press room:

Gurden Edwards, Associated Press; Leonard Smith, the New York Times; E. R. Caldwell, the New York Globe; P. F. Hanley, the New York Sun; Milton Bronner, Scripps-McRae News Service; Mrs. Lewis M. Isaacs, the New York Evening Post; Joseph R. Lissen, New York American; J. W. Workman, New York Tribune; John Kirby, the New York World, and J. W. McConaughy, the New York Evening Mail.

"I have estimated that we had fifteen thousand columns of newspaper publicity in the Second Federal Reserve District alone between May 10 and June 18. This estimate is conservative. During the last days of the loan, many papers, particularly in the metropolitan district, ran each day from three columns to a full page on the Liberty Loan. Our press clipping bureau sent us more than 58,000 clippings weighing over 170 lbs. I believe this count represents hardly one-quarter of the actual number of Liberty Loan stories.

"The press room sent out 377 newspaper stories of sufficient length to be numbered. We did not number stories of one paragraph. Several of the Liberty Loan stories were over 20 typewritten pages in length and on some of the heaviest days we prepared over 50 pages amounting to fifteen columns of material."

"Our work included two special stories each day for the United Press, one special story each day for the Associated Press, a special story for the American Press Association three times a week to be used in its plate service, and a special rapid-fire service to the tickers."

"We had sixty-five photographs taken during the campaign. Every one of them, with the exception of a single photograph, was used in one or more newspapers. Some of them did not appear in New York newspapers. Few of them appeared in more than one New York newspaper but in almost every instance they were used widely throughout the entire United States. Many of them were sent out by services such as the Scripps-McRae News Service, the American Press Association or the Associated Newspapers."

NEWS FEATURES.

"The news force in cooperation with volunteers from the banking community, were able to develop a great many items of interest which the papers considered worth while putting on their front pages. These included, for example, a fight over New York of seventeen aeroplanes dropping Liberty Loan literature. There were notable subscriptions to the Liberty Loan by professional baseball teams, statesmen, prize fighters, soldiers, opera stars, sailors, babies, millionaires and citizens of foreign birth."

"When these subscriptions were signed they were made the subject of photographs which were largely used in New York, and still more widely throughout the United States. Our pictures of Chinamen subscribing to the loan, babies subscribing, sailors subscribing, and the farmer signing the subscription blank while standing in his furrow beside his plow and horses, were published in practically every section of the United States."

"Other front page stories included a meeting arranged in honor of the Secretary of the Treasury, a statement from President Wilson, a cable from Marshal Joffre, letters from Colonel Roosevelt, Mr. Taft, etc."

"It should be added that this bureau supplied to the papers each day at least twice as much material as they could use in fairness to those of their readers who retained an interest in the war news and other current events."

"One of the most effective pieces of work was done by Parke F. Hanley, of the New York Sun, who made

MORE PRIVATE BUSINESS NOT WANTED, BUT BELL TELEPHONE CO. ADVERTISES ITS AID TO UNCLE SAM.

BY W. LIVINGSTON LARNED.

The American Telephone & Telegraph Company, familiarly known as the Bell System, has done a very remarkable thing. It has pledged its entire service, unreservedly, to the United States Government.

In its internal mechanism, the cry has been "Our Country First!"

Thousands upon thousands of Bell System employees have enlisted in the various branches of governmental effort, from the Army and Navy to the most exacting engineering duties.

Men long in Bell service, and trained through years of study and experience to do one certain thing as near perfectly as it can be done, have silently yet cheerfully swept their desks clean and a neat placard is officially posted on that desk, stating that Uncle Sam has claimed his services.

Irrespective of a highly important advertising campaign that is to occupy the main thread of this story, we mention the above because it shows the full sacrifice that the Bell System has made. It is willing to sacrifice its own interests that the country and the Government may be served. The men left on duty will do double work and shoulder twice as much. New talent will be developed.

All through the sinews of the Bell System from the highest executive to the lowliest lineman has circulated this one dominant spirit:

"The Bell quota of men at the front must be representative of the working principle of this organization."

Not content with this, it has been decided to still further aid that vast system which, being rapidly whined into efficiency, shall give us a fighting force on land and sea, second to none.

Few persons realize the highly important part that the telephone plays in the present drama of war and preparedness.

It is the hour of action!

Messages "there and back" must go with all possible speed.

From Washington alone 294 long distance wires artery out to the uttermost corners of these United States—an increase of 148.

And every time a new line is installed there must be new switchboards and new operators.

Washington is hungry for greater telephone facilities. Departments, springing up over night, occupying entire buildings and literally honeycombed with the urgent business of war, need an equivalent in telephones.

At mobilization camps the demand is quite as exacting and urgent. Here is one item alone:

"Notice has been received from the Signal Corps that the commercial telephone companies must be ready to provide a large amount of telephone service, both local and toll, which will be required at the mobilization camps that will be established shortly for the training of the new army."

"At each one of these camps it is expected that at least 30,000 men will be trained, and this means practically the establishment of a new city of 30,000 inhabitants for which complete telephone service, both local and toll, must be provided, not only for the military purposes of the camp, but also for the personal needs of the officers and men. It has already developed that 32 such camps will be required for the training of the militia and the first draft of 500,000 men.

"To provide this service, it will be necessary to build, maintain, and operate all these new telephone systems, which will call for hundreds of positions of special switchboard operators, a large amount of outside plant, and equipment for thousands of stations. Beyond this it will be necessary to make considerable additions to the local telephone plants of the nearby cities or towns as well as additions to the toll lines radiating from those places."

But there has been one drawback to a full and speedy realization of these demands—ability to secure raw material resources. Think of the stupendous task of manufacturing and laying a new underground cable the entire distance from Washington to New York, this cable made up of 80,000 miles of wire. It is significant to note that at this time excellent telephone service exists between Washington and the headquarters of every Army department and Navy district in the United States.

Very few people know that methods have been perfected whereby the War, Navy and other Governmental departments have a special telephone and telegraph wire system for their own exclusive use.

All of this has been a severe tax on equipment.

In a market already depreciated and cut down by universal mechanical demand, orders for telephone parts, wire, etc. have been well-nigh impossible to fill. It has taken superhuman effort and indefatigable and untiring zeal to make this great new telephone service match up with stern, official edict.

NEW BUSINESS NOT WANTED, BUT ADS GO ON.

A peculiar condition of affairs has arisen as a consequence.

The Bell System isn't eager for more installations, because it is not practical to provide them.

The Bell System doesn't care to stimulate increased use of the telephone, because of the heavy traffic now existing.

And yet, never for a moment has it ceased to use advertising. The same standard three-column campaigns are appearing in newspapers.

And when the Bell System and its subsidiary companies decide to advertise, that advertising, through newspapers, seeks out the most modest little village and the largest city. It does the job thoroughly. There's nothing halfway about it.

Not so very long ago, inhabitants of small towns were not familiar with the workings of a great telephone system. They did not realize the vastly intricate story of progress and science that lay back of a long distance call, we'll say, from Holton, Kan., to San Francisco.

The telephone merely meant a telephone!

There on the desk or on the wall was a piece of wood and metal. By lifting a receiver from a hook, you could talk with someone else miles away. The vast area between was an unknown quantity.

Through the medium of its advertising in newspapers, the Bell System has taught people not only how to use the telephone to their own profit, but the history of the telephone and the impressive army of experts essential to telephone service.

But now comes this most remarkable series of Bell System advertisements, in newspapers from coast to coast.

The public is asked, during the war crisis, to be lenient—to take second place, to sometimes make as many sacrifices as the Bell System itself has cheerfully made.

THE BELL WAR MESSAGES.

Here is the spirit of the present newspaper appeal:

"As our military strength grows, and we become larger participants in the great war, the demands of the Government upon our service will continue to increase, and must always be met.

"An extraordinary increase in telephone traffic, due to the unprecedented commercial and industrial activity incident to the war, must also be adequately provided for.

"Like the other resources of the nation, our resources must be conserved, and we appeal to the American public, always patriotic to the core, to assist us in meeting these extraordinary conditions by avoiding as far as possible wasteful and extravagant use of the service."

One advertisement shows an illustration of a civilian stepping aside and permitting an officer to have the "right of way" at a telephone booth. As the copy suggests "This typifies the attitude of the nation and it also typifies the attitude of the Bell System. The nation is at war and it is necessary that private interest shall be subordinated to the Government's need for telephone service."

Another illustrated advertisement pictures significantly a civilian's hand, proffering a telephone to the hand of Uncle Sam. One of the paragraphs beneath reads:

"Each individual American will cooperate in this patriotic service, and submit cheerfully to inconvenience or delay in his telephone service, when he understands how vital it is that Government service shall take precedence over all else."

Has there ever been a more surprising campaign than this—an appeal to a nation to really cut down demands on telephone service, that the Government may have the right of way? It is a brand new reason for advertising.

WOULD BAR BILLBOARDS

Columbus, Ohio, is about to undertake a legislative campaign against billboards in residential sections of the city, headed by Councilman Nailor, who has sent to Chicago for a copy of its local ordinance which has been upheld by the courts. The measure will contemplate not only prohibition of further construction of billboards, but will demand that those now standing be torn down.

"UNLOCKED" WATER POWERS AND NEWS PRINT.

For many years various interests throughout the United States have been trying to compose a controversy over unlocking the water powers of the United States, but it has only been recently realized that this accomplishment might be able to do more to lower the price of news print paper than any other single thing which has been or might be effected.

Lately the paper committee of the American Newspaper Publishers Association has been working in cooperation with various interests and as a result there has been introduced into Congress the Walsh Bill, the Small Bill and the Shields Bill, which, their advocates say, meet exactly the requirements of newspapers, give capital the minimum return necessary and preserve and protect the public interest and domain.

The A.N.P.A. paper committee says it is in touch with many interests—both large and small—who are willing to proceed immediately with such development and increase the paper tonnage of the United States enormously, provided only that they are given the necessary legislative conditions, such as are given to paper mills and other industries in Canada, Norway, Sweden and other countries which possess such water powers as does the United States.

Water power legislation is something that is acknowledged by practically everybody in the country to be desirable and necessary, but it has in the past suffered from its friends.

It is hoped this difficulty has now been obviated, but to help matters along publishers are asked, besides supporting the bill, to point out in their columns how the unlocking of these water powers is a public and war necessity and deserves to be put through during the present session as a war measure.

It seems that there can be no denial that our country has no greater need today than the development of its water powers, for this is the basic and fundamental condition of accomplishing other necessities.

The A.N.P.A. paper committee points out that:

The release of these water powers will at this time relieve one-tenth of the freight cars on railroads which may be electrified.

It will also release enormous quantities ties of coal, at a time when coal is urgently needed.

It will develop resources of fertilizer and increase our food production.

Of the 60,700,000 water horse-power in the United States, but 5,300,000, or 8.8 per cent, has thus far been developed.

Of the 40,000,000 water horse-power contained within the Pacific Coast states, being 70 per cent of all the water power of the United States, but 727,000 horse-power, or 1.8 per cent, has thus far been developed.

The states of Oregon and Washington contain more available water power and more pulp wood than any other two states in the Union.

Out of the 17,500,000 horse-power within the borders of these states, but 2.6 per cent in all has thus far been developed. The Government forest reserves in these two states contain over 44,000,000,000 feet of timber suitable for the manufacture of wood pulp.

It seems almost incredible that an enlightened government like ours should keep laws in force which bar the way to the development of this great natural resource.

Canada, Norway and Sweden have been developing their water powers, and the United States census shows that over 400,000 tons of wood pulp were imported into the United States from those countries during 1915.

A natural resource, which may not be used, might as well not exist. It like a would-be banker, who mistakes the safety deposit business for banking, and locks up all the money in the vaults and keeps it there unused, to the detriment of both depositors and the public.

In short, the greatest single possibility of the country for economy and for meeting the high cost of living and these special and severe war conditions is being allowed to be wasted.

On the paper side the economical manufacture of news print hinges on four things:

The low cost of wood.

Transportation.

Management.

Low cost of hydro-electric power.

There are hundreds of opportunities in the United States, which have all these conditions, except the power, and the only necessity to give them this requirement is proper legislation, which the A.N.P.A. paper committee believes has been worked out in the Walsh, Small and Shields Bills.

This proposition embodies the releasing of public lands for such power development and involves the proper releasing of navigable streams.

Nature has largely segregated her natural resources in the far Western states.

There the forests necessary to the manufacture of wood pulp and paper line the banks of the falling water. Farm ore spruce, larch and hemlock timber is coming to fruition and wasting each year in our Western forests, contiguous to also wasting water-powers, more than sufficient to produce, at cheapest cost, all the wood pulp and paper required by the newspapers of this country.

Why not give those who would develop our wasting water-power the right to work, the right to build and expand and develop, the right to help create a greater and more powerful industrial nation?

Why not give them laws to work under, which, while placing them under the constant supervision of the public authorities, and safe-guarding every public interest, yet shall be of such fair and businesslike character that under their operation men may hope for a generous return for their work and their risk in a necessarily hazardous business, and capital be assured of a safe investment?

Were the present Congress to enact practical water-power legislation under which capital could be obtained for development purposes, the erection of plants for production of wood pulp and news print paper would be undertaken, of a capacity sufficient to supply the full requirements of this country without importations, and at fair prices.

The point of issue, as the laws governing water powers now stand, is that it is impossible to secure capital investment for the reason that the Secretary of the Interior has the power to cancel contracted rights to government water powers, practically without notice. Capitalists will not invest their money and stand the possible chance of losing it.

The proposed Walsh Bill, the Shields Bill and the Small Bill in the House and Senate, that have been endorsed by the American Newspaper Publishers Association, the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association, and other organizations, provide for the passage of a law authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue permits to responsible citizens covering a period of 50 years, or more or less as the permittee would elect, to water power lands, which will allow the making of improvements and guarantee protection by the Government.

These provisions are the whole milk of the coconut. When investors can be guaranteed protection for their money, there is bound to be a great rush to put capital into water power enterprises.

H. M. Addinsell of Harris, Forbes & Co., investment bankers of New York, makes the following statement from a banker's point of view. Mr. Addinsell is also chairman of the Water Power Committee of the Bankers' Association, and speaks as a conservative banker and not as a promoter of power companies:

"The interest of the investment houses in this matter is after all not a purely selfish one, as if this opportunity for investment on a safe basis is not available, the investment funds in any event will go into other channels, and probably their investment in banks will have their investment of it anyway. The old saying is that 'money makes the mare go,' and I submit that money and water make the water wheels go. Money seeks and demands the safest investment. Water power must compete with the other investment opportunities. Capital holds the whip-hand, and until in-money will not be available therefore.

"But the investment bankers are anxious to see this latent natural resource of the country developed, because it will affect not only their business, but indirectly the business prosperity and economic status of the entire country."

The publishers of the United States so far have not given the water power project of the A.N.P.A. the support it deserves. All that is asked is editorial endorsement and a small campaign of public education for the readers in the news columns, showing the public the widespread advantage to the nation of such a law—plus whatever personal influence can be brought to bear by the publisher on his Senators and Representatives to vote for the Water Power Bills.

Some publishers seem to think the water power project is of no personal importance to them.

They are wrong. This is a matter of the utmost importance to every newspaper publisher in America. By their combined aid only can the A.N.P.A. paper committee accomplish its objective. It is the biggest thing of the hour in new newspaper world.

Let everyone get busy today and do his part to help the Water Power Bills through Congress at this session.

Get into touch with the A. N. P. A. paper committee, World Building New York, for instructions, if you are not fully acquainted with the details of the matter and find out how you can best help.

If you know about it get on the job at once.

ON THE RIGHT TRACK AT LAST

The long and hard work by the newspapers to make the Administration realize that its system of war news distribution was wrong seems at last to have borne fruit.

There are certain signs of the disintegration of the Committee on Public Information. It is acknowledged by some of its most sincere friends and well wishers that the policy under which it has been conducted has been a failure.

The complete reversal of policy, by the committee, this week, by which it will hereafter supply the newspapers only with announcements made up of the bald official statements is welcomed by the newspapers.

Hereafter newspaper men must work up their own stories for themselves and do their own writing, as they did in the days before the advent of the Committee on Public Information.

When the committee started business last April, editors of magazines and magazine contributors were employed to take charge of the various departments created and every day they furnished to the newspapers literally yards of statements and "stories" telling of the various activities of the Government in connection with the war.

Literary men of wide reputation, like Wallace Irwin, author of "The Letters of a Japanese School Boy," were assigned to cover the various departments, and they turned out a large amount of high-class copy.

The great problem in newspaper offices was to determine what to do with this large amount of "copy." There was too much of it to send over press wires already overcrowded.

It is felt in newspaper circles that Mr. Creel has conferred a real boon on the Washington correspondents in suspending this method.

THE FOURTH ESTATE months ago pointed out that if the committee was going to be able to deal properly with newspapers it must have a proper representation of newspaper men on its executive staff, and it must install a newspaper system of news handling.

This was never done and the result has been a constant conflict between the newspapers, the committee and Cabinet officers. These have been told of time and time again in THE FOURTH ESTATE.

The magazine and story-writer staff of the committee has proven a flat failure as a news handler.

Mr. Creel, who is a magazine writer himself, attempted to prepare a newspaper statement of the trip of the first contingent of American soldiers going across to France, that resulted in a decidedly humiliating experience for him.

The publicity committee would say it was all right to print a certain thing; then, after it was done, the Secretary of War or of the Navy would say it had no right to do so.

The new order of things appears to be swinging around in the right direction.

The "stories" will be abolished and there will be only one outlet for news—the Committee itself.

If there is any trouble the Committee must be responsible.

Mr. Creel made it plain when he came to Washington to be chairman of the Committee on Public Information that he objected to being called a censor. His purpose, he explained, was quite the contrary of what was suggested by a censorship. He desired, he said, to give to the press all the news that it was possible or proper to give, and there would be little if any suppression if he could help it.

But the Administration has made him its responsible censor also—and the result has been that the duties of publicity agent and censor have been unable to agree.

If Mr. Creel will gather around him some capable newspaper men as advisers and keep on the road he has now taken he will do much to get down to a satisfactory system of news-distribution.

The Government should relieve him of censorship responsibility—leaving that to the War and Navy Departments.

Mr. Creel has proven himself a mighty hard and earnest worker—but it has taken him until now to realize that news handling is not a job for magazine and story writers.

NEW DRAMATIC CRITIC.

Monroe Lathrop has returned to his old post as dramatic editor of the Los Angeles Express-Tribune, succeeding the late Maitland Davies, whom he had preceded on that desk. His father and both brothers are newspaper men and he has been in various phases of newspaper work since his graduation from Columbia University several years ago.

He has been editor of the Carbondale (Pa.) Leader, news and city editor of the Paterson (N. J.) Press, news editor of the Williamsport (Pa.) Grit, editor and part owner of the Waterbury (Ct.) Republican, editorial writer on the Los Angeles Herald and on the Los Angeles Tribune and dramatic editor of the Express-Tribune.

For the past eighteen months he has been handling publicity for a Los Angeles motion picture exhibitor.

EDITOR IN PEACE LEAGUE.

Vance C. McCormick, publisher of the Harrisburg (Pa.) Patriot and chairman of the Democratic National Committee, has become a member of the executive committee of the League to Enforce Peace, the active governing body of the organization. Mr. McCormick is spending most of his time in Washington working with the Government Exports Council.

DUTCH PRICES UP.

The Dutch newspapers are again advancing prices. It is now necessary to pay 8 cents for copies which formerly cost 5 cents. Advertising rates also have been increased.

PURELY PERSONAL.

William Allen White, editor of the Emporia (Kan.) Gazette, has been ordered abroad as a member of the Red Cross War Council Investigation Committee. He left an Eastern port a few days ago.

Charles T. Dodd, business manager of the Newark (N. J.) Evening News, is receiving the sympathy of friends on the death of his mother, Mrs. Emma I. Dodd, who succumbed to heart prostration on August 8. She was seventy-seven years old.

William Boeshans, business manager of the St. Joseph (Mo.) Gazette, has just returned to his post after an automobile trip through six states.

Ellis Parker Butler, the author and press humorist, who lives in Flushing, is being seriously considered by the Queens County (N. Y.) fusion leaders as candidate for borough president. Mr. Butler has been active in public affairs in Flushing and the borough for a number of years.

Frank M. Wheeler on August 8 celebrated the close of his twenty-fifth year of service on the Newport (R. I.) Herald, which he joined shortly after its establishment in 1892. He received congratulations from his associates in the office and from prominent naval officers and leaders of the summer social life with whom he has formed an intimate acquaintance during his long service. He is also Newport correspondent of the Associated Press and sent the famous "U-53" story last October.

George F. Keener has been assigned by the Wilmington (Del.) Evening to cover a camp meeting which is now in progress at Brandywine Summit, Pa., eight miles from Wilmington.

Frank C. Van Horn, editor of the San Angelo (Tex.) Observer, has been appointed justice of the peace in his precinct.

Ella Costello Bennett, well known feature writer whose newspaper experience has covered special work in Chicago, Kansas City, Denver and Pueblo, has been winning new laurels by her feature work for the San Francisco Bulletin, in connection with the celebrated Mooney trial in that city.

Harold H. Baker of Chicago is the proud father of a new boy. Mr. Baker was formerly Chicago advertising manager for Good Health Magazine and is now connected with the Quaker Oats Company.

Mrs. Lucille Brian Gilmore, formerly a well-known newspaper woman in Texas, has been chosen as one of the speakers on food conservation in the Chicago campaign being conducted by the National Council of Defense.

Miss Lenna Frances Cooper, associate editor of Good Health Magazine, Battle Creek, Mich., is the author of a new book, "How to Cut Food Costs."

Harry G. Evans, telegraph editor of the Louisville Times, is recovering from a fracture of the skull which he received while playing golf recently near Louisville. He was accidentally struck on the forehead by the club of Miss Katherine Robinson of the Courier-Journal art department, who drove as he was stooping to pick up his ball.

Johnstone Vance, part owner of the New Britain (Ct.) Daily Herald, is retaining his position as managing editor of the Herald though he has enlisted in the United States Navy. The affairs of the publication are being conducted by the remainder of the editorial force.

STAFF CHANGES.

C. L. Perkins has become classified advertising manager of the New York American.

Freeman H. Hubbard has resigned as proofreader with the Plimpton Press, Norwood, Mass., to join the editorial staff of the Meriden (Ct.) Morning Record.

Albert Nicholas has resigned as reporter on the Springfield (Ill.) State Register and is now with Luther Frame, manager of the Associated Press bureau at Springfield, Ill.

Philip A. Steinbach of the Wilmington (Del.) Evening news staff, has enlisted in the First Delaware regiment as a member of the headquarters company.

Kent Watson has resigned his position as night editor for the Associated Press at Dallas, Tex., and has enlisted in Battery D field artillery, known as the "scopers' troop," because of the fact that it is made up of more newspaper men than any other company in Texas.

Leon M. Wickersham, who was in the automobile business at New Castle, Del., has rejoined the advertising force of the Wilmington (Del.) Sunday Star.

Oakes S. Dunham, for twenty-nine years editor of the Digby (N. S.) Courier, has resigned to edit the Bridgetown (N. S.) Monitor, which he has just purchased. He is succeeded on the Courier by George H. Chisholm, formerly connected with that paper.

Mark Huber has resigned from the staff of the Columbus (Ohio) State Journal to return to Lima, Ohio, his home city.

Thomas Marvin Johnson of the Pittsburg Press staff has gone to join the American army in France to give the Press a special war service by cable.

Edward W. Patker, a member of the San Francisco Chronicle staff for eleven years, has resigned to enter the practice of law.

Miss Ora Barth, circulation manager of the Marion (Ill.) Post, has resigned.

Alvin J. Katzenstein has joined the advertising staff of the New York Globe. He was formerly connected with the New York Evening Mail, from which he resigned on August 4.

Robert Reed has become city editor of the El Dorado (Kan.) Republican, succeeding Noah Halfhill.

WEDDING BELLS.

Edgar L. Maines, a member of the staff of the Rockford (Ill.) Register-Gazette, and Miss Jennie Stewart of Columbus, Kan., were recently married in Rockford.

William J. Parker, a former Quincy (Mass.) newspaper man, and Miss Mollie C. Stearns of Dorchester, Mass., were married recently in the last named city.

AID TO STATE EXECUTIVE.

Chester Moores, automobile and real estate editor of the Portland Oregonian, has been selected as secretary to Governor, James Withycombe of Oregon. Mr. Moores will take up his new duties on September 1, succeeding George Palmer Putnam, who has resigned to give his attention to his private business. Mr. Putnam is publisher of the Bend (Ore.) Bulletin. Mr. Moores recently was admitted to the bar, having studied law at night while handling the automobile and real estate beats of the Oregonian. He is also a graduate of the University of Oregon academic course.

VACATION NOTES.

John F. D. Aue, auditor for the Des Moines Register and Tribune, has returned to his desk after a week's outing and fishing at Long Lake, Brainard, Minn.

George E. Kenney, assistant day city editor of the Chicago Herald, is on his vacation.

George Herriman, sports cartoonist for the New York Evening Journal, has returned from a fishing and hunting vacation spent as he expresses it, in "The Wilds of the Woods Somewhere in Maine."

John M. Imrie, manager of the Canadian Press Association, is off duty on a well earned vacation.

John Sullivan, manager of the Association of National Advertisers, is on his vacation until August 15.

De Lyle Ferree Cass, editor of the Dead-Line, Chicago, has returned from a vacation spent at Lauderdale Lakes, Wis., where he visited Earl H. Dakin, hydro-bathing champion and a member of the Chicago Press Club.

Royden K. Jones, city editor of the Wilmington (Del.) Evening, is spending his vacation at Rehoboth, Del.

NEWSPAPER MEN DRAFT EXEMPTIONS.

While there are no specific class exemptions in the draft for the National Army, now in operation, a case of a newspaper man decided by a local exemption board in New York City, is of special interest to readers of THE FOURTH ESTATE.

After much discussion the claim of Ralph J. Block, writer for the Sunday magazine of the New York Tribune, was sustained.

Block earns $45 a week, and has $1,200 in savings. He is twenty-eight years old, married, and has no children. His wife was a school teacher in Indiana before her marriage.

The wife's father has three minor children, and cannot support her, it was argued.

"This is a hair line case," the board stated. "The wife of the day laborer always is utterly dependent on him. The wife of the professional or business man often is a woman of sufficient intelligence and training to earn her own living in an emergency."

"If we were to regard nothing more than the question of dependents, we would send all our more intelligent men to war and keep the less intelligent at home. For that reason we act as we do in this case."

CHANGES ON THE DES MOINES REGISTER-TRIBUNE.

William Lambert, who has managed the credit department for the Des Moines Register-Tribune for nearly fifteen years will leave August 10 for Ottumwa, Ia., to take charge of the Connecticut Life Insurance agency. His place will be filled by Henry Rhumland, assistant auditor. Mr. Rhumland started with the Register-Tribune Company thirteen years ago as office and errand boy for the country circulation department and has pushed himself to the front rapidly.

J. A. Sellards will take over Mr. Rhumland's work, leaving the circulation department. He has been connected with the circulation department for the past ten years.

THIS MIGHT BE IN CODE, TOO.

Junius B. Wood, of the city staff of the Chicago Daily News, who is with the American expeditionary force, postcards a friend that "Paris is a great old city." This is about all that he could write and get by the censor.

THE FUTURE DAILY OF A SMALL CITY

WILL NOT HAVE TO MEET STRONG LOCAL COMPETITION OF BIG CITY PAPERS.

By W. S. MITCHELL.

Circulation Manager, Portland (Me.) Express.

Are the metropolitan dailies of the future to be big papers, in the sense number of pages?

If they are not bulky papers, what reading matter carried in the past will be eliminated in the future?

Can the metropolitan newspaper reduce its average daily size and hope to get circulation that logically belongs to the smaller city daily?

To the first question, there seems at present, to be but one answer that the future metropolitan papers must be smaller in pages.

To the second question, opinions will differ as to just what reading matter will be eliminated, but all will agree that matter of local interest in the city where the paper is published will be printed.

This being true, it naturally follows that local news from the district where the smaller daily is published cannot be given so much space.

This conclusion leads us to answer the third question by venturing the assertion that metropolitan papers without local news of the locality in which they seek circulation cannot hope to compete with the smaller dailies published within that field.

If therefore, the above conclusions are true we have every reason to believe that the smaller daily of the future will fill a larger place than in the past.

The larger field will come to the smaller daily because it is human nature for people in the smaller towns and cities to want to know just what their friends and neighbors are doing. Through the medium of the newspaper, their curiosity has been appeased in the past by both metropolitan and local papers. In future, it seems to me, the local paper will assume the burden of publishing the brief news notes that are so generally read by all members of the newspaper family.

The metropolitan paper of the future will aim to concentrate its circulation, but, of course, will never be confined to any particular district.

There will always be a demand everywhere for the big city paper for some illustrated articles, editorial comment or department features, but the local paper with the daily happenings of the vicinity will also be demanded.

Other things that should boost the smaller dailies are numerous and among them may be mentioned the "no return" privilege now so generally in vogue. Most dealers will play safe in ordinary papers and the metropolitan daily published in a distant city cannot duplicate orders. The local daily can supply a late order within a certain radius and thus pick up many sales that might otherwise go to the metropolitan paper.

Local pride in having a live daily published in one's city can also be fostered by the proper news and editorial comment. This is an asset that never fails to awaken public interest especially if the paper gives its support to every good local undertaking.

The use of a slogan such as "Spend your money in your own city" also helps the smaller daily, which is the medium in which the merchants advertise their bargains.

The smaller city merchants do not take kindly to the stunts for increasing the circulation of the metropolitan newspapers.

The big city stores are apt to receive a visit or mail order if the larger city papers monopolize the attention of readers in the "Home town."

To sum up this matter one should consider the metropolitan daily and the smaller city daily as mediums with missions that are vastly different. The metropolitan paper with its news and editorial comment, has a bearing on world wide affairs almost wholly, while the smaller city daily is more of a news letter that not only has its general news of the country but also the smaller matters of personal interest that concern the people and localities in which the local paper circulates.

The future should see the small dailies forging ahead, gradually extending the limits of their necessarily limited territory, while the metropolitan papers will maintain a circulation that knows no territorial bounds but with a large percentage confined to the metropolitan district in which the paper is published.

NEWS NOTES OF CIRCULATORS.

Earl R. Foster, circulation manager of the Des Moines News, is improving very rapidly after an operation for appendicitis.

Earl Shovers, country circulator for the Des Moines News, has left to take charge of the circulation on the Waco (Tex.) Morning News. Under the management of E. S. Fentress and E. E. Battenfield, formerly business manager and editor of the Des Moines News.

Russell Osterdinger, street circulator for the Des Moines Capital during the past eleven years, has resigned to take charge of street sales for the Waco (Tex.) Morning News.

James McKernan, circulation manager of the New York World, is receiving the sympathy of his many friends on the death of his mother last week.

M. Edelstein, who for the past two years has been accountant and

SOUTHERN LADIES END LONG TRIP.

SEE SIGHTS IN MANY CITIES —ROYALLY ENTERTAINED IN NEW YORK.

Thirty-five young ladies from the Tennessee and neighboring states, members of the Memphis News-Scimitar Travel Club, have returned to their homes after a long jaunt through the Eastern states, covering 15 days and seventeen nights.

The first stop after leaving Memphis was at Chicago, seeing that city in twenty-eight hours before proceeding to Buffalo via Lakes Michigan, Huron and Erie, with short stops at Detroit, Mackinac Island and Cleveland. A day was spent at Niagara Falls, whence the party proceeded to Albany and arrived in New York after an all-day sail on the Hudson River.

Five days were spent in New York with headquarters at the Hotel charge of the party. They took in all the conventional sight seeing trips visited Coney Island via the Iron Steamboat Line and spent an afternoon in Luna Park, the courtesies of which were extended by Frank T. Buell, press representatives.

Two theatres also entertained the party. Percy Heath, press representative of the Forty-Eighth Street Theatre, inviting them to a performance of "The Thirteenth Chair" and Frank J. Wilsch acting as host at the Winter Garden.

Leaving New York, the tourists took an Old Dominion Line steamer to Norfolk, spending a day there and continuing to Washington, which with its many points of interest, was inspected in three days. The homestretch was entered after that, the party making connections for Memphis via Cincinnati.

THE AD VALUE OF TRADE-MARKS.

Many very pleasant gentlemen representing different agencies, and I admire their aggressiveness and their intentness in going after business.

It is up to you who manage the advertising agencies to give them their proper plane—what would be called an ethical standard in the medical profession.

For that matter, the ideal advertising agent should regard himself as a specialist—as a man who renders professional service just as a doctor or a lawyer. He should go at his work in the same way.

When a surgeon takes a case the first thing he tries to find out is what will have to be done, and then he makes his recommendation.

You never think of disputing the decision of an eminent physician or surgeon. If you do—if you try to treat yourself or tell him how to treat you—he has too high a regard for his own professional standing to permit such a thing for a minute. He tells you so very quickly.

Now, an advertising agent, or an advertising organization, should be familiar with the ins and outs of the businesses whose advertising it handles. If not familiar, it should be able to study that business and grasp its needs. It should know methods of production and distribution, it should know markets and possible markets, and on that knowledge it should prescribe advertising to fit the case.

There should be no room in the advertising profession for the man or organization that is willing simply to get an order or to handle an appropriation. I know that this problem of advertising ethics has been before you and that you are working the problem out as rapidly as you can, but I wanted to give you my own opinion in the matter and let you know that the advertisers—the organizations that are investing millions and millions of dollars in space—are also thinking and studying the same problem and that they are going to insist upon dependable service and accurate service not only from advertising agencies, but from advertising mediums.

In other words, the trade-mark of an advertising agency or of an advertising medium should represent as much and guarantee as much as the trade-mark of an advertiser.

In our advertising we try our best to emphasize three things: The label on our goods, the trade-mark on the label, and the goodness of the products so labeled and trade-marked.

I do not mind saying to you that our trade-mark is a very valuable asset in our business. Nor do I mind going further and saying to you that advertising has added to the value of the trade-mark and has made of it an advertisement much as I first mentioned—a reminder, an identification and a guaranty.

A trade mark properly established in the minds of the public is an insurance policy. It first of all guarantees to the purchaser full value and full quality, and it goes further and says that if the product doesn't make good the producer will. It is the good faith and good will and good name of the concern.

NEW BANKING BRANCH IN SOUTH AMERICA.

American advertisers having business in South America now have the benefit of another valuable banking convenience there. The First National Bank of Boston has opened a branch in Buenos Aires, Argentine. The office is at 501 Bartolome Mitre, and is under the management of Noel F. Tribe.

PRIZES FOR LOAN POSTERS.

A competition for posters to announce the next Liberty Loan has been started by the Art Alliance of America. New York bankers have contributed $850 for prizes and an additional $100 has been put up by the Federal Woman's Liberty Loan Committee. The competition is open to all artists and art students who submit designs by August 25 at the Art Alliance Galleries, 10 East 47th street.

The first prize, $150, will go to the poster having the highest artistic qualities combined with the power to induce subscriptions. The second prize will be $100. If the Government selects one of these posters it will be bought for $250.

A prize of $250 will also be paid for a poster designed by a woman artist, which is particularly adapted to present to women their duty to purchase Liberty bonds.

The judges are Herbert Adams, president of the National Academy of Design; J. Herbert Case, vice-president of the Farmers Loan and Trust Company; Frank G. Cooper, publicity expert; James P. Haney, director of art in city high schools; W. Frank Purdy, president of the Art Alliance of America; Henry Reuter Dahl of the United States Navy Publicity Bureau; Frank A. Vanderlip, president of the National City Bank, and Mrs. Frank A. Vanderlip, who is chairman of the poster committee of the Federal Woman's Liberty Loan Committee.

BRISK MOVING IN ILLINOIS.

The Decatur (Ill.) Review has moved quite briskly in the past three months. Within that time it has:

Raised its subscription rate 50 per cent.

Adopted the standard eight-column page.

Installed a complete Ludlow Typograph equipment (claimed to be the first in Illinois, outside Chicago) in order to give its advertisers new display type every day.

Has issued a new rate card, doing away with all extra charges for composition, casting plates for matrices, etc., and has announced a new flat rate.

But this is not all.

The Review has abandoned the traditions of over a quarter century, by placing the management of its foreign advertising in the hands of a special representative—Cone, Lorenzen & Woodman, of New York, Chicago, Detroit, Kansas City and Atlanta.

In taking the latter step, the Review management says:

"The wonderful increase in the volume of national advertising that now comes to the daily newspaper and the great and constantly increasing number of national advertisers and advertising agencies have made separate and specialized organizations necessary to adequately cover this field for the daily newspaper."

CHICAGO VACATIONISTS.

The Chicago Daily News force is well represented among the vacationists. Among those who are away from the News for their annual period of recreation are:

W. K. Hollander, movie editor; Henry A. Spalding, assistant telegraph editor; Clarence Bradley, local copy desk head; Jens Eriksen, head of the art department.

Ted Brown, cartoonist, has just returned from his vacation.

PICNIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

The Birmingham (Ala.) News will hold its annual picnic at East Lake, August 14.

N. Y. NEWSPAPER GOLF CLUB IS ACTIVE.

Two new motives have actuated the New York Newspaper Club in introducing a mixed foursome event on the public links at Van Cortlandt Park, one being to make it more pleasant for the men and women who use the municipal course, and the other to help raise funds for the Red Cross. If it proves successful and is enjoyed by those who participate the organization in question will continue to run off these affairs one day each week until the season closes.

In order that all those who care to may enter the nominal fee of 25 cents will be charged for each entry. Under the circumstances the prizes will be necessarily small, unless some generous person or firm comes forward with a helping hand.

MAGAZINE PUBLISHERS ARE STILL IN THE C.P.A.

The recent organization of a Canadian magazine publishers association gave rise to a rumor that it was to take the place of the magazine section of the Canadian Press Association, Inc., of which there was talk of dropping from the C.P.A. at the last annual meeting.

On the question, A. R. Alloway, assistant manager of the C.P.A., said to THE FOURTH ESTATE:

"The organization of the magazine publishers has not, so far as we are aware, any bearing on the memberships of individual magazines in the C.P.A. The magazine organization was formed entirely apart from the C.P.A., although doubtless most of the magazines in it were and are still members of the C.P.A."

OPEN NEW GOLF COURSE.

Fred Flaugh led a field of New York newspaper golfers in a tournament played on August 8 over the Forest Park public links in Queens. His score was 89 for the eighteen holes.

It was the opening of the new holes recently arranged for by Commissioner John Weier.

BOMB NEARLY "GETS" LORD ATHELSTAN.

The summer home at Cartierville of Lord Athelstan (Sir Hugh Graham), publisher of the Montreal Star, was dynamited on the night of August 9. Lord Athelstan was in his residence at the time, but was not injured. The house was badly damaged.

The Montreal Star has been a warm advocate of conscription. The evident attempt to take Lord Athelstan's life followed the receipt by the publisher of numerous threatening letters, posted in the United States, warning him that the passage of the Canadian conscription bill would result in his death.

The explosion ripped off the balcony of the sleeping quarters and filled the lower rooms with wreckage.

AT ORGANISTS' MEETING.

S. E. Gruenstein, telegraph editor of the Chicago Daily News, went to Springfield, Mass., recently to speak before the National Convention of Organists. In addition to his newspaper duties, Mr. Gruenstein is organist at the Lake Forest Presbyterian Church, one of Chicago's aristocratic churches.

ENEMY CHECK BAD FOR PARIS EDITORS.

Miguel Almereyda, editor of the Paris Bonne Rouge, has been arrested. Manager Duval, of the paper was arrested a month ago.

The arrests followed the discovery of the transmission of a check to the newspaper from supposedly enemy sources.

NEW BRITAIN RUMOR DOESN'T MATERIALIZE.

On the rumor, recently noted in THE FOURTH ESTATE, that there might be a new daily paper soon in New Britain, Ct., H. N. Lee, business manager of the Herald, said:

"We presume that this is a continuation of such a rumor that started about five years ago. We know of no new effort along such a line."

come to the notice of the American public. Mr. McClure quotes authorities of every belligerent, often at length, and while he draws few conclusions, his reasoning is uniformly sound.

He sees no early peace, but points out tentative ante-bellum agreements hitherto unknown to the public on cooperation in Asia Minor and Mesopotamia between Great Britain and Germany that he believes might serve as a strong card in future negotiations. In his treatment of the Teutonic actions in Belgium, France and Armenia, he gives all sides of the case, but his judgment is strongly against Germany.

"Kultur" is given much attention from the German viewpoint, as a necessary background for the reader's thorough understanding of how the German looks upon the war.

"CORRECT MENTAL ATTITUDE," every essential of selling.

"THE PROBLEM OF THE UNEM-PLOYED," by Rev. W. S. Williams, M. D.; Richard G. Badger
(The Gorham Press), publisher.
Dr. Williams, who is both clergyman and doctor, goes earnestly and searchingly into the problem of unemployment: its causes, its dangers, and its remedies. Since unemployment will be a grave international problem after the war is over, thoughtful men and women will do well to read "The Problem of the Unemployed."

"PRINCIPLES OF MONEY AND BANKING," with explanatory introductions by Harold G. Moulton; University of Chicago Press, publisher.

This material has been assembled from a large number of authors, and gives to the volume a richness of content that a single writer could not hope to furnish.

Although these papers were originally prepared for use in a university classroom—the development of the many points of view upon the topics covered is so interesting that the book offers real value as collateral reading to those interested in the problems it discusses.

"CONCRETE STONE MANUFAC-TURE," by Harvey Whipple; Concrete-Cement Age Publishing Company, publisher.

The development of industrial technique in a specialized industry is oftentimes seriously hampered by a lack of willingness among the qualified manufacturers to cooperate in the exchange of experiences. One field of trade journalism is to foster such

"OFFICE ORGANIZATION AND MANAGEMENT," by Carl C. Parsons; La Salle Extension University, publisher.

Throughout the work, which is one of the most recent in the series of texts of the business administration course of La Salle Extension University, an effort has been made to recognize adequately the importance of all the factors entering into office administration. The result is a successful handbook of conventional and modern office practice.

"THE STRUCTURE OF AN EF-FECTIVE PUBLIC SPEECH,"
by Harry B. Bradbury; Sherwood Company, publisher.

An efficient aid to professionals and laymen and an interesting pocket volume for those who desire to become proficient in the art of public

"HOW TO ADVERTISE," by George French; published by Doubleday, Page & Co. for the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World.

The object of this book is to suggest how advertising may be made more attractive—giving it more "Attention Value."

The thorough treatment of every aspect of the subject recommends this book as a work of reference for every one whose business bears in any way upon advertising.

"THE BUSINESS OF TRADING

"2,000 POINTS FOR FINANCIAL ADVERTISING," by T. D. Mac Gregor; Bankers Publishing Company, publisher.

The idea of the author is to provide a handy compendium of ideas and phrases suitable for use in the preparation of financial advertising matter of all kinds. It is meant as a companion volume to "Pushing Your Business," which is a textbook on the same subject by Mr.
MacGregor.

shop formulas, recipes, processes and money-saving methods for the use of manufacturers, mechanics, house-keepers and home-workers are given in simple, understandable terms.

"CRABB'S ENGLISH SYNO-NYMS," by George Crabb; Harper & Bros., publishers.

This is a centennial edition of a book published 100 years ago by a firm established in the same year. It is revised and enlarged by the addition of modern terms and definitions arranged alphabetically with complete cross-references throughout.

SALESMANSHIP AND BUSINESS EFFICIENCY," written and published by James Samuel Knox.

While somewhat technical for the novice in salesmanship, this book would be a valuable addition to the library of most salesmen, its clearly stated principles enabling them to coordinate and classify the knowledge they have gained from experience.

an extensive tour of New York State, personally explaining to local editors and Liberty Loan committees the plans laid out by the general committee.

REAL COOPERATION.

The newspapers became more and more friendly to the undertaking and gave the Loan every form of display known to the newspaper world, including news, editorials, hundreds of cartoons, special announcements at the bottom or top of various pages, treatment in the general news columns, on the sporting page, women's page, and financial page and in other columns.

Some of the leading metropolitan papers ran more than sixty consecutive news stories more than one column in length. This is said to be a record in newspaper history.

Mr. Clarke, the "managing editor" of the loan publicity, is a young man as the accompanying photograph shows. He got his initiation into journalism at Cornell University, where he was an associate editor of the Cornell Daily Sun and publisher of the Cornell Era, a monthly literary magazine.

After leaving college, in 1912, he went with the Chalmers Motor Company of Detroit, leaving there to join the editorial staff of the New York Sun.

He was connected with that newspaper for four years in various capacities, including that of night city editor. He resigned from the Sun to join the National Bank of Commerce.

NEWS OF THE AD AGENCIES.

C. L. Ronta, who has been conducting an advertising agency at 437 Fifth avenue, New York, has merged his organization with that of the Wales Advertising Company, also of New York City, where he will continue to specialize in drug, medical, chemical and pharmaceutical advertising and merchandising.

Mr. Ronta's experience was gained as a successful salesman, and in handling the advertising and merchandising problems of retail stores and of large national advertisers.

Edwin F. Archibald has resigned as secretary of the Charles Advertising Service, New York, to become Eastern manager for the Photoplay Magazine, also in New York.

The Gardner Advertising Company, St. Louis, has appointed Robert A. Wallace as manager of a department to place advertising of American manufacturers in Australian and New Zealand newspapers. Mr. Wallace has been an advertising counsellor and copy-writer in the Antipodes.

The McAllister-Stevens-Wallis, Inc., Advertising Agency, Salt Lake City, has moved to enlarged offices in the Ness Building. Since the incorporation of this firm two months ago, two additional members have been elected to the board of directors. They are Alva L. Scoville and C. Clarence Nelson.

The Daws Advertising Service has been established in Denver, succeeding the Tuholski Advertising Service, Mr. Tuholski being retained in the new organization in charge of the copy-writing department. H. E. Daws, formerly identified with several dailies and with numerous publicity enterprises in the Middle West, is the new head of the agency.

Chicago advertising agencies were given an opportunity last week to demonstrate their selling ability in a practical way. Thirteen cases of "cracker-jack" left over from the Off-the-Street Club picnic were distributed among the agencies for sale. The agencies sold the confection to luckless publishers' representatives who dropped in to sell, but remained to buy. Taylor-Critchfield-Clague, J. Walter Thompson and Nelson Chesman were some of the agencies disposing of banner lots.

The advertising agency of Woodwards, Inc., of Chicago, has opened a New York office in the Astor Trust Building, at Fifth avenue and 42d street.

NEW CHICAGO "SPECIALS."

M. C. Young and Thomas W. Farrell, operating as Young & Farrell, publishers' advertising representatives, are new arrivals in the Chicago "special" field.

Mr. Farrell is an advertising salesman, and has wide acquaintance both East and West. He has been with the Hearst organization in the East and for several years with Thomas Halmer in the Western field. For the last four years, Mr. Farrell has been Western advertising manager for the Simmons Publishing Company, Springfield, Ohio, publisher of Farm News and the Family Magazine. These two papers will continue to be represented by Mr. Young and Mr. Farrell.

They have offices at 30 North Dearborn Street, Chicago.

The Popejoy (La.) News is a new publication just started by James C. Barnes.

TRADE AND CLASS PRESS.

A committee of trade journal editors dined with Governor Whitman of New York at Albany last week and assured him of their hearty support and active interest in the state's war program, which includes "business conservation," "food conservation" and "fuel and daylight conservation."

Power Plant, New York, has been consolidated with the Practical Engineer, Chicago.

Frederick J. Beecroft, advertising manager of the Exhibitors Trade Review since the establishment of that publication, has become advertising manager for the Motion Picture News.

S. T. Salmond, general manager of the Monetary Times Publishing Company, Toronto, has been elected president of the company.

GERMAN EDITORS ARRESTED.

Dr. Fritz Bergmeier, president of the St. Paul Volkszeitung, was arrested on August 9 under the President's proclamation of April 6. The policy of the Volkszeitung has been to "cast aspersions by innuendo" on American war measures, it was charged. Bergmeier was committed to jail pending further orders from Washington.

In a statement, Dr. Bergmeier said he had tried to make all matter printed in the Volkszeitung conform to Federal regulations. Bergmeier came from Germany twelve years ago and has taken out first naturalization papers.

Reflections on General Pershing were among the objectionable articles in the Volkszeitung, it is understood. The St. Paul district attorney said no trial would be held and that the editor would be held as an enemy alien until President Wilson permitted his release.

Curtis Ackerman, editor of the Little Rock (Ark.) Staats-Zeitung, was arrested on August 9 charged with encouraging resistance to the draft.

The local assistant United States district attorney said that a young man of German parentage who had been called in the first raft had informed him that Ackerman offered to give him powders which would reduce his weight so that he would be physically disqualified.

Ackerman was released on $2,500 bond.

AD MEN AND "SPECIALS" PLAY BALL FOR CHARITY.

The advertising men of Chicago played "daddy" to a thousand boys and girls—members of the Off the Street Club, organized by the Chicago Advertising Association—at a picnic on August 4 at White Sox Park. Refreshments were served free and the visitors were entertained by a baseball game between teams representing the advertising agents and a team representing the publishers' representatives.

The "specials" walked away with their opponents by the lopsided score of 8 to 1 and would have won by a wider margin except for a lurking fear that the agency men might even up by cutting down space contracts. The Off the Street Club treasury was enriched by $4,000, receipts for the ball game.

READY RESIGNS.

Martin C. Ready has resigned as New York and general advertising representative for the Brooklyn (N. Y.) Times. No successor has been appointed yet.

AD FOLKS' NEWS.

R. T. Gebler, formerly advertising and sales manager of the Keasbey & Mattison Company, Ambler, Pa., has been appointed advertising and assistant sales manager of the Martin Truck & Body Corporation, York, Pa.

The headquarters of the National Advertising Commission of the A.A.C.W. has been transferred to Indianapolis, with offices in the Merchants Bank Building.

Paul Gifford has been appointed advertising manager of the Hamilton Watch Company, Lancaster, Pa., succeeding Robert E. Miller, who has become secretary of the Hamilton Corporation, a subsidiary company manufacturing measuring and recording instruments.

A promotion has come to V. L. Yersen, advertising manager of the National Fire Proofing Company, Pittsburg, in the form of election to the office of second vice-president of the company and manager of sales.

Hurriedly planned advertising campaigns are not error proof, but emergencies arise in commercial as well as governmental affairs and campaigns must be organized quickly.

The Advertising Club of Des Moines has arranged to have a "round table" discussion on the subject for the quick "selling" of Des Moines housewives on a supposed "new brand" of laundry soap.

Harry T. Watts, advertising manager of the Register and Tribune, is to tell how newspapers can do their share.

B. F. Spry of the Des Moines Duplicating Company will fit direct by mail advertising into the plan and T. I. Stoner, of the Stoner Bill Board and Outdoor Advertising Company, will prove the ease of the outdoor or painted word.

After they have finished, John P. Norman, advertising director of the Homestead farm weeklies, will check over the plans and tell the club of its mistakes.

The Birmingham (Ala.) Ad Club is to be reorganized. The Hotel Hillman has been chosen as the official headquarters and the temporary organization has already been effected.

J. W. Cambridge has been appointed advertising manager of the Canadian Universal Film Company, Toronto. He was formerly with the Smith, Denne & Moore Advertising Agency, Toronto.

Following the lead of the Chicago Advertising Association, the San Francisco Ad Club is to organize a Junior Ad Club.

Waitresses garbed in overalls provided a feature of interest at a recent luncheon given to the Kansas City Advertising Club by the H. D. Lee Mercantile Club. J. M. Mitchell, advertising manager for the Lee company, spoke on "Advertising Experiences."

Ralph Bertini, assistant advertising manager of the A. C. Gilbert Company, New Haven, Ct., is in charge of the department during the absence of Victor Thompson, who has enlisted in the army.

The Cleveland Advertising Club held its annual picnic on August 4. One of the features was a ball game which was voluntarily umpired by Charles Mabane, at the imminent risk of his life.

Otis R. Tysen is the new advertising manager of the Owl Drug Company, San Francisco, owner of a chain of about twenty-five Pacific Coast stores.

LINKING ADVERTISERS AND RETAILERS IN BOSTON.

The management of the Boston American has a strong system for co-operation with its national advertisers, conducted through a merchandising service department. Its latest step is the issuance of a paper called "The Link," connecting the advertiser with retailer. The columns are devoted to explaining points on goods advertised in the American that may influence Boston retailers to stock up and sell them.

The American is holding a contest in which $35 in prizes will be awarded for the best window display of medicinal preparations, toilet goods and other products sold in drug stores, and which are advertised in the American. This display can be made during any week in August. Local contesting windows will be photographed without charge, and all the pictures will be considered in meeting of the American's advertising staff. Awards will be made according to the display's selling value, neatness and attractive arrangement.

A.C.A. IS INCORPORATED.

The Association of Canadian Advertisers was recently incorporated at Toronto with the following as provisional directors: William M. Mackay, George H. Campbell, Henry E. Minell, Benjamin H. Bramble, Clifford Elvins, Allan C. Her, William A. Lydiatt, Joseph R. Kirkpatrick, Harry H. Morris.

WITH UP-TO-DATE FARMING.

Jacob F. Weinta, who has been with the St. Louis office of the John M. Branham Company, has been appointed advertising manager of Up-to-Date Farming, Indianapolis.

INTRODUCING AD FOLKS.

Edwin F. Johnson, secretary of the new Southern Advertising Agents Association, is president of the Johnson-Dallis Company, Atlanta, and has been in the agency business for seven years. Prior to that he was a newspaper man, starting as a "cub" just out of college on the Atlanta Journal. He was later on the Atlanta Constitution and then became city editor of the News in the same city.

He next started North, stopping at Memphis for a time as sporting editor of the News. Proceeding further North, he landed in New York, covering municipal politics for the Brooklyn Eagle and later the New York American. After two years in New York he returned to Atlanta as city editor of the Georgian.

At this point he shifted from the editorial end of journalism to the counting room, becoming business manager of the Georgian. He resigned to become advertising manager for the Atlanta Street Railway, Gas & Electric Company and then entered the agency business, starting the Johnson-Dallis firm in company with E. E. Dallis.

At the recent convention of the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association, Mr. Johnson, on behalf of the Southern Advertising Agents Association and the American Association of Advertising Agents, outlined the following "Standards of Practice" for advertising agents:

"Realizing the increased responsibilities of the general advertising agent due to the enlarged scope and requirements of modern agency service, every agent should use his best efforts to raise the general Standards of Practice, and should pledge himself:

"1. To first recognize the fact that advertising to be efficient, must deserve the full confidence and respect of the public and, therefore, to decline to give service to any advertiser whose publicity would bring discredit on the profession.

"2. To recognize that it is bad practice to unwarrantably disturb the relations between a client and an agent who is faithfully serving him and with whose work the client expresses satisfaction.

"3. To avoid unfair competition, resolve to carry into practice the equitable laws of 'one price-to-all' and determine that the minimum charge for service be the full communication allowed to recognized agencies, and, that no rebates, discounts, or variations of any kind be made, except those regularly allowed for cash payment, and such special discounts as may be generally announced and available to all.

"4. To conserve advertising expenditures by making investigation in advance of all conditions surrounding a contemplated campaign, by counseling delay where preliminary work must first be accomplished, and, by using every effort to establish the right relations and cooperation between the advertising and selling forces.

"5. To avoid, in the preparation of copy, exaggerated statements and to discountenance any willful misrepresentation of either merchandise or value.

"6. To construe offers of rebates or concessions from printed rate cards, or the free publication of press notices as evidence that an inflated price is asked for advertising space and to rate mediums offering such concessions accordingly.

"7. To require exact information as to the volume of circulation of any medium used and specific detail as to the distribution of this circulation, both territorially and as to class of readers. In figuring the value of a medium to regard information as to the methods of obtaining this circulation and the care in auditing this circulation as an essential consideration in estimating its worth.

"8. Never to issue agency house or gains soliciting or estimating paid advertising from publishers or owners of space.

"9. To cooperate heartily with every division of advertising in the earnest effort to establish mutual confidence and equal opportunity among all concerned."

D. J. T. Kennedy, who was recently appointed advertising manager of the Mason Tire & Rubber Company, Kent, Ohio, spent several years in Holy Cross College in Worcester, Mass., and at the University of Michigan before entering the business world, and was entitled to sign himself B. Agency work then claimed him for several years, during which he became interested in the growing rubber tire industry, thereby resulting in his recent connection with the Mason Company.

Charles William Stokes, who is the new assistant general publicity agent of the Canadian Pacific Railway, with

He then became editorial assistant in the publishing firm of Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons, London, resigning to join the C.P.R. service in 1907 as assistant in its European advertising organization in London.

He was transferred to Calgary, Alta., in 1912 and four years later was made assistant publicity agent of the company's department of colonization and development at Calgary, holding that post until his present appointment.

He has contributed to several magazines both in the United States and Great Britain.

ARGUS-LEADER GROWING.

The Sioux Falls (S. D.) Daily Argus-Leader has let contracts for the construction of an additional story to its present building and for a new press-room in the rear of the present structure. Improved mechanical equipment will be installed and the editorial and business departments will be allowed room for expansion.

Part of the new machinery has already been ordered, in the shape of a 24 page Goss Acme press. This will print a newspaper, either quarter or half-fold in any size from 2 to 24 pages at an average speed of from 12,000 to 15,000 copies an hour. It also has a three-color attachment, permitting the printing of four-page supplement in colors.

Arthur Capper TOPEKA, KAN.

GERMAN, ALLEGED REPORTER, HELD AS SPY IN DENVER.

The Federal authorities are still holding Emil Italiener, German propagandist and alleged writer for the New York Staats-Zeitung, who was arrested in Denver, Colo., last week, and placed in jail. The authorities, according to officials in the United States Department of Justice, are not so much concerned about what to do with Italiener as they are about finding out who the Germans in Denver are with whom the alleged spy had business.

When Italiener was arrested
Charles Koehler, of the circulation department of the Denver Herald, a German newspaper was with him.
Koehler denied friendship with the arrested man and said he merely met him as a representative of a newspaper which had business with the New York Staats-Zeitung.

The arrest of Italiener has caused considerable interest among newspaper men in New York. It was said at the offices of the Staats-Zeitung that Italiener's name did not appear on the list of employees of the editorial department of that newspaper.

CHANGED IN VERMONT.

The Wilmington (Vt.) Deerfield
Valley Times has again changed hands. For several months it has been published by F. J. Brabston, who has gone with a paper in Philadelphia.
The Wilmington paper is now under the control of John E. Gale of Guil-

PULP AND PAPER CONDITIONS.

fact that foreign consumers do not always pay as much as the market price in Germany is not taken into consideration.

"The present paper famine gives a reason to consider the export conditions in regard to paper and also to a consideration of Germany's whole economical life, the newspaper says in the close of its article.

"The question has been brought before Congress, inasmuch as from the number of Conservatives an interpellation was made about the newspapers' paper shortage and the measures of the Government to relieve the situation."

The World's Paper Trade Review,
London, England, June 29, stated:

"The paper supply of the German press has again been reduced by order of Dr. Helfferich, Minister of the Interior, which means for some of the bigger political journals a reduction of as much as 44½ per cent of their consumption in 1915.

"The German Press Bureau has issued a list showing that of 3,500 newspapers existing before the war 362 have disappeared. The largest circulation is 270,000 and the smallest 150.

"A decree issued by the German Chancellor prohibits the exhibition for sale of all German newspapers.
Therefore they may be supplied only to persons who subscribe for at least a month. Those which infringe these regulations will be liable to a fine of about $4,000 and their proprietors will be liable in addition to imprisonment for six months."

FINLAND.

The following is from the World's Paper Trade Review, London, June 29:

"In common with most other countries, Finland, in its paper and pulp industry, has suffered a good deal of dislocation. In addition to higher prices, the import of raw and semi-raw materials and the export of the finished paper have been affected."

The Paper-Maker and British Paper Trade Journal, London, England, for June 1, states that so great is the importance of waste paper in the manufacture of munitions (cartridge cylinder linings, shell charge containers, exploder tubes, washers, paper collars for fuses, fuse boxes, Leon torpedo tubes, etc.) that the Minister of Munitions has decreed that no person may sell or buy a quantity of

The British Government has revoked the order of February, 1916, appointing a Royal Commission on Paper, and has made new elections to the commission. The new Royal Commission has issued revised regulations as to the importation and distribution of paper and paper-making materials, further restricting the importation of paper, printed and unprinted, and granting priority to imports and manufacture for Government or War Department account.

The new regulations were printed in full in THE FOURTH ESTATE on July 28.

In regard to the news print paper market, the ruling price for July is 4½ pence, or 9½ cents, a pound, an increase of half a cent a pound over the previous price. The Government is taking the output of so many mills that little is offered for sale.

The World's Paper Trade Review,
London, June 15, 1917, states as follows:

"For the time being prices appear to have reached their maximum and at the same time business has become very dull all round. In normal times June commences the slack season, which continues with us until the advent of September. The fact that no great advance in paper is now looked forward to, combined with the fact that most users already hold a little surplus of stock, is sufficient to create extra dullness in the trade so far as makers are concerned. The majority of orders now in hand are for direct Government or war work. With these orders most makers are quite content, as owing to depletion and shortage of material they are in no position to receive general orders or inquiries.

"The trafficking in Government paper licenses has had a decided effect on the paper market, as they have brought from $87 to $108 a ton, but the recent revised regulations of the Paper Commission have put a stop to this by forbidding their sale or exchange without permission."

SALES IN ILLINOIS.

Samuel T. Coffman, managing editor of the Ina (Ill.) Observer, has sold his interest in that paper to Postmaster E. L. Coffman of Ina. Mr.
Coffman, who was formerly circulation manager of the Mattoon (Ill.)

"STEER CLEAR OF MAYORALTY" BRISBANE TELLS HEARST.

Being mayor of a city is "no business" for a real newspaper man, Arthur Brisbane in his Washington Times advised William Randolph Hearst on August 7.

Mr. Brisbane offered his counsel on the theory that the Democrats and independents in New York city want Mr. Hearst to accept the nomination for the mayoralty.

It is much better, says Brisbane, for Hearst to stay where he is, in a position where he is able to wield much greater power and do much more for the people than he could as the mayor of only one city, even if that city is as large as New York.

For, observes the new proprietor of the Washington Times, "Hearst with his newspapers all over the United States can regulate half a dozen mayors and make them attend to business."

Not only that but, "it would be neglect of duty for him to concentrate his mind on the New York City Hall and its duties for four years."

He further asserts that Mr. Hearst has no right to concentrate on details. Mr. Brisbane reverts to ancient history thus:

"He (Mr. Hearst) was nominated once, elected and swindled out of the election. And on that occasion he carried the city of New York without the help of any politician or any organization except that of a newspaper protecting and working for its readers."

"Now the Democrats need somebody strong enough to win for them against a combination of big money and fake reform, and they want to get Hearst because they know he can win whenever the voters are allowed to count their votes."

"The Washington Times advises Mr. Hearst most earnestly to keep out of it."

FLORIDA EDITORS UNITE FOR PROFIT AND PROTECTION.

Florida editors are going to make a determined campaign before the legislature this year for protection against the "swat the newspaper" legislation which has been in vogue in recent years and they are also going to make a strong fight for more national advertising, according to Wayne Thomas, managing editor of the Plant City Courier and the new president of the Florida State Press Association.

WAYNE THOMAS.

The medium through which the fighting will be done is the Florida Publishers Auxiliary, which is the outgrowth of the ideas of several active members of the state press association. It has called a meeting of all members of the latter body on August 18, at which plans of operation will be explained.

The auxiliary will also act as a central purchasing station for supplies and will work to stop the "graft" that has prevailed in some quarters in this field.

NICHOLSON FREED, AS SANE.

James Nicholson, for many years connected with English and American newspapers and at one time private secretary to the late "Buffalo Bill," has at last, after a long and hard fight, won his battle for freedom from the New York State Hospital for the Insane.

He claims that while employed in the general manager's office of the New York Herald, quite a long time ago, he was put away in the insane asylum, wrongfully and illegally, by persons whose jealousy and animosity he had innocently aroused.

For the present Mr. Nicholson is trying to recover his health and freedom from the ill effects of the constant mental strain incident to confinement among the insane, by helping out friends, farming and gardening, at East Hauppauge, N. Y. Incidentally, he says, his savings and property were confiscated during his incarceration and he is making efforts now to recover them.

Being a British subject, Mr. Nicholson has appealed to the British ambassador, but he has not availed himself of the offer of aid as yet, having preferred to fight out his battle alone.

During his confinement Mr. Nicholson kept a diary of his experiences, and it is said to contain some interesting facts about life in an insane asylum, but he is unwilling to have it published while he is alive.

In commenting upon his confinement, all Mr. Nicholson would be quoted as saying was this:

"The knowledge that no friend of mine in any sense of the word had anything to do with my incarceration, or ever doubted my sanity; and that the attempt to place the unjust stigma of insanity upon my family, through me, has so far failed, is gratifying beyond all words."

"I have always believed in playing the game of life fairly and squarely, and accepting without a murmur whatever cards were dealt out to me. But I certainly have had a raw deal this time. However, I am still an optimist."

P. H. Volbach has taken over the management of the Reeder (N. D.) Western Call.

"DRYS" TO SPEND MILLION IN NEWSPAPER ADS.

A million dollar newspaper advertising campaign will shortly be started for national prohibition by the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America through its department on publicity. The chairman of this is the Rev. Charles Stelzle.

"The action of the Senate regarding national prohibition has made it seem wise to make known our arrangements earlier than we had intended," said Mr. Stelzle this week. "For several months we have been shaping up machinery the purpose of which is to obtain 10,000 deputies in 3,500 cities and towns to push a national million dollar advertising campaign against the liquor traffic."

In the campaign outlined by Mr. Stelzle it is proposed that the advertising columns of every worth while daily and weekly newspaper in the country will be used.

"Our million dollar campaign has been preceded by an exhaustive study of the economic conditions in both 'dry' and 'wet' states," he states, "so that the arguments of the liquor men may be fairly met in the newspaper advertising columns."

ADS TO BAR MORTARS.

A large majority of the residents of Kent Island, Md., in the Chesapeake Bay, who are engaged in a vigorous protest against the proposition of the Government to buy the island as a site for an ordnance proving station, have begun an advertising campaign in their behalf, with the hope of influencing Congress against the proposition. Their idea is to try to get public sentiment with them.

"We may not be at war with Austria-Hungary, but Austria-Hungary and Bulgaria and Turkey are at war with this nation when they continue to fight by the side of Germany. Every publication under the control of nationals of the countries allied with Germany is at heart anti-American."

"Authority to exercise a strict censorship over all such publications should be inherent in the war power that belongs to the President when the nation is at war. The fiction that we are at war only with Germany should not blind us to the obvious fact that Germany's allies are at war with us."

"Public opinion can be trusted to deal with the 'reptile' press published in English, but only the Government can deal with that portion of the foreign language press that is aiding the enemy. It is the duty of the Government to deal drastically with the menace it presents."

FRENCH PAPER MAKING.

The manufacture of paper has long been a leading industry of Southwestern France and the Midi, but the present scarcity of labor, raw materials, and the means of producing power are causing concern among the operators, says Vice-Consul Asel D. Beeler, at Bordeaux.

It appears there is an unusual opportunity for the introduction of modern American-made paper-making machinery, raw materials, and even manufactured products into this territory, and should new tariff arrangements be effected, such as are being contemplated with a view to a more general use of raw materials from the French colonial sources, Consul Beeler thinks this market would become of even more interest to American exporters. He states:

"The natural resources and characteristics of the greater part of southwestern France are probably more favorable to the development and operation of the pulp and paper making industry than other sections of the country. Power for the operation of the plants may be derived from the rivers of the Pyrenees as well as from those flowing westward through Gironde, Dordogne, and Charente. Both Gironde and the Landes have extensive woodlands that furnish material for the pulp makers, and most of the cities supply considerable quantities of rags and waste for grinding and making into better grades of paper."

"Also the proximity of the plants to the seaboard and their favorable location on navigable streams afford a fairly ready means of access to French colonial and foreign markets and sources of raw material. These are some of the particularly advantageous features enjoyed by the French manufacturers of paper."

"The present difficulties have received unusual consideration on the part of those interested in the industry and also by economists and journalists generally."

MASSSES MAY BE BARRED FROM MAILS UNTIL OCTOBER.

The August number of the Masses, a New York magazine that was refused admission to the mails because it was alleged to contain matter that might prove an obstacle to the successful operation of the draft law, has small chance of being mailed while its contents bear on current events.

Judge Hough of the United States Circuit Court has stayed the operation of the injunction granted by Judge Learned Hand of the Federal District Court restraining Postmaster Patten from further withholding the magazine from the mails until the appeal taken by the Government can be decided by the Circuit Court of Appeals.

Notwithstanding that Judge Hough in his opinion said that the Circuit Court could be convened at any time, it is unlikely that the case will be argued before October. The case was argued before him last week at Windsor, Vt.

The opinion said that the Postmaster General had found that the Masses sought to promote a mutinous, disloyal, and insubordinate spirit among troops and that the district court did not disagree as to that, but held that because the publishers of the magazine stopped short of urging resistance, the law was not violated. As to the rights of the public to use the mails the opinion said:

"In respect to the mails the United States is certainly not a common carrier. It is pursuing a high governmental duty and it is at least arguable whether any constitutional government can be compelled to assist in the dissemination and distribution of something which proclaims itself 'revolutionary,' which exists not to reform, but to destroy the rule of any party, clique or faction that could give even lip service to the Constitution of the United States. So far as the parties are concerned, the present and actual situation is such that any wrong suffered by plaintiff can be wholly redressed by damages."

The order of Judge Hough requires the filing of a bond of $10,000 by Postmaster Patten within five days to cover any costs which plaintiff may obtain.

The Masses for September is out but has not passed through the mails yet.

BARRED FROM MAILS FOR ANTI-DRAFT AD.

The entire edition of Kissimmee (Fla.) Gazette was barred from the mails because of an advertisement of a mass meeting to consider legality of the draft law and make preparations to fight it.

PACIFIC CABLE SNAPPED, BUT WAS NOT CUT.

Rumors from Germanic sources attempting to connect interruption in the Commercial Cable Company's service to the Philippines and China with the recent British Government order prohibiting transatlantic wireless messages were disposed of on August 6 by officials of the company who said that the interruption was due only to a break in the cable between Guam and Manila. A repair ship had already left Shanghai, it was said, and the service was likely to be resumed shortly. There has been no interruption of messages to Japan.

Brigadier General Frank McIntyre, chief cable censor, commenting on a publication in a New York German newspaper regarding interruption from San Francisco to the Philippines and China, so that dispatches may only be sent by way of Europe, said that, although there might have been some slight interruption in the service, the War Department did not know of it.

"Certainly there is no reason for it, if there has been any interruption, that can be attributed to the war," he said. "It has happened several times in the last few years. The War Department sent a cablegram today over this cable route, and I have not heard that it failed to get through. No embargo has been put on this cable for commercial use."

He got back into newspaper work in Youngstown, Ohio, working for the Vindicator, Sun and News at different times and also serving as managing editor of the Youngstown Telegram. Early in the nineties he returned to Pennsylvania to become associated with newspapers in McKeesport. He was on the Herald and the News in that city and later went with the Allegheny Record.

Three years later he was Boston manager of the Publishers Press, for which he did some excellent writing and then returned to Pittsburgh. He was for two and a half years Sunday editor of the Pittsburgh Gazette and for the past seventeen years had been associated with the Dispatch, for about eight years handling both the Sunday and dramatic editorships.

MAGAZINE NOTES.

Edgar G. Criswell, for almost three years executive manager of the Quoin Club, which is now the advertising division of the Periodical Publishers' Association, has resigned to return to his former connection with the advertising department of Doubleday, Page & Co., in their New York office. He will take up his work there August 20. In the meantime he is on vacation.

Harold A. Holmes has purchased a substantial interest in the Peoples Popular Monthly and has been elected a director of the company.

E. C. Wolf, formerly with the Curtis Publishing Company, has joined the staff of Collier's Weekly.

Bartley J. Doyle, president and general manager of the Keystone Weekly, Philadelphia, has purchased the entire capital stock of the company and will change the publication from the weekly to the monthly field, beginning September 1.

William G. Palmer, who was recently elected second vice-president of the Canton Magazine Company, publisher of Today's Housewife, has been appointed business manager of that magazine. Mr. Palmer has been associated with the magazine for two years and prior to that was with the Butterick Publishing Company.

FRENCH PAPERS ASKED TO RAISE PRICES.

An Interministerial Press Committee, which consists of delegates representing the Parisian and French provincial press and the Ministers of Commerce and Interior, has decided that 1-cent newspapers shall increase the price to 2 cents on August 15, when they will be permitted to appear as 4-page papers five times weekly instead of two, as at present.

The committee's decisions have no legal force, but depend upon the willingness of the newspapers to observe them. The committee wishes that there shall be an agreement among editors whereunder its acts should receive a legal status. Several newspapers question the possibility of solving the paper crisis on such lines.

The price of paper before the war was 27 francs. Now it is 105. A special importation from Scandinavia is advocated, especially as it is no longer possible to count on America, which L'Intransigeant says has more important freight to send.

decision rendered by Judge E. K.

The litigation was based on criti-in the Times-Picayune, attacking the system of management of the East

Louisiana Hospital for the Insane, at Jackson, La., and the official conduct of Dr. Pierson. Judge Skinner awarded Dr. Pierson a judgment for $7,500 damages, and it is from this judgment that the appeal has been taken.

Hear What They Say:

"The Monotype Non-Distribution System makes it possible for the compositor, under more likable conditions, to devote 97 per cent of his time to constructive work, while only 3 per cent is spent in distribution—certainly a most beneficial change."—J. E. MARTIN, Superintendent New York Sun.

"I fail to see how any progressive newspaper can afford to run a plant without this latest aid to the printer any more than it could afford to install case-type in place of composing machines for news composition."—HENRY D. ASHBY, Superintendent Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"I believe the Monotype has done and will continue to do more for the efficiency of newspaper composing rooms than any machine now in existence in the printing business."—MILLY S. MONTAGUE, Foreman New Haven Union.

"No time is lost in distribution or hunting for sorts, and our make-up men clean out dead pages in a fraction of the time formerly required. With our own complete type foundry we publish the Star each day with a brand new dress."—F. L. STEENROD, Foreman St. Louis Star.

"Recently we issued a 120-page edition without any appreciable call on our supply of type—never lost a minute for picking sorts. I consider that this alone should recommend the Monotype to every newspaper publisher in the land."—T. E. BILLINGS, Foreman Macon Telegraph.

"The use of the Monotype Type-and-Rule Caster spells efficiency and economy at every turn in production; there is no waste of time or lost labor."—HENRY J. THEIS, Foreman Telegraph-Herald, Dubuque, Iowa.

"What we are doing is to can or preserve idle time by converting it into tools for the hand compositor. When we have copy all day we simply open a few cans instead of putting on extras or working overtime."—J. H. S. KELLER, Superintendent Times-Dispatch, Richmond, Va.

"In our opinion the Monotype is one of the greatest time and labor saving machines on the market and under no circumstances could we be induced to go back to the old way of distribution and the continual picking, pulling, and searching for sorts, leads, slugs and rules."—R. E. L. BROWN, Superintendent Daily Oklahoman, Oklahoma City, Okla.

"There is no waste time in distribution, no sorting of leads or slugs, no unsightly mounds of brass or galleys of pi; but all is productive."—JAMES STALLING, Superintendent Pittsburg Post-Sun.

"I am a great believer in the Monotype; especially the Non-Distribution System. It is a great time and labor saver for the printer and money maker for the office."—C. E. KING, Foreman Arkansas Gazette, Little Rock, Ark.

"In three months' time we produced 10,000 inches of ads in excess of the preceding year with the same number of men. We hardly believe it would have been possible to do this without the Monotype System."—CLIFFORD EMMONS FALES, Superintendent Evening Gazette, Worcester, Mass.

"We find the Monotype Non-Distribution System makes the composing room a constant producer, where formerly we used much valuable time for distribution. The Monotype with its Non-Distribution System is certainly a time saver and a success."—ARTHUR HEATH, Foreman Cincinnati Enquirer.

"I consider the Monotype a labor saver, time saver and all-around utility as a newspaper equipment—a crowning achievement in the matter of producing a daily newspaper."—ARTHUR COOPER, Foreman Quebec Daily Telegraph.

"We are operating Monotype Non-Distribution successfully in our composing room, and the time does not seem far off when every newspaper in the country will stop distributing, because Monotype Non-Distribution is so obviously practical, efficient and economical."—J. C. SHEPARD, Knickerbocker Press, Albany, N. Y.

"I do not see how we could get along without the Monotype Non-Distribution System. It is a mighty good thing for any newspaper plant, no matter how large or how small it is."—J. P. McCULLOUGH, Harrisburg Telegraph, Harrisburg, Pa.

"We produce the greatest volume in a given time with continuous type-setting, and no stoppages at any time to distribute or reclaim material."—W. V. GOWELL, Superintendent Cleveland Leader and News.

"A feature of the system as important as Non-Distribution is the increased efficiency of the compositors, resulting from abundant material—efficiency which, when necessary, makes time 100 per cent productive."—W. C. ACKER, Sioux City Tribune.

"The newspaper foreman is the fellow who must keep down costs in the composing room. We have found that the Monotype Non-Distribution System solves the problem of costs."—W. S. HANCOCK, Flint Daily Journal, Flint, Mich.

A Musical Record!

Buyers of Pianos, player pianos and talking machines are generally substantial, home-loving people.

Families like this are apt to read a newspaper that is brought into the home at night rather than taken away from the home in the morning.

Such a paper is The Chicago Daily News.

Sellers of musical instruments know this and buy more space in The Daily News six days a week than they buy in any other Chicago newspaper in six days. The figures for musical instrument advertising in Chicago newspapers for the first six months of 1917 are:

	Agate Lines
THE DAILY NEWS	156,380
The American	117,064
The Tribune	116,584
The Examiner	68,916
The Herald	57,176
The Post	38,973
The Journal	27,428

This musical record should be interesting to all advertisers wanting to tell their story to Chicago homes.

WAR TAXES ARE NOT ONLY HIGH BUT UNSOUND.

SENATOR WEEKS MOVES TO EASE LEVY ON PUBLISHERS—SMALL NEWSPAPER MEN AT ODDS WITH BIG DAILIES.

Are the "newspaper clauses" in the pending War Revenue Bill even more dangerous as precedents than they are costly as involving immediate additions to the expense of newspaper publication?

This is a question that has been shoved into top-of-column position by the developments of the past week.

It was forgotten for a while when Senator Weeks of Massachusetts introduced amendments to the War Revenue bill to eliminate Section 1101, imposing an addition of one-fourth of a cent a pound to the existing rate for second-class postage, and also Section 1106, which imposes an additional tax upon publishers of newspapers and periodicals of 5 per cent of net income in excess of $4,000.

These two taxes, Senator Weeks contends, are excessive. In explaining his motive for offering the amendments he said:

"I am opposed to raising the second-class postage rate at this time because of the peculiar conditions which exist. For the same reason I can see no necessity for imposing a special tax on the newspaper and periodical publishers. If the statements made by the publishers are dependable, the newspaper and periodical industry has been hit harder by the war than any other business. While I believe that, when we return to normal conditions, the second-class postal rates should be increased, I think it would be unfair to increase them now, or to impose other special taxes upon the publishers."

The postal increase and the tax of 5 per cent on net incomes as carried in the bill are both extra levies, the publishers coming, besides, under the provisions of the normal income and other fixed taxes.

But an uneasy feeling has developed on the part of not a few newspaper publishers who are most closely in touch with the situation that the scheduled advance in second-class mail rates may be only an entering wedge and that the special tax upon publishers' profits, if sanctioned, may ultimately take on a higher percentage than the 5 per cent settled upon by the finance committee of the Senate.

From the very outset, a few of the newspaper publishers who journeyed to Washington to try moral suasion upon the members of the Senate finance committee had an uneasy feeling that bad as were the initial proposals it might be a case where the worst was yet to come. However, a majority of publishers seem not to have shared these misgivings. They figured that Congress was doing its dullest at the outset.

This week, the view of the minority that fears for the newspaper tax burden once a foothold has been gained, was strengthened appreciably by the bomb exploded by Secretary McAdoo.

When the Secretary of the Treasury explained that the war is costing far more than anticipated (especially the task of financing our Allies) and that an enormous additional loan must be floated within the next six or eight months, he as much as forecasted not only new taxes but sharp increases in most of the war taxes already determined upon.

Meanwhile, newspaper men who have been reading closely the Senate speech and the committee report prepared by Chairman Simmons in sponsoring the revised revenue bill have found tangible evidence that the head of the finance committee anticipates that war taxes will have to be pyramided later on. For example, note one comment by Senator Simmons to the effect that:

"If the rates upon incomes and war profits were fixed at the highest level consistent with best revenue producing results, there might be but little margin left for such further increases in rates as it may be found expedient to impose to meet future demands for additional revenue."

The realization that there is more at stake than appears on the surface is what has brought about the quickened effort this week to stir up sentiment in the House of Representatives calculated to beget opposition to the publishers' special tax when the Revenue bill goes to conference.

SPECIAL TAXES ABHORRENT.

Representatives are being appealed to by newspaper publishers with the plea that the tax upon the net income of newspaper properties is wholly illogical and inconsistent and to back up the argument there is being called to the attention of the Congressmen certain damning acknowledgments on the part of the Senate finance committee.

For example, the report to the Senate indicates that the committee had under consideration a tax upon automobile manufacturers but abandoned the idea because it was found upon investigation "that over 80 per cent of the manufacturers were making very small profits."

Similarly, attention is being directed to the fact that the committee justifies its elimination of a special tax upon musical instruments, automobile tires, and other articles by the explanation that "these same manufacturers are subjected to high taxes upon their net profits and a heavy additional tax upon their excess profits." This raises the question of how, if double taxation is sought to be avoided, publishers are in any different position from the other manufacturers mentioned, because the Senate bill clearly states that the proposed extra tax upon newspaper income is "in addition to the taxes under existing law and under this act."

PUBLISHERS STILL NOT UNITED.

There is no question but what the most serious weakness of the newspaper publishers' campaign against objectionable features of the war tax (Continued on Thirty-first Page.)

SENATE BILLS HIT SEDITION.

ALIEN LANGUAGE PRESS MUST PRINT POLITICAL COMMENT IN ENGLISH, SAYS KING.

Seditious utterances by alien newspapers and individuals received attention in the Senate this week, when Senator King of Utah introduced two bills aimed at the suppression of unpatriotic sentiments, printed and verbal.

The first bill, aimed principally at newspapers printed in German and other foreign languages, provides that whenever they publish any comment upon the acts or policies of the United States Government during the war they must print, in parallel columns, an English translation of it. Violation of the statute is punishable by exclusion from the mails and it is also made unlawful for any person to publish or distribute the offending publication, under penalty of a maximum fine of $500, a year's imprisonment or both.

The other bill, said to be directed chiefly against the lawless utterances of the I. W. W. and other agitators, provides that naturalized citizens who utter or excite sedition be deprived of their naturalization papers and be subject to deportation from the country. Alien enemies violating the law may be interned or otherwise dealt with.

The bill affecting publications printed in any language other than English provides:

"That during the pendency of the present state of war and until peace shall be concluded and the fact be declared by proclamation of the President, it shall be unlawful for any person to print or publish, in the German, or in any language other than the English language any comments respecting the Government of the United States, its policies, international relations, the state or conduct of the war, or of any matter relating thereto, without printing or publishing in a column parallel to such matter a true and complete translation of the same in the English language.

"Any print or publication in German or any other foreign language which does not conform to the provisions of this act shall not be admitted to the mails, and it shall be unlawful for any person to transport, carry, or otherwise publish or distribute the same.

"Any person violating the provisions of this act shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or by imprisonment for a period of not more than one year, or may, in the discretion of the court, be both fined and imprisoned."

The measure dealing with naturalized citizens provides:

"That if any person who shall have been naturalized as a citizen of the United States within twenty years prior to the date of approval of this act, shall speak, utter, print, or publish words or statements which shall in their nature or intent be disloyal to the Government of the United States, or which shall tend to excite sedition or insurrection, or to impede the prosecution of the war or of the laws relating to the same, such person shall be deemed to have procured his papers of naturalization by fraud and shall be deemed to have taken the oath of allegiance to the United States mala fide and with a mental reservation to retain a qualified allegiance to the foreign prince, government, or potentate to which such person owed allegiance at the time of taking such oath.

"That in any such case, the Attorney General of the United States is directed to institute proceedings in any District Court of the United States having jurisdiction of the person of such naturalized citizen, for the cancellation of his papers of naturalization, such person shall have the status of an alien and shall be subject to deportation from the United States, as provided by law, or if such person have the status of an alien enemy, he may be interned or otherwise dealt with as provided by law."

The two bills will be called up for vote next week.

AMERICAN SOCIALIST LOSES MAIL PRIVILEGE.

The American Socialist, the official weekly publication of the National Socialist Party, has received word from Washington that its second class mailing privilege is revoked. This order is said to have grown out of the fact that the last three issues of the publication in June were held unavailable under the espionage law.

"Because these issues were held to be in violation of the censorship clause in the espionage act," said J. L. Engdahl, the editor, "it is asserted that the continuity of the American Socialist has been interrupted, and that therefore our mailing privilege must be revoked."

"We had a hearing before the Third Assistant Postmaster General in Washington three weeks ago. Our attorney had an interview with President Wilson early this week, and the President declared he thought it a mistake to suppress Socialist papers. The Department of Justice also declares there is nothing in violation of the law in our paper. Two Federal Judges, one in Baltimore and another in New York City, have overruled the edicts of the Post Office Department."

"While a score of publications have had various editions held up under the censorship clause of the espionage act, the American Socialist is the first publication to lose its second class mailing privilege."

"We are planning to make application for another second class mailing permit. In the meantime the paper will be issued as usual, and we shall try to reach as many of our subscribers as possible with the means at our disposal."

COLUMBUS MONITOR PLANT SALE ON AUGUST 29.

Appraisers' reports on the insolvent Columbus Daily Monitor were filed on August 10 and Common Pleas Judge Rogers ordered the property to be offered for sale on August 29. The order was requested by E. Howard Gilkey, receiver.

The report gave the furnishings and stock at the Monitor plant a valuation of $87,685.65. A value of $45,927.80 was given the contents of the press room; the composing room is figured at $29,429.88.

According to the report the Monitor suspended publication with $19,178.04 worth of print paper in the cellar.

The book value of the office half-tone cuts and matrices was placed at $5740.59.

The engraving department was valued at $1047.94.

The New York Tribune announces the addition to its staff of Richard H. Lee, now special attorney to the Vigilance Committee of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World.

Lee is the man whose efforts led to the exposure of A. C. Bidwell and the International Automobile League. He uncovered the stock jobbing activities of the Emerson Motors and Ford Tractor Companies. His investigations put a stop to the deceptive advertising of the Alliance Tire and Rubber Co., the International India Rubber Co., and the Ebert-Duryea Farm Tractor Co.

Mr. Lee has taken a place in American business as one of the most constructive and thorough investigators of dishonest practices in the country. In dealing with questionable advertising he has relied upon factful publicity as his corrective agent.

The sane and just manner in which Mr. Lee carries on his work has won him not only the confidence of the advertising fraternity but also the confidence and co-operation of legitimate business and public prosecutors, both federal and state.

Newspaper men know the constructive work so far done by Samuel Hopkins Adams. Those familiar with Richard H. Lee's ability can form a pretty accurate idea of what these two pioneers for truth in advertising can do working together. With Mr. Lee's coming September 1st, the Tribune will continue on even bigger and broader lines its fight for Truth in Advertising.

PAID NEWSPAPER ADS FOR LIBERTY LOAN?

McADOO CONSIDERING IT—OPPOSITION IS STRONG—POSTERS AND BUTTONS PLANNED—CONGRESS NOT HOSTILE.

"We will use all the mediums of advertising and publicity that were employed before—only more so."

This was the statement of policy made to THE FOURTH ESTATE this week by Oscar A. Price, the new director of publicity for the next installment of the Liberty Loan, when asked what the Treasury Department proposed to do to sell the American public the second slice of the world's biggest war loan.

When asked, however, what was to be the good word with respect to paid newspaper advertising for the new bond campaign Director Price side-stepped.

"That question is before the Secretary of the Treasury right now," he said.

"Secretary McAdoo, who recognizes that a decision must be made without delay, is giving this question of paid advertising in the newspapers his earnest personal consideration, and I anticipate that he will very soon announce his decision, perhaps in the form of a letter to one of the newspapers or the advertising agencies that have had this matter up with the Treasury."

According to the information given this week to the Washington correspondent of THE FOURTH ESTATE the Treasury Department Bureau of Publicity is disposed to sit tight with respect to the reemployment of all the forms of publicity that proved successful "last time," despite the fact that there has been some pretty sharp criticism of some of these publicity stunts and despite the even more significant fact that some of the private interests whose cooperation made a success of certain features of the last campaign will not chip in so generously this time nor engage in team-play so enthusiastically.

POSTERS APLENTY.

A visitor to the Liberty Loan Publicity Bureau scarce needs Mr. Price's assurance that the Treasury is going to plunge on posters even more heavily than it did in the spring.

The walls of the publicity quarters are covered with multi-colored posters in the one sheet and half sheet sizes, submitted as candidates for entry in the next drive. The chances are that this autumn's crop of Liberty Loan posters will run ahead of that in the spring, when an aggregate edition of 1,800,000 posters was put out by the United States Government Printing Office in addition to hundreds of thousands issued independently by banks, Liberty Loan committees, etc.

The plans for the next Liberty Loan call for another liberal appropriation for buttons to be worn in the lapels of purchasers of Liberty Bonds. This stunt, which involved the purchase last time of more than 4,000,000 buttons, represented one of the big expenditures of real money in connection with marketing the bonds and the plan was subjected to some pretty severe criticism from leading bankers, who contend that this form of advertising is so transient, so intangible and so indirect in influence that may be said to virtually represent a waste of money. Evidently Treasury officials do not share this pessimism.

TREASURY BUREAU BAN NEWSPAPERS.

If Secretary McAdoo decides, as evidence of good faith, to place some paid advertising with the newspapers that have given and will give in future so much news space to free publicity for the Liberty Loan he will have to act, in a measure, against the advice of almost all the officials in the Treasury Department to whom he would naturally look for counsel under such circumstances.

This, at least, is the very definite impression gained by a representative of THE FOURTH ESTATE who this week sounded various Treasury executives who may be expected to have some say in the matter.

Various excuses were given for not purchasing newspaper space, but the most common one, strange to say, is the erroneous assumption so often advanced in connection with the previous campaign—namely, the claim that the Treasury Department has no money to pay for newspaper space.

Men occupying places of responsibility in connection with the marketing of the Liberty Loan gravely stated to THE FOURTH ESTATE this week that there appears to be no way in which the department can obtain funds for paid newspaper advertising, unless Congress can be induced to make a special appropriation for this specific purpose—something that everybody realizes is the height of improbability.

CONGRESS EXPECTED NEWSPAPER SPACE WOULD BE PAID FOR.

In taking this tack the Treasury officials persisted in ignoring the fact that the appropriation of $5,000,000 made by Congress for the manufacture and marketing of the $5,000,000,000 bond issue is a blanket appropriation, to be apportioned as the Secretary of the Treasury sees fit. Congress laid down no hard and fast rules.

There is nothing to prevent the expenditure of a portion of this fund for newspaper space any more than there is to dictate with respect to expenditures for street car cards, which were issued in great numbers for the previous campaign.

Indeed, a perusal of the debate in Congress when this item of allowance for marketing the bonds was under discussion will demonstrate conclusively that it was the expectation of the Congressmen that a considerable share of the fund provided would go for newspaper space.

An objection to the purchase of newspaper display that has been urged upon Secretary McAdoo by influences within the Department is to the effect that if paid space is used in any newspaper in the country it will be necessary to buy space in every newspaper, even to the smallest weekly.

In elaboration of the dilemma—and this will cause newspaper men to smile—it is argued that there will be dissatisfaction if there is a difference in the rates paid by the Government and that the publisher of the small daily of limited circulation will feel that he should receive if not the same rate as the metropolitan daily, at least a rate out of all proportion, when circulation is considered.

HARNESSING THE "FREE HORSE."

By and large, the whole atmosphere at the Treasury Department is one of confidence that all the agencies of publicity and advertising can be counted upon to again rise to the occasion and give of their time, resources and service to push the sale of "war bonds."

A suspicion that there may be an overdose of optimism was engendered on the part of THE FOURTH ESTATE representative when, following his talks with various Treasury officials, he interviewed several bankers of national prominence who had come to Washington for a similar purpose—namely, to get pointers on the next bond campaign. None of these bankers was willing to be quoted, but one and all they said confidentially that the banks and the bankers' committees are not going to do anything like the amount of advertising for the next edition of the Liberty Bonds that they did for the initial issue.

"We felt from the first," said one prominent banker, "that there was nothing in it for us but a lot of hard work, and when our board of directors saw the bills they got cold feet in earnest."

"Take it from me, most of the banks will advertise the next bond issue but the advertising will be in limited space, incidental to their regular space, and there will be, I think, few of the page and double page spreads that were placed in May and June."

NATIONAL ADVISORY BOARD AGAIN URGES ADS.

The National Advertising Advisory Board of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World on August 16 sent a delegation to Washington headed by Herbert S. Houston, of New York, chairman of the board, to urge Secretary McAdoo to spend from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000 in advertising the next issue of Liberty Loan bonds.

A detailed scheme, originally outlined before the issuance of the first Liberty Loan bonds, was presented to Secretary McAdoo, calling for a division of the advertising among daily, weekly and monthly newspapers, in addition to the utilization of magazines, printed posters, circulars, billboards and other agencies. A program involving an expenditure of about $1,250,000 was outlined.

No decision was reached. Mr. McAdoo spoke of the difficulties under which the department would labor in attempting to place such advertising in a large way, and the limited appropriation placed at his disposal by Congress with which to bear all expenses of the issue.

The board and the agencies which it represents gave their services free to the Government in advertising the first issue and the same services, Mr. Houston stated, would be given the Government again without cost in advertising the second issue. The expenditure sought would be devoted purely to payment for advertising space.

"While the great bulk of the daily press will expect to charge for space," the board's recommendation says, "it will gladly give the minimum rate, although the amount of space to be used would not entitle the Government to that rate, and will give preferred position to the advertising."

The only cost for posters, or billboards, the board reported, to be placed in 3,000 cities and towns, would be the printing of the posters and the distribution. Space in thousands of street cars has been offered without charge and the only cost would be the printing and shipping of cards.

COLUMBIA PRIZES AGAIN OFFERED.

ACHIEVEMENTS IN LETTERS AND JOURNALISM TO BE RECOGNIZED.

Columbia University has again announced a collection of prizes which hold considerable interest for the newspaper men and writers of the United States. The competitions were instituted for the first time last fall and several of the prizes were awarded in June, 1917, others being withheld for the lack of suitable material.

A prize of $1,000 will be awarded in June, 1918, for the best paper on the future improvement and development of the Pulitzer School of Journalism.

A gold medal, valued at $500, is the reward for the most meritorious public service rendered by any American newspaper.

The American novel published during the year which best portrays the wholesome atmosphere of American life will be awarded a prize of $1,000 and for the original play performed in New York which best represents the educational value and power of the stage in raising the standard of good morals, good taste and good manners, a similar reward is held forth.

The best history of the services rendered to the public by the American press in the preceding year will receive an award of $1,000.

The best example of reporting during the year will receive a $500 prize.

The best book of the year on the history of the United States will receive a prize of $3,000 and the best American biography will receive a $1,000 award.

THIS YEAR'S WINNERS.

A prize of $500 was awarded to the New York Tribune last June for its editorial on the first anniversary of the sinking of the Lusitania. It was written by Frank H. Simonds.

Herbert Bayard Swope, city editor of the New York World, won the $1,000 prize for the best piece of reporting, the judges considering his articles on internal affairs in the German empire as the best submitted.

THE VALUE OF THE TECHNICAL PRESS TO THE AMERICAN BUSINESS MAN.

"American business men do not realize the value which trade journals and technical magazines may have for them in increasing the efficiency of their factories and in giving them a broad and comprehensive view of their business.

"Our foreign competitors read almost every article published upon their business with great care and thoroughness. Many of them have duplicate copies of their favorite trade paper sent to their homes so that they may read them away from the business without being disturbed. Many foreign manufacturers contribute articles to these journals on phases of the business with which they are most familiar. Such articles are bound to be helpful and have a constructive effect.

"Our trade journals and technical papers are the best in the world, and they should be supported and encouraged by our business men. Copies should be placed where employees can see them and they should be urged to read and study them.

"These papers are preaching the gospel of sound business on practical lines and are helpful not only to business but to the country as a whole.

"If the suggestions made by them in the past had been followed by our business men it would not be necessary at this time to point out some of the fundamental weaknesses in American business."

—Edward N. Hurley, formerly chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, in "The Awakening of Business."

WAR NEWS WRITERS INEXPERIENCED.

YOUTH A HANDICAP, DECLARES
VON WIEGAND IN TALK ON GERMANY.

American newspaper men engaged in foreign service are, in many cases too young, according to Karl M. von Wiegand, who last week landed in New York from Stockholm, whence he had gone after being released from Berlin. He had represented the International News Service in the German capital for several months prior to the entry of the United States in the war and had been there for United Press and the New York World since the opening of the struggle.

"Yes, American newspaper men send men abroad without the knowledge or the experience to fit them for the task," Mr. von Wiegand told THE FOURTH ESTATE, "and the news sent back to the United States by these correspondents is handled by desk men who cannot possibly have the definite knowledge necessary to assign the news its proper value. As a result, the American people have a hazy idea about conditions in the belligerent nations, especially those in Germany.

"Another factor which is going to make the way hard for American newspaper men after the war is the tendency of some of our journalists to distort news and break confidence. My experience in European capitals causes me to say that a successful American newspaper man abroad must be first a man, then a newspaper man and then a gentleman."

Asked as to the German treatment of American correspondents Mr. von Wiegand said:

"On the whole, we are treated fairly and with consideration. I was the last man to leave Berlin after the declaration of war and I was held for five weeks after I wanted to leave. Yes, that was the news 'quarantine' and I had to report to the police every day for five weeks. I was under constant surveillance and was not supposed to leave my hotel after 10 o'clock at night, but I did. I went to the theatre several times and nothing happened to me.

"I was held in Berlin partly because I had been anonymously denounced to the German Government as a spy of the United States State Department, but I cleared myself of that charge."

Mr. von Wiegand characterized the German military censorship as fairly

R. E. HUGHES,
NEW GENERAL BUSINESS MANAGER OF THE LOUISVILLE COURIER-JOURNAL AND LOUISVILLE TIMES.

liberal, compared with that enforced by the Allied nations. The political censorship, he said, was spasmodic, sometimes liberal and sometimes extremely strict.

"Each correspondent," he said, "received a copy of his dispatch in just the form that it was passed by the censor and put on the wires. It he was not satisfied with the treatment accorded his story by the original censor he could appeal to the chief censor and, in cases of extreme importance, to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

"Until about the middle of 1915 we were not pledged not to slip anything past the censor and I got several good stories through in that fashion. My last story of that kind was sent from Copenhagen on peace prospects. It was not looked upon with satisfaction by the authorities, who then placed me on my pledge."

From the censorship of American newspaper correspondents the talk veered to the situation of the German papers, which Mr. von Wiegand said were in hard straits, but not nearly so hard as believed in this country.

"Evening newspapers run about four pages," he said, "and carry little advertising, while morning papers vary from eight to sixteen pages and on Sunday as high as thirty-two pages have been seen. Little display advertising is carried, since practically everything in the shops is sold on cards and advertising of that kind is of little use.

"Classified advertising, however, is heavy, especially in the morning and Sunday papers.

"That the paper shortage is not so acute as is believed is shown by the fact that the Vienna Neue Freie Presse recently ran a Sunday edition of forty-eight pages."

PRESENT NEWS CENTERS.

"Since the entrance of the United States into the war," Mr. von Wiegand stated, "there has, of course, been no news sent from Germany by American correspondents, but Switzerland and the Scandinavian countries are still fruitful centers of news about the Central Powers.

"Following the American declaration, Oswald Schuetter of the Chicago Daily News went from Berlin to Switzerland, and William Bayard Hale of the Hearst papers and George T. Odell of the New York Evening Mail, transferred to Stockholm; Cyril Brown of the New York to Stockholm or Copenhagen.

"Norway, Sweden and Denmark now have a strict censorship of News and after it leaves there, it is again censored in London and in the United States, under the voluntary system, and what gets through is in the main reliable.

"Amsterdam, however, has a bad reputation among legitimate foreign correspondents, since some of the worst 'fakes' of the present war have been filed there."

In reply to a question about his future plans, Mr. von Wiegand stated that he was going to spend a short time with his family and then return to Europe in the fall, probably going to Stockholm or Copenhagen.

Meanwhile, he is writing his impressions of the German situation for the Hearst newspapers and the International News Service.

"But," he said, "the really interesting stories cannot be written until after the war."

NEW LOUISVILLE EXECUTIVE AN ACTIVE BUSINESS MAN.

R. E. Hughes, the new general business manager of the Louisville Courier-Journal and Louisville Times, has not been active in newspaper work for several years, as his business interests in Louisville and other parts of the South have been and are on a large scale.

His newspaper career began in a country newspaper office, when at the age of twelve years he became a printer's "devil" and learned enough about the business to become publisher and editor of a country weekly seven years later. He was managing editor of a Louisville daily in his twenty-eighth year.

After a few years of daily newspaper work, he entered commercial life. He has been secretary of a prominent organization of Southern business men, executive commissioner for Kentucky at the St. Louis World's Fair, president of the Kentucky Electric Company, a large public utility corporation of Louisville and also president of a chain of Louisville grocery stores.

He has also been active in civic affairs, serving as general chairman of the "million dollar factory fund" in Louisville in July, 1916, and as general chairman for Louisville of the recent Liberty Bond campaign, during which Louisville oversubscribed its allotment 95 per cent within 40 per cent of the time set and which placed a Liberty Bond in more than half of the city's homes.

OHIO PAPER RAISES PRICE.

After October 1, 1917, the price of the Elmore (Ohio) Tribune will be $1.50 per year instead of $1. Several other papers in Ottawa County have already made the change in price.

The Clinton (Neb.) Journal is the name of a new paper.

COOPERATION IN ADVERTISING.WASHINGTON HAPPENINGS AID PRESENT TREND IN PUBLICITY.

EDITOR THE FOURTH ESTATE.

SIR: War conditions have gradually quickened the trend in the direction of a special class of newspaper space buying—namely, cooperative advertising—and now comes a turn of affairs at Washington that may give further impetus to this significant new development.

It may be difficult for the uninitiated in newspaper circles to see any connection between the exit of Dr. Edward Ewing Pratt from American officialdom and furtherance of the cause of joint advertising, but Washington gossip says it is possible that a very definite connection may be established ere long.

When Dr. Pratt, at the request of Secretary Redfield, sent to the President his resignation as Chief of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce there was removed from a position of authority the chief opponent of the idea of having Uncle Sam sponsor a "Made in U. S. A." trade-mark, to be attached to all American-made goods, especially Yankee goods designed for export.

Every newspaper man and every advertising man realizes, of course, that a desire to boom a trade-mark is the surest and most lasting incentive to advertising. Inability to get into action with a "Made in U. S. A." trade-mark has proved a severe handicap and discouragement to important projects in cooperative advertising—the very sort of advertising which war conditions tend to encourage.

The "Made in U. S. A." trade-mark has had a rocky road to travel thus far. The basic idea is old, but in its present guise originated in Detroit, where a commercial organization offered a substantial prize, some time since, for the best design for such a trade-mark. The contest begot an effective design, embodying the outline of a shield and the American eagle, and many national advertisers, realizing that the disfavor into which the "Made in Germany" mark has fallen opens a wonderful opportunity to the "Made in U. S. A." mark, were anxious to get behind the new insignia for a big push in advertising and selling.

Just here, however, there loomed up the obstacles that have up to date proven insurmountable.

It was found that, for one thing, there was no feasible way of protecting the new mark against infringement or imitation and no way of censoring the goods to which it was applied to make sure that they were up to the standard in quality.

By way of gaining protection the Detroit organization would have been glad to register the new national mark at the United States Patent Office for all lines of goods, but under the United States trade-mark laws this is impracticable. Then there was talk of organizing a special body of big advertisers to administer the trade-mark, but this proved an unwieldy proposition and also several successive suggestions had to be abandoned.

Then, all of a sudden, the Detroit advertisers, who are notorious as live wires, had an inspiration—the Government must take over and administer the national trade-mark.

A bill providing that the United States Department of Commerce should act as custodian of the mark, reserving its use to all business houses that would comply with regulations, was duly introduced some time ago in the United States House of Representatives.

The New York Times Leads in Automobile Advertising

In the seven months of 1917, The New York Times published 617,678 agate lines of automobile advertising, 172,499 lines more than was printed by the second newspaper.

The gain of The New York Times for the seven months of 1917 over the corresponding period last year was 114,277 agate lines.

representatives, but it got nowhere and advertisers in general gradually came to the conclusion that the explanation was to be found on the 11th floor of the Commerce building at Washington.

Secretary of Commerce Redfield, himself a manufacturer and advertiser, made no secret of the fact that he was enthusiastic over the idea of Uncle Sam taking hold of the "Made in U. S. A." mark, but when, in the ordinary course of Governmental routine the proposition was passed on to Dr. Pratt the scheme seemed to have entered a hostile stratum of air. In any event the whole plan has been hanging fire for months, while advertisers who were ready to give big printing orders for "Made in U. S. A." ammunition have had to revise their plans.

Now that Dr. Pratt has had to make way for a practical, sure-enough business man, hope will spring anew that the Detroiters can come back with their pet scheme with a more favorable chance of putting the plan across, just as similar national advertising stunts are even now being worked in Canada, in Japan, in Ireland and in other producing communities that are anxious to cinch their own trade and also reach out for the after-the-war business of residents of other lands.

Making a common cause to boost a national trade-mark will merely serve to add one more manifestation (to say nothing of the Governmental endorsement) to a line of action that has loomed large ever since the declaration of war.

In fact, without regard to war conditions, there has been a distinctive trend in the direction of cooperative advertising.

Fruit growers, particularly the growers' associations in California and Florida, have jointly invested in newspaper space and their example has been followed by lumbermen and other producers and manufacturers who could advantageously make common cause.

Then the railroads caught the idea to some extent for their "service" advertising, but there has never been anything approaching the situation that has existed this past few months and continues to develop.

Perhaps it is because cooperation is in the air, as witness the formation of war councils and committees in every line of industry to cooperate with the government—or it may be that the advertising necessities of numerous smaller interests have driven them to join hands with others in the same boat.

Necessities of the hour have likewise brought to bear pressure for combined effort in order to put through unison of action in advertising.

The brewers of the country, confronted with the menace of a "bone-dry" nation, clipped in to buy full page space in the newspapers.

The Association of White Corn Millers, recognizing in the food crisis a supreme opportunity from their products, likewise took to advertising in newspapers on the club plan.

The list of examples might be continued at some length but instances will come to the mind of every reader.

If we may judge from indications, the war developments of the future—the labor shortage, the food situation, etc., not to mention the new Federal war taxes—will all make for cooperative advertising in the newspapers.

Industrial and commercial interests compelled to defend themselves in an era of rising prices, will be impelled to make common cause in newspaper campaigns of education addressed to the ultimate consumers in the domestic market.

And manufacturers preparing for the fierce commercial war, after the war, have good reason to plan joint sales campaigns abroad and joint missionary work under a "Made in U. S. A." banner.

CONDENSED NEWS NOTES.

The Agrimotor Magazine is a new Chicago publication devoted to the farm tractor industry. It will be a monthly and will be published at 20 East Jackson Boulevard.

The Fremont (Neb.) Tri-Weekly Tribune will be combined with the Daily Tribune in the future.

J. T. McClean has sold the Chambers (Neb.) Bugle to A. D. Scott, editor and owner of the Nebraska Printer.

The Auto Club Journal has just made its appearance as the official paper of the Vancouver (B. C.) Automobile Club.

The Portsmouth (Va.) Star is beginning a new epoch in its career by occupying a splendid building in the heart of the business district of Portsmouth, which has been enlarged to accommodate the new equipment purchased from the Mergenthaler Linotype Company and R. Hoe & Co.

A. E. Harrison sold his interest in the Alta (Ia.) Advertiser to W. I. Lyons, late publisher of the Ruthven Press.

OPEN WATER POWER TO DEVELOPMENT.

A.N.P.A. PAPER COMMITTEE CALLS IT VITAL TO NEWS PRINT INDUSTRY.

Probably one of the most important undertakings of the paper committee of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, in connection with a permanent solution of the news print situation, is the active work being done by the paper committee for water power legislation now before Congress, commented on by THE FOURTH ESTATE last week.

Early in the campaign for the development of new and permanent sources of supply, the committee realized that access must be had to that large body of pulp wood timber lying in the western Rocky Mountains, Pacific Northwest and Southeast Alaska.

In a bulletin issued by Secretary Houston of the Department of Agriculture in March of this year, he pointed out that the publishers of the country must look to these sources of supply for their future requirements. To make these magnificent bodies of timber available for conversion into pulp wood and news print, it is absolutely essential that recourse to the water powers lying adjacent thereto be had, cheap water power being the second essential in the production of mechanical pulp.

Unfortunately under the existing laws it is impossible to finance water powers lying either partially or wholly within the public domain or on navigable streams, a decision having been handed down by the United States Supreme Court in April of this year in what is known as the Utah Power case relative to water powers lying within the public domain or navigable streams which in effect states that no official of the Government has power to bind the Government by contract, and, further, that any permit for such development is subject to cancellation at any time at the pleasure of the secretary issuing such permit.

Obviously, this destroys all basis of financing. The legislation before Congress at this time, as embodied in the Walsh Bill in the Senate relating to water powers in the public domains, and the Shields Bill in the Senate and the Small Bill in the House relating to water powers on navigable streams, provide for the issuing of fifty-year permits irrevocable except upon breach of contract.

In the contemplated legislation reference is made as to tolls and adequate protection in the interests of the rights of the public. In other words, the paper committee is endeavoring to secure legislation under which financing of water powers will be possible. Until this legislation is secured, these vast areas of pulp wood timbers will not be available and there are no remaining water powers in the territory designated which do not lie partially or wholly within the public domain or on navigable streams.

While the publisher's interest in this matter is specific, this legislation is in fact of the utmost importance to the entire country, as the release of water powers under proper regulation will have a beneficial effect on practically all lines of industry as well as on food, fuel and other necessities.

When it is remembered that only about 8 per cent of the known water powers of the country are developed and that over 80,000,000 horse power is flowing in wastage to the sea, the importance of this legislation to the nation at large will be appreciated. Specifically in relation to news print it is believed it will have a future effect of from $5 to $8 per ton on news print prices.

The present manufacturers of news print have practically a monopoly of water powers under private ownership which are available for the use of converting the pulp wood stands of the Northern and Eastern states and as this timber is cut publishers of the country must look either to Canada or the Western pulp wood stands for future sources of supply. Therefore publishers throughout the country are specifically interested in this legislation and endorse the same editorially. It appears possible that if a sufficient showing of interest is manifested that there is an excellent chance to secure the passage of the legislation at this session of Congress.

NEW ZEALAND PAPER SHORT.

Because of the shortage and high prices of paper several newspapers in the different centers of the country have been obliged to suspend and several others to increase their price. In some cases to double what the charge was before the war, according to Consul-General A. A. Winslow, Auckland. The New Zealand Government has reduced the size of certain of its publications and is talking of discontinuing others.

During the past year Canada has been supplying a very large share of New Zealand's print paper imports.

"It would seem that American manufacturers might be able to furnish a larger proportion of the paper stocks consumed in this country than they now do," Consul Winslow observes.

3 CENT PAPER NOT PROMISED.

A report was current in New York this week that the sales manager of the Canadian Export Paper Company, Ltd., Montreal, had stated that his firm would sell its 1918 output of news print at 3 cents a pound, f. o. b. mill. When THE FOURTH ESTATE asked for a confirmation or denial of the story, the following reply was received from J. W. Linahan, assistant to the general manager of the company:

"The report you have received regarding our making any statement regarding price of news for 1918 is incorrect. We have not made any such statement."

PAPER SURPLUS IN TAMPA.

The Tampa (Fla.) Tribune need not fear a paper shortage this winter unless Tampa is swept by fire and earthquake, for it has over 463 tons, or almost a million pounds of news print, stored in warehouses about the city. The Tribune explains this surplus over its normal excess store of four or five tons as caused by the probability of a tie-up in shipping along the Atlantic seaboard during the coming months.

The Mobridge (S. D.) Daily Tribune is the name of a new paper that has made its appearance here.

PUBLISHERS PAPER CO. OFFICERS.

A.N.P.A. IN FULL CONTROL. WITH PAPER EXPERTS AS "MEN ON THE SPOT."

The Publishers Paper Company, Inc., has now been completely organized to handle the output and products of the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company, Ltd., and the Albert E. Reed Company, Newfoundland.

The stock of this company is all owned by the American Newspaper Publishers Association and officers have been elected as follows: President and treasurer, A. G. McIntyre; vice-president, Emil M. Scholz; secretary, Frank W. Fraser; manager, Morris W. Leahy; traffic manager, W. T. Robinson; manager manufacturing, A. A. MacDiarmid; chief accountant, A. J. Dacres.

The sale of the groundwood pulp has been disposed of to E. S. Bates, Coristine Building, Montreal, who is a pulp broker. The Publishers Paper Company itself will not handle the sales of pulp.

Manager Leahy was formerly chief engineer for the Powell River Company, Ltd., and manager of the Abitibi Power & Paper Co., Ltd.

Mr. Robinson was formerly manager of the mills at Parsons, W. Va., and at Chandler, Quebec.

Mr. MacDiarmid was formerly chief engineer for the Montreal Light, Heat & Power Company, the Bathurst Lumber Company, Ltd., and the Mattagami Pulp & Paper Company, Ltd.

Mr. Dacres was formerly accountant for Price Brothers & Co., and the Montreal Box Board Company.

In addition to this, a rail traffic man has been engaged, whose name has not yet been made public.

The entire control of the company is in the hands of the executive committee, of the committee on paper of the A. N. P. A. and the whole company will be operated to do the most good for the publishers of this country.

A number of small shipments of paper have already been received, and larger ones are following this month up to full capacity of the mill.

C. P. A. PAPER COMMITTEE.

The personnel of the special paper committee of the Canadian Press Association at present is as follows: P. D. Ross, Ottawa Journal-Press, chairman; J. F. MacKay, Toronto Globe; J. E. Atkinson, Toronto Star; John R. Robertson, Toronto Telegram; G. Fred Pearson, Halifax Chronicle; W. R. Givens, Kingston Standard; W. E. Smallfield, Renfrew Mercury; E. H. Macklin, Winnipeg Free Press; R. L. Richardson, Winnipeg Tribune; J. H. Woods, Calgary Herald; F. J. Burd, Vancouver Province; H. B. Donly, Simcoe Reformer; E. Roy Sayles, Port Elgin Times.

SAVE PAPER ON LABOR DAY.

New York evening papers have arranged not to publish on Labor Day. The paper committee of the American Newspaper Publishers Association urges the general adoption of this throughout the country. If generally accepted, this would save from 2,000 to 3,000 tons of paper, the committee says, which would be a wonderful help under present market conditions, and improve fall prospects for fair contract prices.

BRITISH PAPERS ASK RELIEF.

NEWS PRINT SELLING AT $200 A TON—ATTITUDE OF THE PAPER COMMISSION.

An article in the July issue of the Circulation Manager and Advertiser, London, England, discussing the extreme high cost in England of news print paper, appeals to the British Paper Commission to modify the import licenses by increasing the amount of ground wood and sulphite to be imported so that a reduction may be accomplished in the present prices of news print paper to English publishers.

In support of publishers' demands the article gives the manufacturing cost at the present time of one of the largest and best paper mills in England, as follows:

"Sulphite at $225 per ton, 35 per cent.	$56.25
"Ground wood at $125 per ton, 75 per cent.	$93.75
"Cost of conversion.	$42.50
"Total cost per manufactured ton.	$192.50

"The foregoing figures are for the English ton of 2240 pounds.

"Add to this one-eighth of a penny per pound for profit and you have a selling cost to the publisher of over 83 cents per pound.

"As a matter of fact paper manufacturers have been charging even a higher price than this and the only recourse the publishers have had, up to the present time, is to appeal to the Paper Commission to grant relief in individual cases from these excessive profits above cost."

[Ed.—It is interesting to note that the British Paper Commission, up to the present time, has refrained from fixing generally the price of news print paper. Instead, they have operated as an arbitration board to prevent manufacturers in individual cases from securing excessive prices.]

DUTCH PAPER STOPPED.

The Amsterdam Endhoven Dagblad has been suspended for a week by the general commanding the Dutch province of North Brabant for publishing an anti-German article about the sinking of Dutch fishing vessels.

DES MOINES PRICES RAISED.

The Des Moines Capital has raised its mail subscription rate from $3 a year to $4 a year, and to 40c a month.

The Tribune made the same increase, and the Des Moines News increased from $2.75 a year to $3.75 per year.

POST-DISPATCH IN NEW HOME.

ST. LOUIS GRACED BY ARTISTIC STRUCTURE—NEW MACHINES INSTALLED.

The St. Louis Post-Dispatch has at last moved into the new Post-Dispatch Building—an eight-story structure of stone, steel and concrete—at 12th and Olive streets, in the center of downtown St. Louis.

The building, which has been in construction for more than a year, is the fourth home of the Post-Dispatch. The cost of the building and equipment—$1,250,000—does not include the value of the ground, which is occupied under a 99-year lease.

Linotype machines and the office library, files and records were the only things moved into the new building from the building at 210-212 North Broadway, where the Post-Dispatch has been published for fifteen years.

New presses, stereotyping and photo-engraving machinery and furniture have been installed.

The first five stories of the building, except for a few storerooms on the first and second floors, are occupied by the Post-Dispatch. The floor area used by the Post-Dispatch, including the basement, sub-basement and mezzanine, is 85,565 square feet.

The remainder of the building, with a total floor area of 42,565 feet, will be rented. The building is so constructed that four more stories can be added.

The business office and the advertising department occupy the first and mezzanine floors. The first floor is artistically and elaborately finished in marble and bronze, thirteen varieties of marble being used.

What is said to be the only Belgian marble obtainable in the United States was used in the main lobby at the Olive street entrance.

In this entrance, before a background of black and white marble, stands a bronze bust of Joseph Pulitzer, founder of the Post-Dispatch, and later of the New York World. Over the elevator space is the Post-Dispatch platform, which was his message to the paper and to the public on the occasion of his retirement, in April, 1907, four years and a half before his death.

A most attractive place for visitors will be the glass-enclosed gallery, reached from the business office, which commands a view of the six presses in the basement. Five of these are octuple presses, for printing the daily Post-Dispatch and the news and want sections of the Sunday paper.

These five presses have a capacity of 11,200 pounds of paper and 4,000 pounds of ink and 3,200 pounds of stereotype plates. They can print 360,000 16-page papers an hour. The color press, which prints the comic and magazine sections, is to be installed nearby.

AD MAN AS PREACHER.

J. H. Pearson, advertising manager of the Grand Forks (N. D.) Herald, delivered an address recently in the First Baptist Church of Grand Forks on "The World's Awakening." Soldiers were specially invited to the address, which took the place of the usual Sunday morning sermon.

SHIPPING INFORMATION AGAIN TIGHTENED.

The Treasury Department has issued the following order to Collectors of Customs:

"The department is informed that there is a lack of uniformity in furnishing shipping information and statistics of imports and exports to business concerns and the press.

"It has been determined that no information in relation to shipping or statistics of imports and exports shall be given out by the Collectors of Customs. The entire matter of furnishing information of this character has been placed under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Commerce, who will compile and publish all statistical information in regard to imports and exports."

MARYLAND OFFICERS.

At the annual meeting of the Maryland Press Association, composed of the editors of 123 weekly newspapers of Maryland, the following officers were elected: President, John E. Raine, Towson New Era; vice-presidents, R. H. Collins, Chestertown Transcript; and P. B. Englar, Taneytown Record; secretary-treasurer, W. S. McCombs, Havre de Grace Republican; board of governors, C. Francis Baughman, Frederick Citizen; E. O. Diffendal, Westminster; J. Walter Mitchell, La Plata Times-Crescent; Edward B. Powell, Ellicott City Times; S. E. Shannahan, Easton Star-Democrat; Joseph M. Street, Belair Democrat; and P. Watson Webb, Cambridge Record.

STEEL COMPOSING ROOM FOR N. Y. EVENING POST.

The New York Evening Post is completing the installation of a new equipment of steel furniture for its advertising composing room, bringing that department to a high state of perfection. The work was begun last spring and will be completed by September 1.

A standardized basis is provided for the entire department. The system is the latest creation of the Keystone Type Foundry. Every tool has its appointed place and so has every type. A coordination is secured which makes possible the highest efficiency. There are composing racks, imposing stones, galley racks, storage cabinets and other devices.

BUSINESS TROUBLES.

Clifford A. Williams, advertising solicitor, Times Building and 31 Nassau street, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities of $16,987 and no assets. The debts were contracted mainly in Los Angeles and San Diego, Cal., and Chicago, for money loaned and advanced.

Among the creditors are the City National Bank of Los Angeles, $775; secured; Ewing & Miles, Inc., $4,263; Williams & Cunningham, Chicago, $2,700; Williams & Cornell, $2,200; and A. H. Williams, Oakland, Cal., $2,000.

TURNER IS WEEKLY EDITOR.

H. C. Turner has retired as editor of the Montgomery (Mo.) Leader, which is now owned by the Farmers' Bank of New Florence, Mo. He was succeeded by Charles Coleman. The high cost of publication forced the Leader on the market several weeks ago.

Linotype-Ludlow System An Absolute Necessity

The high cost of printing material, and the proportionate increase in advertising rates, has caused advertisers to "crowd" their copy. Therefore type larger than 42 or 48 point is seldom used. This makes it possible to get an entire advertisement on the modern Linotype with display lines on the Ludlow Typograph. The all-slug system of non-distribution not only is an economy, but this "crowding" of copy makes it an absolute necessity.

ADVERTISING IN MEDIUMS OF FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

WHAT AMERICAN MANUFACTURERS MUST DO AND AVOID IN DEALING WITH INTERESTS ABROAD.

BY FRANK L. AMOS.

Manager, Johnston Overseas Service, New York

Americans are the most skilled advertisers in the world. They take to it as naturally as to baseball, and merchants in every country recognize our superior ability in using the printed pages to sell goods. Yet when it comes to advertising in local mediums abroad there are many Americans afflicted with the hallucination that there is some profound mystery to be solved, that one must possess hypnotic power and have the ability of a mind reader to carry on successfully a campaign in foreign newspapers.

But the same fundamental problems which are encountered in the conduct of any phase of export trade are met in foreign advertising. Just as in this country more detail required to reach ultimate consumers than there is to take care of distributors, so appealing with success to consumers abroad through their own local mediums requires a more exact analysis of the individual trade situation and the conditions under which publications operate in each country, than is required in handling matters where the distributor alone is involved, such as shipping, financing and contracting.

American manufacturers are slowly but surely realizing that when they have sold goods to merchants abroad they have only taken the first step in building up a permanent business. The merchandise must be moved rapidly off the counters and floors of our foreign distributors just as it must in this country, and as local newspaper and magazine advertising in the United States assists in the rapid movement of merchandise so the same kind of advertising abroad properly conducted produces satisfactory results. The use of local foreign mediums, therefore, is essential to the proper development and securing of increased profits from American export business.

One condition that makes foreign advertising more complex than domestic is the fact that the publications to be used are so far distant from the manufacturer and his advertising organization. When I was foreign advertising manager of the Studebaker Corporation's automobile division, I learned that my campaigns had to be planned and prepared long before the advertising could appear; that unless great foresight was used, entirely different conditions might exist when the printed arguments were read than were in the mind of the writer some three or four months before, when he prepared his copy.

This condition arises when products which change types and models periodically are being advertised. It has frequently happened in advertising motor cars abroad, that when the advertisements finally appeared in the newspapers, after the manufacturer had brought out new models and shipped them into the same territory where old models were being advertised.

Not only must a copy-writer possess a huge bump of foresight, but he must have information from the production manager and the engineers which will enable him to prepare copy that will be suitable anywhere from three to nine months after the day it leaves his hands.

In a foreign newspaper campaign every possible detail must be planned in advance. The production situation at the factory for several months to come should be known. Local trade conditions in each country abroad should be understood. The customs of the country, the types of people and their purchasing power should be considered.

When the possibilities of marketing successfully a given product in certain countries have been determined in the light of all these essential facts, then if a definite foreign advertising policy covering an extended period is formulated and a program evolved, a budget can be placed before the directors which justifies a foreign advertising program and on the strength of sound sales argument properly supported by figures in that budget, an appropriation usually can be secured.

I have heard export managers and salesmen complain bitterly about the lack of co-operation and interest among executives, and there is ground for such complaint in many quarters, but my experience has convinced me that executives are merely human that they want "to be shown," and unless the export manager can "give a reason for the hoe that's within him" and support that reason with facts which will stand analysis, he is hardly justified in his complaints.

And to get those facts a busy export manager needs the same high type of advertising assistance and counsel as his domestic co-workers have in their field. Need of such counsel can best be emphasized by relating the experience of one manufacturer who desired to build up a foreign business quickly.

IGNORANCE OF FOREIGN MARKETS.

This manufacturer had an advertising manager who had achieved success by using large space in local newspapers all over the United States. While neither of them had previously attempted to handle any phase of export merchandising the success of their methods here convinced them that the same methods would produce similar results abroad.

The advertising manager was instructed to prepare copy for a page advertisement to appear simultaneously in the leading newspapers of every foreign city of 50,000 or more inhabitants. A domestic agency was directed to select the newspapers.

Closely written text, much of it in 8 point type, filled a page such as required by the average 7 column wide, 21 inch deep domestic newspaper. The orders and the copy went forth and the manufacturer began congratulating himself in advance on the immense volume of business and profit that must result.

There were cities in Germany and France where local competition made the sale of that manufactured article an impossibility, but the advertising appeared and was looked upon locally as a curiosity. The order reached certain cities in India at a season when no one could be interested in such an article yet the big page advertisement appeared in a number of Indian news papers.

The text was so small that a microscope was needed to read it, and New Zealanders are noted for their dislike of small type display advertisements, yet that page appeared in several New Zealand publications.

When some of the papers in Latin American cities received the order and the big copy their astonishment knew no bounds. They had never had even men such a large newspaper advertisement. When set up in the smallest type they possessed it would have occupied at least two pages. Many of these newspapers did not have enough type of any description in their establishment to set up so much copy and, as no electrotype was furnished we can imagine the situation.

Furthermore, the labor involved was too great a strain upon the nerves of these publishers. The result was that in very few places throughout Latin America did this advertisement appear. In this case the omission proved a blessing and a great money saving to the manufacturer.

At the same time orders for this page were given to newspapers in cities where the population was from 60 to 75 per cent illiterate and where under conditions as existed then, it would have been impossible to have sold and used enough of the product to pay for the advertising. As it was, enough publications the world over were induced to accept the advertising to run the cost over $50,000, and after the entire campaign was completed it was impossible to figure out then or any time in the future where anything but serious harm had resulted.

Another essential is a knowledge of the different customs and racial prejudices of every country where you want to advertise. I have known of American advertising sent to Norway where the colors red, blue and yellow were used in designs. Red blue and yellow are the national colors of Sweden, and such a combination is not popular in Norway.

Some have insisted on sending Spanish advertisements to Brazilian publishers, not realizing that Spanish is looked upon by the average Brazilian with as much fear as English is in Germany. It is true that more educated Brazilians can read Spanish, but their pocketbooks do not open readily to an appeal in a language which arouses racial prejudices and insults their patriotism.

Another factor to be dealt with in handling advertising in local mediums abroad is the lack of up-to-date equipment in the plants of most foreign publications located in the smaller cities. The newspaper situation in those cities is similar to what it used to be in this country.

Except in the larger cities, foreign publishers are far distant from well equipped electrotype foundries and engraving plants. In many cases, such as are available give very slow service, the workmanship is mediocre, and they charge excessively high prices.

Where they are weak in mechanical equipment they are even worse off for the lack of skilled mechanical assistants, and to add to our troubles their business staffs quite frequently are easy going, and according to our standard, incompetent.

But there is a large and profitable business to be secured through such advertising, and Americans who desire a good share of this patronage must take the necessary steps to avoid the delays and mistakes this condition produces, by having everything possible done in advance in this country and making it extremely easy for foreign publishers to handle the advertising. Such a procedure not only makes more sure the insertion of your advertising at the time and in the manner, you desire, but goes far towards securing the good will of the publisher.

The good will and co-operation of overseas publishers is even more valuable than at home. I recall one experience which is typical of many, where a short-sighted policy of sticking too closely to the technical requirements of the order caused almost irreparable damage to the sale of the product which was being advertised.

An American manufacturer ordered some advertising in a Latin American publication. The advertising appeared, but when the voucher copies and records were checked up it was found that some details which were not of vital importance had been overlooked by the publisher. The advertising department of this American concern had always been in the habit of checking up every detail closely and requiring both the agency and the publishers to meet the letter of the law before payment was rendered.

This practice was followed in the foreign advertising and here again the difficulty of long distance communication aggravated the situation. The manufacturer refused the agency payment and the agency passed the word on to the publisher. The publisher could see no reason for the arbitrary ruling. The advertising had appeared, it had been commented upon favorably by readers, and he knew that good business had resulted.

The publisher's pride was hurt. His anger was aroused, and although later part payment was offered, the publisher printed a scathing denunciation of both the advertising agency and the manufacturer and called on all his countrymen to avoid dealing with these Americans whom he termed dishonest. This manufacturer's prestige and business suffered severely, but he had practically no local recourse, and through no fault of inferior quality his product was for a period boycotted.

I know of one American who desired to advertise in South Africa, India and Australia and employed an organization to handle the business. The agency submitted a contract to these publications, which specified a series of thirteen advertisements and accompanied the contract with copy for one insertion.

It is quite customary in British Colonial countries, just as it was some years back in this country, to run the same copy a number of times without alteration. Because of this custom English papers quote rates on the basis of six, thirteen, twenty-six insertions, and so forth. Out of about forty newspapers included in this campaign twenty-five interpreted the order as instructions to run this one piece of copy thirteen times, and proceeded accordingly.

Copies of the papers showing the advertisements did not arrive in this country until all thirteen insertions had been run, and the agency was billed for the thirteen insertions. The manufacturer had ordered only one and had intended to follow it up with one more. The agency instructions, while ambiguous, were such that it could not be held legally responsible for the thirteen insertions.

The publishers, therefore, turned to the manufacturer and demanded payment. Some of them brought suit in the local courts and on the ground that the advertising had been of great benefit to the manufacturer they secured judgment. The manufacturer in order to continue doing business to any degree of satisfaction in these sections involved was finally compelled to settle a number of these claims. As it was, he suffered a loss of prestige and a considerable loss of business, in every community where the antagonism of publishers had been aroused by this misunderstanding due originally to incomplete and ambiguous orders.

COURTESY ESSENTIAL ABROAD.

Bluntness and lack of courtesy are practices which American publishers will stand but which greatly antagonize the average foreign publisher particularly in Latin-American countries. I recall an experience where a third party, who was acting as salesman for the manufacturer, was involved. The instructions to the publisher were to submit proofs to this salesman for final approval. The instructions were followed out, the salesman gave his O. K. and the series ran as per schedule.

Toward the end of the campaign the salesman took the publisher severely to task because prices quoted in some of the advertisements had not been changed to conform to revised quotations which this salesman had received from his home office, but about which he had neglected to notify the publisher.

Such a case in this country would be decided on its merits, and could have been there, had it not been for the harsh manner in which the representative treated the publisher. This Latin-American publisher was possessed of great dignity and he felt that his honesty had been questioned. Eminently courteous in all his dealings he politely but firmly refused to accept any more of that company's advertising.

The result was that though a new representative was soon sent, the discourtesy of the discredited representative lost the American manufacturer the good will of the leading publisher and the value of the best advertising medium in that country.

Truth telling in foreign advertising is another prime essential. American business men as a whole are as honest as Europeans and our manufactured products certainly average just as high in quality. Yet in our great enthusiasm to present the merits of our wares we are frequently inclined to put elaborate expressions in print, which when taken literally cause suspicion and in the minds of foreign friends reflect on our honesty.

"Use this famous massage cream" advertises one manufacturer, "and wrinkles of forty will give way to the pink skin of babyhood."

Translate that and insert it in a foreign paper and the unsophisticated reader will be tempted to try it, which, of course, is the purpose of the advertisement. When the same old wrinkles remain, a little softened perhaps but wrinkles still, the customer decides that Mr. American is a thirty-third degree liar.

An argument in modest, conservative language, in fact an understatement rather than an over-statement, is always preferable in advertising to the Englishman or to prospects in the English Colonial sections.

Any advertising that appears in Latin papers should be prepared originally in the simplest and most conservative English that can be easily understood and not readily misinterpreted.

Many of our figures of speech which we use to good advantage in our domestic advertising cannot be properly interpreted into French, Spanish and Portuguese, and when such arguments are translated into these Latin languages they appear ridiculous.

WHEN IN ROME, ETC.

It is often hard for the American business man who has not given attention to foreign advertising to recognize as good practice the methods and types of advertising which prevail abroad.

I have placed advertising in native Chinese papers where I have had to take for granted that the voucher copies submitted contained something which had a faint resemblance to the original copy sent. This situation will naturally be rapidly improved as our business relations with the Orient increase.

I have seen perfectly good copy garbled and finally printed in a condition which had but little resemblance to the original, when such a condition could have been avoided had the proper steps been taken at this end to supply that copy in electrotyped form.

I have had designs prepared and used in Russian papers which to the casual observer bore no resemblance to the original, in fact looked more like the carvings of an Egyptian hieroglyphic artist than a sane advertisement, yet the results obtained proved that the methods used were the best for that territory.

I have had experiences with various sizes and types of advertisements placed in Latin-American publications which have led me to realize that the life of a foreign advertising man is a rocky road but one which is full of real romance when he is able to look beyond the drudgery and extra care necessary in handling all details and can see as a result of his efforts the success in well earned prestige and profits which comes to the wide-awake progressive Americans who have the right kinds of goods to sell and advertise them properly in local mediums abroad.

CHICAGO MAYOR'S ALLY RUN OUT OF AURORA.

William Stocker, a cement contractor of Chicago, has been ordered out of Aurora, Ill., because he has been circulating in Aurora a weekly newspaper published in Chicago which is said to have the backing of Chicago's mayor, William Hale Thompson.

The order of the committee to stop circulating the paper was accompanied by a warning to Stocker not to return. Stocker promised to quit his activities and leave after explaining that he was not being paid for the work, but was circulating the paper because of his friendship for Mayor Thompson.

One paragraph in the paper which aroused indignation read: "All you have to do is to get Congress to declare war, hogtie the newspapers, muzzle the people, conscript an army, make the President one of these here 'pooh-bahs,' and then it will be 'King Woodrow'."

NEW YONKERS EDITOR.

John J. Nutt has become associate editor of the Yonkers (N. Y.) Statesman, succeeding the late Edmund Cecil Hubbell. For several years he has been managing editor of the Record & Guide, New York, a real estate and building paper and prior to that was for ten years associate editor of the Newburg (N. Y.) Daily News. He was at one time city editor of the Kingston (N. Y.) Freeman and is well known in civic and editorial circles in New York and along the Hudson Valley.

SAFE AND SANE IN JERSEY.

Progress along lines down by his predecessors in office is the program of W. A. Sweeney, editor of the Red Bank Standard and the new president of the New Jersey Press Association. Practical programs will be discussed both at the mid-winter meeting and at the editorial outing in the summer and the legislative committee will keep a sharp eye on the state house at Trenton for statutes affecting the newspaper business.

W. A. SWEENEY.

Mr. Sweeney has been a newspaper man for over twenty-five years, starting at the case when he was twelve years old. He says he had to stand on a plate box of the American Press Association to reach the case, but he stuck to it and stretched both limbs and brain. He became local editor of the Atlantic Highlands (N. J.) Journal before he was twenty-one and then spent nine years on the staff of the Red Bank Register before becoming editor and owner of the Red Bank Standard.

WHY A NEWSPAPER NEEDS A SERVICE DEPARTMENT.

PUBLISHER SHOULD AID ADVERTISER TO SELL HIS GOODS, FOR GOOD BUSINESS AND PROTECTION.

BY W. J. MERRILL,

Western Advertising Representative, Chicago Tribune.

Starting from an almost indefinable and vague something that has been hammering at the door seeking recognition for a number of years, "service for advertisers" has at least reached a point where it is one of the most important questions confronting newspaper publishers today.

For the purpose of getting the principles involved in the maintenance and operation of a service department clearly stated I want to briefly go into the fundamentals, or the why, of such a department.

We have had a great many talks with newspaper publishers from all parts of the United States. They have come into our office in an attitude ranging from the man seeking advice and information to one man who actually demanded an explanation for starting something that he claimed was making it harder than ever to secure business. We consider both of these extremes as a compliment.

The first one is obvious.

The other one we are more proud of than almost any experience that has come to us.

This man's attitude convinced us more than any other one thing that the principles we, at the Chicago Tribune, believed in as applied to newspaper service were somewhere near the right direction for the good of newspaper advertising and its establishment where it belongs at the head of a long list of advertising mediums.

Personally, I do not believe that the service rendered by any publisher should be extended with the feeling that it is something advertisers demand, or that the publisher has been forced to give. Theoretically a publisher has carried out to completion his share of the bargain when he has furnished advertising space in a paper that has a good clean circulation at a price commensurate with the number of its readers. Therefore, service as it is understood today in connection with newspapers, is not an additional quantity that the publisher must throw in for good measure.

However the right kind of service—a constructive service—is a matter of good business for any newspaper publisher. There are at least two reasons why this is so.

First, as a matter of self-protection to the publisher himself, and,

Second, for the purpose of increasing business.

If you will analyze these two reasons you will find that service should be rendered, for the good of the publisher, and for him alone—not because the advertiser demands it. And furthermore, if service is rendered with this idea in mind the publisher will find that the unreasonable demands now made upon him, which in most cases simply mean cutting rates, will be eliminated entirely.

SERVICE AS SELF-PROTECTION.

There is a disposition on the part of advertisers and advertising agents that has become so apparent that it can almost be expressed in the form of an axiom.

It is that newspapers are judged by their failures and not by their successes. There is not a man who does not sincerely believe that the publication he represents will produce returns proportionate with the cost of space for any advertiser whose business he will accept.

However, in cases of failure nine times out of ten, the advertiser places the blame for the failure of his advertising campaign upon that publication carrying his business. He overlooks the fact that in the majority of cases, the actual blame for the failure of the campaign is solely the fault of his own organization.

One of the most common causes for failure is the lack of proper distribution of the product being advertised; or it may be that the article offered for sale is not delivered to the consumer in such shape that it will give satisfaction; again it may be that the article advertised does not offer a fair margin of profit to the jobbing and retail trade; or it may be that the manufacturer has not made adequate arrangements to get his product into the hands of the retail trade by the time that the demand is created through advertising.

These are but a few of the many items that go to make the success or failure of an advertising campaign. And yet, regardless of whether the blame be placed upon the failure of the manufacturer to sufficiently provide for any one of these causes, he still is of the opinion that the publication used to carry his advertising has not produced results.

Now, I realize that the average publisher will find it hard to understand just why he should pay any attention to problems such as these, which, by all that is right, should be the concern of the manufacturer and his advertising agency.

Yet these conditions do exist and I venture to say that, if you were to investigate to determine the reason for the failure of a campaign in any publication, you would find it to be traceable directly to some cause other than the failure of the advertising itself to produce results.

Therefore, it is true that newspapers are judged by their failures and not by their successes and that it is the attitude of advertisers that the newspaper is to blame for failure to produce regardless of the circumstances, then it strikes me that one of the first and most important reasons for service to advertisers is a matter of self protection for the newspaper publishers.

If we believe that our paper will produce results if properly used, in other words, given an opportunity to produce, then obviously it is up to us to see that it is used right.

SERVICE FOR INCREASING BUSINESS.

And here is the second reason for service to advertisers. One of the biggest fields from which to secure advertising income increases, is from national advertising. All of us know that the one best way for a manufacturer to gain a 100 per cent consumer attention and 100 per cent distribution for his product in a given city, is by the use of newspaper advertising space.

Unfortunately however, not all manufacturers believe as we do. Therefore, in order to develop increased business in the foreign field, it is necessary to convince manufacturers and their advertising agents.

The publisher's representative, when he goes out to sell space, must be in a position to talk intelligently to manufacturers about the market and conditions in the market to the end that he will be able to give an absolute and conclusive reason why his particular newspaper can produce results for that manufacturer.

He should be able to talk intelligently about the number of people of the class there are in his market that can afford to buy the product.

He should be able to talk intelligently about retail and jobbing conditions.

He should be able to give a fairly good summary of what the competition will be.

He should be well equipped to demonstrate to manufacturers just how much circulation he has in the market and how thoroughly it covers the class of people that can be expected to buy the product under consideration. In other words, he should know his business.

And how is this representative going to know his business? Why, it is simply by having a service department available, whether it consists of one man or twenty-five men that all analyze the market and equip him with all the necessary information that he may go out and intelligently present not only his market, but his newspaper.

Newspaper publishers have too long failed to grasp the situation. Other advertising media have noted the inclination on the part of manufacturers and their advertising agents to eliminate the "hot air" and "blue sky" that has heretofore been used in connection with the selling of advertising space.

As I see it, it is simply up to newspaper publishers to determine whether or not they want to carry national advertising. If they do, then I believe it is high time they were adopting and putting into force good, sound businesslike methods. I know of no other system or efficiency method that would produce greater results in return for the investment than a properly organized and handled service department.

The more newspapers there are in this country who are rendering an intelligent and constructive service, the better off we will all be and the sooner newspapers will occupy beyond all question of a doubt first place in the minds of advertisers.

I have given what I call the two major reasons why the newspaper publisher should render service to advertisers. Both of the reasons advanced are in reality exactly the same thing, and that is because it is good business.

And now to get down to the discussion of maintenance and operation. I believe all realize that the operation of a service department for a newspaper in a city like New York, Philadelphia, or Chicago, would not be the same as that required for a newspaper in cities like Peoria, Ill.,

BOOKS USEFUL TO EDITORS AND ADVERTISERS.

"QUESTIONS IN TYPEWRITING, BUSINESS ENGLISH AND OFFICE PRACTICE," by Isaac Price, A. M.; Hinds, Hayden & Eldredge, Inc., publisher.

The Progressive Series of Regents Question and Answer Books furnishes abundant material for drill, test and review of various subjects required in civil service, college and regents examinations. This particular number should be particularly valuable as a brief text-book in the training of clerical office organizations.

"TWENTIETH CENTURY BOOK-KEEPING AND ACCOUNTING," by James W. Baker; Southwestern Publishing Company, publisher.

A treatise on modern bookkeeping, accounting and business systems. Proper practice work is suggested for the application of the principles presented. The student is primarily considered in the preparation of this text.

"HOW TO USE A LIBRARY," by Louise Connolly; Elm Tree Press, publisher.

"A course of study for those who wish instruction that will help them to help themselves, their pupils or their children." This statement by the author indicates only a part of the broad field of usefulness for this manual. Utilization of library facilities as a source of modern commercial information is rapidly developing, and business organizations can well afford to investigate the possibilities of adding to their staff the local library.

"STABILIZING INDUSTRIAL EMPLOYMENT," published by the American Academy of Political & Social Science.

The annals have always been well edited and representative of the aims and ideals of the academy. This particular number (May, 1917) is in our opinion the most notable contribution yet made to the technique and methods of the new science of labor standardization, and should be carefully studied by all employers of labor in order that the increasing complexity of the war-time employment situation should not find them lacking in a knowledge of the fundamental factors of personnel betterment.

"THE SOCIOLOGY OF RURAL LIFE," published for the American Sociological Society by the University of Chicago Press.

Includes the papers and proceedings of the eleventh annual meeting of the American Sociological Society. The general subject for this meeting is discussed from every viewpoint by those who represent the scholarly and scientific attitude toward social problems.

"WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION," by J. E. Rhodes. 2d; Macmillan Company, publisher.

A brief history of the Workmen's Compensation movement in this country, and an outline of the principles on which the system is based. Copious references to the literature of this movement are given so that the student of the subject who desires to make a deeper study has the references given him for that study. The digest of the present laws in force in each state gives the book an added reference value.

"MONEY—WHAT IT IS AND HOW TO USE IT," by William R. Hayward; Houghton Mifflin Company, publisher.

One of the reasons why this book has been written is to help young people to become thrifty. The explanations are direct and simple, and by means of a sufficient connection of the subject with history and economics the volume is made of a wider interest than any mere business compendium.

"HOW TO LIVE ON THREE MEALS A DAY," by R. L. Alsaker, M. D.; Frank Morrison, publisher.

A book of food facts showing in a common-sense way how to reduce the cost of good food and increase the pleasure and profit of eating.

"THE HUMAN SIDE OF BUSINESS," by Frederick Pierce; Frederick Pierce & Co., publisher.

The ideas outlined portray a phase of business that from a practical point of view is as important as any of the others. It is the human side—and is discussed without needless theorizing. While the book falls short as a literary work, it is based upon broad experience and on that account may help to supply an existing deficiency.

"FUNDAMENTALS OF NAVAL SERVICE," by Commander Yates Sterling, U.S.N.; J. B. Lippincott Company, publisher.

"Fundamentals of Naval Service" has been prepared to serve as a manual to those of our citizens who are interested in the United States Navy and who may choose to serve their country on the water. An excellent bibliography is added, furnishing a means to those who desire to add to the foundation work which can be completed by careful study of this excellent handbook.

"EGGS IN A THOUSAND WAYS," by Adolph Meyer; John Witty, publisher.

This recipe book presents in condensed form, but easily worked out form, a multitudinous manner of ways of preparing and serving eggs.

"OUR FLAG AND ITS MESSAGE," by Major James A. Moss, U.S.A., and Major M. B. Stewart, U.S.A.; J. B. Lippincott Company, publisher.

In a most appealing manner have the authors and publishers combined their efforts in producing this message to patriotic Americans. It gives the history of our flag and includes the text of President Wilson's message to the American people. All the profits of the sale of this book are devoted to the American Red Cross.

"THE FILING DEPARTMENT," by J. Arthur Cramer; Bankers Publishing Company, publisher.

This work is not addressed to the file clerk exclusively, but rather to all who have anything whatsoever to do with correspondence. The subject matter is based on a study of bank correspondence, but the reader will find an application to general correspondence.

"FOOD FOR THE WORKER," by Frances Stern and Gertrude T. Spitz; Whitecomb & Barrows, publishers.

The authors have prepared menus for seven weeks, with tested recipes giving food values and costs for the dishes included in the menus. A food price index brings the cost figures up to date.

"OUTLINES OF ENGLISH AND AMERICAN LITERATURE," by William J. Long; Ginn & Co., publishers.

Gives a brief, clear-cut presentation of the great men, the great books and the great periods of our literature.

"RETAIL BUYING," by Clifton C. Field; Harper & Bros., publishers.

A thoroughly practical book on a subject which has not received adequate attention. The author has a wide experience and competently discusses modern principles and practice in both country and city stores.

"FORM CONCRETE," by K. J. T. Ekblaw, M. S., M. E.; Macmillan Company, publisher.

In the preparation of this manual on form concrete the writer has endeavored to treat this particular phase of the subject in a simple, non-technical, and at the same time a reasonably comprehensive manner, so that a study of it will lead to a clear understanding of actual requirements for successful work. The most inexperienced layman will find clear guidance for the production of satisfactory results in concrete construction.

"THE HEALTHFUL HOUSE," by Lionel Robertson and T. C. O'Donnell; Good Health Publishing Company, publisher.

"A house that gives the body all the fresh air that is needed, that provides for the right temperature and that reduces labor to a minimum; a house that will keep the mind tranquil and rested without jarring on one's feeling for the beautiful—here is the healthful house." To teach the reader how to attain this ideal is the aim of the authors. To those who are contemplating building, buying or decorating homes the book is an informative store of useful knowledge.

"OUT WHERE THE WEST BEGINS," by Arthur Chapman; Houghton, Mifflin Company, publishers.

Genuine songs of the West are these. They sing of the homely and simple—noisy and happy characters—a type fast disappearing from the old "cow country." But the hills are not changed—the plains are not changed—and these verses will bring to many the fascination and charm of the land "where the West begins."

"HANDBOOK OF LABOR LAWS OF NEW YORK," compiled by Katherine Anthony for the Brooklyn Auxiliary of the Consumers' League of the city of New York.

The purpose of this handbook is to give a summary, relatively complete and comparatively brief, of the Industrial Laws of New York State. Only those whose work has been hampered by the lack of such a compilation will appreciate how admirably this clearly written and well indexed book fulfills a definite requirement of New York State employers of labor.

"THE CANDY COOK BOOK," by Alice Bradley; Little, Brown & Co., publishers.

However little interest one may possess in the "gentle art of cookery," this one branch of the science, at least, appeals to every person with a sweet tooth. The recipes are wholesome and the directions are so clear that the veriest amateur may be confident of obtaining good results.

"THE MORALS OF MONOPOLY AND COMPETITION," by Homer Blosser Reed, Ph.D.; George Banta Publishing Company, publisher.

The Federal Trade Commission Act distinctly forbids "unfair methods of competition," but fails to define and limit the term. The ensuing interest is responsible for a new study, and this essay is a part of the meagre literature on the subject.

"KITCHENETTE COOKERY," by Anna Merritt East; Little, Brown & Co., publishers.

The results of what appears to have started as an interesting experiment in kitchenette operation are herein detailed by a former new housekeeping editor of the Ladies' Home Journal.

"THE ENGLISH SPEAKING PEOPLES," by George Louis Beer; Macmillan Company, publisher.

The qualities of Mr. Beer's work—the painstaking care, the scholarly presentation and the vigorous conviction—have brought to him recognition as one of the authoritative historians of our country in pre-revolutionary days. These same qualities are apparent in this latest essay, proposing a cooperative democratic alliance of all the English-speaking people and championing the proposal brilliantly and convincingly. Perhaps Mr. Beer has only taken us part of the way in hopeful prophecy of the world policy after the war. But the prophecy is appealing—and that alone would recommend this book to those who are interested in the future vital diplomatic and commercial relations of the world powers.

"THE PHYSIOLOGY OF FOOD AND ECONOMY IN DIET," by W. M. Bayliss; Longmans, Green & Co., publishers.

This little manual has arisen from a course of public lectures given at University College, London, and serves the admirable purpose of explaining the essential facts of the science of nutrition—in a simple and elementary manner. Special note must be made of an accurate and unemotional discussion of the food value of alcohol.

"SUCCESS IN THE SUBURBS," by John R. McMahon; G. P. Putnam's Sons, publishers.

In these times, when "a square foot of garden may mean a bouquet of carfare," and when every suburbanite is finding a profitable pleasure in developing the self-supporting features of his house—surrounding plot of ground, it seems timely that a book appears on this new subject.

"THE BOOK OF SAUCES," by C. Herman Senn; John Willy, publishers.

Contains more recipes for sauces, and probably more information of a general nature regarding their use than has ever before been gathered in a single volume.

"THE HOME VEGETABLE GARDEN," by Adolphe Krubm; Orange Judd Company, publisher.

Neither too technical nor too theoretical, this little handbook aims to convert would-be gardeners into true gardeners and to interest others in the subject of home gardens. The years of experience of the author well fit him to be a splendid adviser in vegetable culture.

"THE VALUE OF MONEY," by B. M. Anderson, Jr., Ph.D.; Macmillan Company, publisher.

The author's treatment of this abstract branch of economics is the result of investigations which have run through a good many years. Primarily an advanced treatise developing the economic beliefs of the author it is not without a wider value, and should interest bankers and business men who are interested in the general problems of money, trade, speculation and credit.

"A THOUSAND WAYS TO PLEASE A HUSBAND," by Louise Bennett Weaver and Helen Cowles Le Cron; Britton Publishing Company, publisher.

A novel attempt to get away from the stereotyped method of compiling a cook-book. It should be well worth while for the woman who has to puzzle over the culinary problems of a small family.

"THE PRACTICAL COOK BOOK," by Margaret W. Howard; Ginn & Co., publishers.

Household economy is so much more important in these food conservation days of war times that this book of tested and economical recipes will be welcomed by those endeavoring to reduce and eliminate the needless food wastes.

NEWS PRINT INDULGENCE A BLOW TO PUBLISHERS.

EDITOR THE FOURTH ESTATE.

SIR: Since the beginning of the present war the spirit of conflict has been generally manifest. The controversy which has been so prominent between the newspaper publishers and the manufacturers of news print almost reaches a point of open strife.

The existing state of affairs is certainly, from several viewpoints, greatly to be regretted. To my mind, however, the present stand upon the part of the manufacturers of news print is very largely due to the over-anxiety on the part, or I might say, over-progressiveness upon the part of the newspaper publishers of the United States and other countries. Especially is this true of the newspaper publishers of the United States.

The germ of circulation volume entered the "progressive thought" of publishers years ago. This germ was generally productive, the result being bigger newspapers for the reading public and an almost universal reduction in price.

The outcome of this magnanimous effort of the newspaper publishers was a general developing of daily reading interest, a point which is to be highly commended and which has undoubtedly had an uplifting tendency.

But, in the long run, as time progressed and the demand for the daily newspaper increased, it opened the way to the manufacturers of news print to stimulate prices, which they have undoubtedly done.

A few years ago a newspaper publisher could shop before closing his contract for his news print supply.

The mills wanted the business, every one needed his contract and figured on it. I bought news print, during my management of the New York Morning Journal, at the bed rock price and paid my newspaper bills upon a weight production plan.

That is, the paper had to produce the number of sheets contracted for, according to weight, or a deduction for over-weight was made.

Now the mills have the upper hand and the publishers, the knowledge that to their over-desire for circulation, is due the present condition. A general combined move upon the part of the newspaper publishers should be made to increase the selling price and at the same time reduce the size of newspapers.

The movement towards the increase in the price of the daily newspaper has become general. In most all of the large cities the price of the daily has been increased. This has been done most advantageously.

Naturally increasing the price of newspapers will necessitate a falling off in point of circulation. This falling off, however, will not lessen, but should strengthen, the selling force of the newspaper to advertisers. The increase in price eliminating "circulation duplication" will bring about a TWO—Aug. 6 thorough concentration of reading thought upon the preferable newspaper.

If a strong "sane circulation desire" wave would thoroughly sweep the country, duplication would stop, the demand would be rational. This result accomplished, newspaper publishers would again enjoy the feeling of walking on firmer ground.

Facing the situation as it now presents itself, taking into careful consideration the increase in the second class postage rate, it certainly looks like a financial necessity, not only to increase the selling price of newspapers but to economize as largely as possible in the use of news print.

Rigid methods upon the combined part of the publishers, to curtail the use of news print, which can certainly be accomplished without detracting from the news quality or selling power value of the newspaper—should be recognized as a business debt due the newspaper property, a debt which if fully and justly liquidated will place all newspaper properties upon a sound financial working basis.

SIR: If we must submit to censorship of news, why not have a news man at the head of the censorship board? George Creel is all right, but without experience in the handling of news as news.

If he is to be succeeded, as now seems possible, why not have him succeeded by such a man as Chester S. Lord, former managing editor of the New York Sun. He would meet every requirement and I am sure his nomination for the place will be endorsed by every newspaper man in the country, including Secretary Daniels.

HOW TROOPS WILL GET THEIR MAIL.

POST OFFICE ISSUES RULES ON ACCEPTABLE MATTER AND ADDRESSING.

The Post Office has issued the following rules regarding mails to and from American troops in foreign service.

Letters, newspapers and parcels may be sent at the domestic rates of postage to all soldiers and civilians connected with the American expeditionary forces in Europe. Parcel post will be sent at the eighth zone rate of 12 cents a pound, with a maximum weight limit of 20 pounds. This applies only to ordinary parcel post, not C. O. D., insured or registered parcels being handled. Every parcel post package must bear the sender's name and address, and postage must be fully prepaid.

Letters, papers and parcels should be addressed as shown below, and under no circumstances should the location or station of the unit, or the country of destination, be included in the address.

From:
Mrs. John Smith,
Blank Street,
New York, N. Y.

JOHN SMITH, JR.,
Co. X, Infantry,
American Expeditionary Forces

"Money orders may be sent at domestic rates.

"No money or valuables can be sent by registered mail.

"The domestic rate of postage will apply on all letters from soldiers abroad engaged in the present war. Such postage may be paid by the soldier at field post office, or the postage will be collected from the recipient of the letter in this country at the single domestic rate, if not prepaid abroad.

"Publications bearing the following official authorization:

NOTICE TO READER

When you finish reading this magazine place a 1-cent stamp on this notice, hand same to any postal employee, and it will be placed in the hands of our soldiers or sailors at the front.

No wrapping no address.

can be mailed at any post office, unaddressed and unwrapped, by simply placing a 1-cent stamp on the magazine, regardless of its weight. Only magazines bearing the official notice and not addressed to any individual can receive this mailing privilege."

EVENING POST STAFF GIVES RED CROSS A KITCHEN.

The employees of the New York Evening Post have hit upon a new way of showing their patriotism. They have presented to the American Red Cross Society an equipment which is the latest word in ingenuity. It is a kitchen trailer, devised to meet the difficult problems of feeding ambulance sections in the field. It was designed by the New York Chapter of the Red Cross in consultation with its engineer and the manufacturer.

Recently tested by the United States Army Ambulance Corps at Allentown, Pa., where 4,000 men and 2,000 ambulances have been organized for service in France, a model of the trailer has been thoroughly endorsed by military officials.

The kitchen contains an oven with three double bake pans, two ten-gallon containers and one twenty-gallon container for soup, stew and coffee; steel lockers for cook's supplies; drawers for kitchen utensils; a folding service table and a canvas top.

It is drawn by one of the ambulances or trucks. Food may be cooked en route. In camp the canvas sides form a complete weather-tight tent large enough for the cooks to work in and to allow the line of men receiving food to pass through.

The Evening Post employees, who recently subscribed $1,100 to buy an ambulance for the Red Cross, readily changed their plan when it was suggested that the kitchen trailer was more urgently needed. It was said that more ambulances had been offered than could be used. It was the unanimous sentiment of the men and women whose daily work makes the Evening Post that their money should be used to supply an actual need.

GERARD STORY TO BE SYNDICATED.

PUBLIC LEDGER SERIAL FOR EAST AND MIDDLE WEST AFTER SEPT. 16.

When the Philadelphia Public Ledger announced in a full page advertisement in THE FOURTH ESTATE on July 28 that it had secured the rights to the story of Ambassador Gerard's four years in Germany, it made no reference to sharing the story with other newspapers through the Ledger Syndicate, and after the appearance of the first few installments with their startling revelations, inquiries as to syndicate possibilities began to deluge the Ledger office.

Finally Cyrus H. K. Curtis this week answered the demand by authorizing John Elfreth Watkins, general manager of the Ledger Syndicate, to release the serial beginning September 16 in the Eastern and Middle Western states, which have hitherto been kept closed for the Public Ledger during its lease of the story.

T. C. M. A. MEETING IN BEAUMONT.

LOUISIANA CIRCULATORS IN PARTY MUCH BUSINESS TRANSACTED

Circulation managers from Texas and Louisiana are in attendance at the annual meeting of the Texas Circulation Managers Association which convened in Beaumont on August 16. While a number of the delegates failed to arrive in time for the initial session and some of the more important subjects were laid over for a day, the interest of those present in the subjects under discussion was manifest.

Instead of the usual long speeches by individual members the convention this year is being conducted on the round table discussion plan and every member is given an opportunity to express himself on the matter under consideration. A court stenographer has been employed to take down the discussions and each member will be furnished a copy of the proceedings of the convention.

Thursday morning and part of the afternoon was taken up in conducting the discussions. The election of officers and the next meeting place were selected on Friday afternoon in time to take the visitors for an automobile ride over the city before time for their trains to depart.

The entertainment committee, composed of R. B. Kinard, Beaumont Enterprise, chairman; B. C. Schroefer, Galveston News; T. N. Smisson, Houston Post; and J. L. Mapes of the Beaumont Enterprise, arranged to take the visiting circulators for a trip down the river to Port Arthur, but in view of the fact that some of the members failed to arrive the trip was made in autos.

The party was taken for an automobile ride over Port Arthur and were the guests of the committee at a banquet at the Hotel Plaza.

Entertainment features of the program have been cut short in view of the large amount of business to be transacted in a comparatively short time.

ROBISCHON & PECKHAM ASK DEALERS AND ACHIEVE SUCCESS IN BOOK OF ADS FOR LOCAL USE.

BY W. LIVINGSTON LARNED.

Robischon & Peckham believe in newspaper advertising. They are manufacturers of underwear for men, women and children and as the distribution of this underwear is nation-wide, the volume of newspaper publicity employed is amazingly large.

Their line, as selling agents, is known as "Globe Underwear." The garments are cut in a distinctive way, have patented features and possess any number of legitimate "talking points." It would seem a very easy matter, therefore, to advertise "Globe Underwear," since so many claims can be made for it that cannot be made for other lines.

Working on this principle, Robischon & Peckham have produced campaign after campaign for newspaper purposes for dealers in large cities and in small towns. The course of procedure has not differed materially from the scheme used by others. Once a year a handsome book is sent broadcast, containing reproductions of as many as one hundred different illustrated advertisements. These are pictured in sizes ranging from single column to four and five-column space.

The advertising manager of a department store can glance through this book and select what seems to fit his particular needs. If a pictorial idea shown in four-column size is too large, there is a reproduction of it as it will appear in single or double. All he has to do is to check up his needs in the book according to form numbers, send one of the postcards attached to the back cover and the cuts ready for use are immediately shipped to him.

TELLING THE DEALER HOW TO USE ADS.

If he happens to be a small-town merchant, the benefit accruing is obvious. He may secure the very best art work, convincing copy and ingenious ideas at practically no cost. Such a service could not be obtained locally.

These books, issued through past seasons, were prepared with infinite pains. They represented the most efficient form of modern advertising, notwithstanding which their use was not as general as Robischon & Peckham desired. Such service merited the enthusiastic support of the dealer. And while thousands of cuts were used, it was not one of those smashing successes that should be the reward of a serious effort.

Robischon & Peckham figured that dealers should express the greatest enthusiasm and really take full advantage of the magnanimous offer. So this year, when the time had arrived for issuing a new book and a new series of illustrated advertisements, the suggestion was made that some preliminary scouting be done.

The dealer was to be asked what, in his opinion, constituted the ideal Globe ad service. What type of picture appealed to him most? Should the patent features of the underwear be exploited to a greater degree? Were straight unembellished cuts of people in the garments, desirable? How much copy should be employed? What were the defects of past campaigns?

In point of fact, the issue was put straight to the dealer—you have not used these cuts as freely as we had expected. What was wrong with them? How can they be improved? What type of ad will you run?

The response was almost a hundred per cent. The dealers cheerfully answered this form letter and in less than one month's time those responsible for Globe advertising were in possession of enough first hand educational matter to not only open their eyes but to make the coming task far easier. With these letters in front of them, both artist and copywriter could work hand in hand with the little department store ad manager of the country town and the big fellow of the larger cities.

And so it came about that in preparing their Globe Advertising Service Book for 1917 and 1918 Robischon & Peckham had the invaluable personal assistance of an imposing army of dealers who handled the line and who could be expected to put into circulation in newspapers all over the country the aggressive broadside. At this point it will be instructive to read one of the earlier specifications that was written by the man who devised the book. He says:

"It is highly important that we have a definite idea of the specific business reasons underlying the campaign. Pretty much all underwear advertising is painfully alike—just figures in underwear, sometimes in action—sometimes not.

"The success of a campaign depends upon the willingness of the average dealer to use it in its entirety. More and more the tendency on the part of the dealer is against the conventional type of service cut, where one product monopolizes the entire space. The service cut that is really used today is the one where the illustration permits of exploiting the fact that other lines are sold in the store. In preparing these ads for Globe we have figured on the following points:

All scenes will be located actually in stores, and will show store activity. Goods will be shown passing over the counter.

In almost every ad alert, intelligent sales people will be pictured. We believe the dealer will look favorably upon the idea of telling the public that his employees are of this type.

The underwear department of average stores will be pictured.

In each ad there will be an intelligent suggestion of store backgrounds and other activities than the selling of underwear.

In both men and women we will introduce well garbed, stylish figures. Globe Underwear is tailor-made and tailor fitted and we fully appreciate the need of showing customers that are in vogue.

In every ad the exclusive features of the garment are being explained.

Heretofore, some of the diagram figures of men and women in underwear—especially the men—have been rather objectionable in poses and postures. In this series we will show underwear figures but always on counter cards.

In relation to the above paragraph we would like to suggest that the Globe people actually get out a series of these simple counter cards. It isn't necessary, but it would be a wise thing to do.

The garments themselves to appear in every ad—in the box, arranged on counter, or being critically examined by customer or explained by sales people.

"In some of the large space ads six of the individual cuts can be grouped as a single unit. All of the designs are flexible—borders can be dispensed with entirely.

"Our contention is that the dealer will be pleased with such a series because it shows what might be his store—it shows the better class of customer—it shows an intelligent type of salesman—it shows the garment—it brings out the diagrammatic talking points and finally it gives a glimpse of another part of his store."

NO COMPROMISE—BUT HAPPY DEALERS.

Without sacrificing a single sales point, the new Globe book, with its ingenious ads, has made the dealer happy by the simplest of all expedients—a fair division of the space and the picture message to the public.

Entirely apart from the unique introduction of "Globe Underwear" every one of these advertisements shows a vista of the dealer's store. It may be only a suggestion, a hint, a little corner of this or that department, but the dealer himself sees in it a highly important item. It reflects credit upon him and upon his shop.

Silently and without ostentation, an atmosphere of refinement is thrown about that shop. The sales people are polite and affable and gracious and good to look upon. The public is very apt to gain the impression that it is pleasant to deal at these stores.

Every time a merchant runs one of these advertisements, he is indirectly giving publicity to his entire establishment and its personnel.

And he was not slow to discover these virtues in the campaign. He saw in the book a new tendency to divide up fifty-fifty. The ads were not literally reeking with the product. There was something besides underwear in them. And, be it understood, even the country merchant had grown to be highly particular. He can afford to be.

All manufacturers of consequence are sending out plated advertising matter. Much of it is gratis and a very fair share of it is skillfully done. Broadside after broadside is received. Boxes of utility printing arrive every week—everything from complete newspaper campaigns to window trim.

The hour has come with modern merchandising when the dealer has an opportunity to discriminate. He can pick and choose and discard as conditions seem to justify.

Here is a campaign that has succeeded—inevitably, surely, because it went back to first principles. If first consulted the dealer himself and then voluntarily divided the total space used, that the store itself might be extolled.

MOVIE NEWS WEEKLY NOT A LEGAL NEWSPAPER.

A long-standing question was settled this week in the New York Supreme Court when Justice Orndway ruled that a motion picture weekly, displaying current news events in pictures and words, is not a newspaper within the meaning of the law and therefore has not the newspaper protection of "privilege" in publishing its news pictures.

The decision was handed down in the suit of Mrs. Grace Humiston, the woman lawyer who solved the Ruth Cruger murder mystery, for an injunction to prevent the Universal Film Manufacturing Company from displaying her picture in its animated picture weekly, pending the trial of her action for $100,000 against the company.

In awarding the injunction, the court said:

"The fact that the defendant's films are photographs of actual current events and are called 'the Universal Animated Weekly,' and are produced and distributed weekly, and used as soon as possible after the occurrence of the events, does not make them a newspaper. Nor does it make them entitled to the protection extended to newspapers on which the defendant relies.

"The Supreme Court of the United States had recently to consider substantially the character of such a service in the case of the Mutual Film Corporation against the Industrial Commission of Ohio, where the question was involved of the constitutionality of a censorship of a service which included events of historical and current interest.

"The United States Supreme Court said: 'It cannot be put out of view that the exhibition of moving pictures is a business pure and simple, originated and conducted for profit, like other spectacles, not to be regarded or intended to be regarded by the Ohio constitution, as part of the press of the country, or as organs of public opinion.'

"The defendants are ex-plotting the plaintiff's name and picture in their business for profit, and even if they are incidentally disseminating information as to the current views of the day, the plaintiff has the right to object, and to an injunction against the continuation of such conduct."

BAD DEBTS AVOIDABLE IF ADVERTISING CONTRACTS ARE GUARANTEED—SOME LEGAL POINTS INVOLVED.

By EDMUND WALKER,
Chicago Herald Building.

A promise of one party to be responsible for the debt of another forms a contract of guaranty or, as it is sometimes called, warranty. The party guaranteeing the advertiser's account is the guarantor, and the promisee is the guarantee. The debtor is the principal.

Frequently you find it advisable to have an advertiser's account guaranteed by some other party whose credit is already established and it is advisable to have clearly in your mind the principles involved when executing a contract of this nature.

There are different kinds of guarantees and this difference is sometimes not fully appreciated until too late. Charles W. Gerstenberg sets out this difference very clearly:

"A guarantee of collection conditions the guarantor's liability on the creditor's inability to collect from the principal. A guaranty of payment imposes a liability on the guarantor to pay if the principal does not."

From the publisher's point of view the consideration for a contract of guaranty would be the acceptance of advertising copy and the extension of credit, providing that such guarantee was obtained before the advertising was carried.

But it is obvious that if the guarantee is obtained after the credit has been extended some specific consideration would of necessity have to be given. The consideration of agreeing not to enter suit is not a good consideration, and it is better to use the regular consideration clause in all such contracts.

When a guarantee is given without specifying distinctly time or amount it is assumed that the guarantee covers only the transaction which was then about to be performed. As in the majority of cases you will accept a guarantee which is intended to cover a series of advertisements, it is advisable to specifically so state.

It is also usual to mention the exact limit of the guarantor's liability, and when this amount has been reached you should always notify the guarantor in writing and obtain if possible an acknowledgment that he received such notification. It is not required by law that a guarantor be notified each month of the principal's liability, but, personally, I have made it a rule to mail each month a statement of the account to both the principal and the guarantor, and this will be found advisable.

CONTRACT CHANGE REVES GUARANTOR.

One of the most frequent mistakes made by publishers holding contracts of guaranty is that they will make an extension of the time limit set out in the contract of guaranty. This alteration of the contract—or any other alteration in the written contract—at once releases the guarantor from all liability and forces you to look to the principal only.

These main points now being understood, we will find it a good plan to have a special "printed" form of contract prepared. These forms should always be available and as soon as any advertiser states that he is willing to personally guarantee the account of a limited liability corporation, the execution of the printed contract is an easy matter.

Advertisers will sign a printed form quicker than a typewritten document. These guaranty contracts should be attached to the advertiser's contract, a notation made in the ledger so that two monthly statements will be mailed instead of one, and then filed alphabetically.

Advertising solicitors should be supplied with these printed contracts as well as their usual advertising contracts. Some publishers supply their advertising solicitors with a special form which they fill up and which is intended to assist the credit department.

It is an excellent plan and frequently the advertising solicitor can obtain information about an advertiser which would be inaccessible to the credit manager or any of the collectors.

Do not accept a note from an advertiser who is obtaining credit by virtue of a contract of guaranty unless special provision is made in the contract or unless the guarantor personally endorses the note, at the same time waiving protest and notice of protest.

Fewer bad debts would be made if this plan of obtaining guaranty contracts was adopted. I see no reason why the contract of guaranty should not be on the same sheet as the ordinary advertising contract and this would be executed "as a matter of form" with all incorporated companies.

NATIONAL BODY OF CITY EDITORS.

WOULD IMPROVE NEWSPAPERS BY EDUCATING NEWS EXECUTIVES.

By HASSAL T. SULLIVAN,
President National Association of City Editors.

The name "The National Association of City Editors," sounds quite pretentious. Indeed, it would be, if it were not for the fact that the title is about all there is to the national organization at present.

There are a few men, inspired with an earnest desire to improve American newspapers, who have visions of an organization as big as the name suggests.

This small band of enthusiasts consists of city editors, designated as officers of the national association at a meeting held in Indianapolis, over a year ago. When several states were represented and the heads of the three state associations.

Members of the state organizations are also connected with the national association, which is little more than a potentiality. The only work with which national officers are concerning themselves is the planting of state bodies where they do not exist.

When enough states have organized to bring their combined membership roster up to a thousand men, instead of about 200, then the national officers will call a national convention to adopt a constitution and place the association upon a working basis.

Then, and not until then, is it likely that the national organization will become an aggressive force in American journalism.

THE STATE ASSOCIATIONS.

What are these groups and who derives the benefit from them?

To answer the last half of the question first, the publisher receives benefits from the state associations out of all proportion to the encouragement which has been given by most of them.

This indifference on the publishers' part may be due to a misconception of the purposes which have prompted city editors to organize.

The associations have none of the features of a labor union. The desk men, although as a rule rather poorly paid, have assembled purely and solely for the purpose of discussing problems of gathering and handling news.

These discussions are often the means of opening the eyes of men on the smaller papers to broader news sources and to the possibilities for local features.

The round-table shop talk develops many ideas regarding makeup and invariably results in more carefully written, edited, headed and displayed news. This is exactly what the publisher wants. It makes his newspaper more readable and of greater value to his subscribers.

The city editor at the same time is improving his work and thereby increasing his chances for advancement into a larger field.

SOME ADVANTAGES.
